But previous experience of great electoral upheavals--1958, 1962 and 1968 in particular--remind us that, when a trend like the one we are now experiencing takes hold of the electorate, the most strongly established local situation can scarcely stem the wave of electoral feeling rising from the depths. This is particularly true when parliamentary elections follow in the wake of another election which has upset the established positions. This was especially the case in 1958 and 1962 when the parliamentary elections, very favorable to General de Gaulle, had been preceded in the first case by a referendum on the Constitution and in the second by a referendum on the election of the president by universal suffrage.

The alterations in the figures now produced by the instant photograph taken of voting intentions will come more from the redistribution of the intentions at present fixed on small parties which, in fact, will certainly not have candidates in all constitutencies. The 5 percent of votes for the extreme right should largely be transferred to the Union for a New Majority [UNM] and particularly to the RPR; this will not improve the right's total score but will be more "useful" to it in the first round. The ecologists will not obtain 7 percent of the votes at national level if they follow their intentions of only putting forward 75 candidates and are therefore absent from more than 80 percent of constitutencies. The absence of ecologist candidates should chiefly benefit the PS. The 2.5 percent of the votes for the Unified Socialist Party and the extreme left should remain generally safe, unless this section of opinion is moved to give an "expedient" vote to the PCF, as the change in voting intentions since our last opinion poll seems to suggest (PCF up 1; extreme left down 0.5). The passionate and determined campaign which Jacques Chirac will fight at the head of the UNM also must be reckoned with.

Despite all these reservations, I am still convinced that the left will win a large majority with a dominant Socialist parliamentary group in the next assembly. This is particularly the case, since in election opinion polls, political atmosphere indicators are as important if not more important than the voting intentions data. If the former contradict the latter, it is best to be cautious and wait for some sudden development. In 1978 for instance, on the eve of the parliamentary election, the left had 52 percent of voting intentions, but the majority of French people were hoping for a victory by the opposition camp and fearing a leftwing victory.

This isn't the case this time: 37 percent of the voters (42.5 percent of those expressing an opinion) want a PS-PCF leftwing majority, as against 23 percent (26.5 percent of those expressing an opinion) in favor of returning the outgoing UDF-RPR majority. Of course, that leaves the 27 (31 percent of those expressing an opinion) who would prefer a new alliance without the Communists. The number of these "centrist" voters is however down on the previous opinion poll (down 5). They will be all the more willing to bend to the constraints of left-right bipolarization since the PCF will be strongly dominated by the PS within the left.

The mood of the day is, therefore, undeniably in the left's favor. Although the Mauroy government is, strangely enough, viewed as politically more leftwing than expected, it enjoys initial confidence from 86 percent of Socialists, 77 percent of Communists and also from 29 to 30 percent of UDF-RPR voters.... The premier himself immediately has attained a level of popularity which is almost without precedent in the Fifth Republic's history: 67 percent of favorable opinions as against 16 percent of unfavorable opinions (favorable win by 51). Of the six leading figures mentioned in the opinion poll who are well-known enough for more than 80 percent of French people to have a positive or negative opinion of them, only Michel Rocard (positive opinions win by 53) is a little more popular than Pierre Mauroy.

Both come way ahead of the remnants of the former majority (Simone Veil: positive opinions win by 9); Jacques Chirac by 2; but for Jean Lecanuet negative opinions win by 16 and very far ahead of Georges Marchais (negative opinions win by 32).

When popularity is calculated on a different basis within the same political group, all the leftwing figures mentioned, aside from Georges Marchais, have a positive image and all the rightwing figures mentioned, aside from Simone Veil and Jacques Chirac, have a negative image. The wind has certainly changed.

PCF OFFICIALS GRANT TELEVISION INTERVIEWS

Georges Marchais

LD041049 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 1 Jun 81 p 3

[Report on French television Channel 2 interview with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais on 30 May]

[Text] The journalists first questions related to the assessment of the new government's action. The PCF secretary general first stressed that he would have "preferred us to be part of this government." Then pointing out that Pierre Mauroy team's final decisions are still not known, Georges Marchais stated: "During my election campaign, I constantly upheld the idea that, without waiting for the parliamentary election to be held, the government should take a series of short term social measures relating in particular to the minimum wage, family allowances, old age pensions, housing allowances and so forth. It seems that the government is moving in that direction. If this is the case, we certainly welcome it."

Georges Marchais recalled that he had met with the president, indicating that the latter had told him: "You didn't spare me, but then I didn't spare you."

Questioned on the "abandonment" of or "freeze" on the construction of the Plogoff nuclear power stations, Georges Marchais expressed the view that it is necessary to be cautious while awaiting a specific decision from the government. "You are fully aware of our position," he explained. "The Communists advocate concentrating not on nuclear power but on a broad distribution of energy sources. I think the project should have gone ahead," he said.... "The problem facing us is France's energy independence."

Georges Marchais explained that Brittany must increase its electricity production for its industrialization and then indicated: "France needs nuclear energy and it needs it in its different regions. It needs it in Britanny. As for the sites, we shall see what decisions are made."

Asked by the journalists whether the Communists "are changing," the PCF secretary general pointed out that, during the election campaign, he had always advocated three ideas: "A clear policy is necessary for moving toward change. Giscard had to be defeated to implement a new policy. I presented myself as the anti-Giscard candidate from the start."

"Second," he continued, "I constantly said that union is necessary. No party can aspire to govern alone. The leftwing parties will have to unite and a leftwing union government will have to be formed--a government in which the Communists are prepared to assume all their responsibilities.

"The third condition for change is for the workers and the people to be involved in change themselves.

"I therefore constantly gave priority to the question of Communist participation in the government," Georges Marchais continued. "We have always stated and are still firmly stating now that we are prepared to assume all our responsibilities in the French Government."

Pointing out that, without the 4.5 million Communist votes, the 10 May victory would have been impossible, Georges Marchais stressed that the PCF was "part of the presidential majority."

Permanent Policy of Union

Questioned on the composition of the Communist delegation which will meet the PS delegation on Tuesday, Georges Marchais indicated that no decision had yet been taken on the level at which the discussions would take place. "If it is necessary," he added, "I will be present wherever I am needed to discuss, negotiate and reach an agreement."

With regard to union and the possibility of an agreement between the PCF and the PS, "our policy," Georges Marchais said, "has been a permanent policy of union. We have striven to pursue it openly.... I say that there are bases for a very broad agreement between the PS and PCF on economic and social, democratic and foreign policy issues. In saying that, I'm not trying to conceal the fact that there are serious differences of opinion on some questions. But I am saying that there is a broad basis for reaching agreement to run the country's affairs together and to do so in the way in which the French people want, as they have just demonstrated in the presidential elections. The PCF is prepared to play a full part in the government and to share responsibility for implementing that policy."

Is there room for two leftwing parties in France, the PCF secretary general was asked. "History shows," he replied, "that it is precisely when these two parties have cooperated that progress has been made in the social, economic and democratic sphere--in the sphere of agreat policy of full independence."

Georges Marchais then pointed out that he had fought his campaign on the basis of a program comprising 131 proposals. "This program has become the party's general program," he indicated, "and at our last Central Committee meeting we adopted options for government action in the coming period.... It is clear that if we enter government with the PS, we must do so on the basis of an agreement for implementing a new policy together," the Communist leader continued. He explained that it is necessary to take into consideration the "new situation" created by Francois Mitterrand's election.

Stressing that the Communists have "government experience"--a reference to the liberation governments--George Marchais specified that, "when we have Communist ministers, they take part in government on the basis of government solidarity."

Questioned on the PCF's intentions on "long term" participation in the government, Georges Marchais stated: "If your question suggests that we would be prepared to give an agreement to or participate in the government for a short period and then abandon it in the near future if problems arise, my answer is "no!" That is not how Communists behave."

The PCF secretary general explained that the Afghanistan question should be the object of a "political solution."

French Brand of Socialism

"I think that it would be in our interest, without interfering in other people's affairs, to support the proposal which has made made by the Afghan Government for negotiations with Iran and Pakistan to reach an agreement guaranteeing Afghanistan's independence and noninterference in its internal affairs, and I hope that, on that basis, the Soviet troops will be withdrawn from Afghanistan."

Regarding nuclear missiles deployed in Europe, Georges Marchais said that, like Afghanistan, this question could not constitute an obstacle to agreement between the PCF and PS. He recalled the Communists' stances on the balance of forces and disarmament, mentioning in passing a recent book by [new French Defense Minister] Charles Hernu, in which he says that this balance exists in Europe.

The journalists returned to the question of change and Communist objectives. Georges Marchais stated: "I don't believe that the majority which elected Francois Mitterrand elected him to pursue a policy in the interests of the big employers. The French people have opted for change....

"If you think that the PCF has abandoned its nature since the presidential election, you are mistaken. Ours is a Communist Party whose objective is to one day build a socialist society in this country. We even drew up a strategy for that at our 22d and 23d congresses--a strategy for moving toward a French brand of socialist society. In other words, we don't intend to copy any model."

Realistic Party

Georges Marchais then continued: "We aren't abandoning our program. Quite the reverse, we have drawn up a number of options for government action which take account of the new situation. On the basis of the PS program and our options, I say that it is entirely possible to implement the new policy, and for our part we are prepared to do so.

"We are prepared to take part in the government. People are trying to suggest that, because the PCF didn't achieve good results, it will change. Ours is a communist party, a revolutionary party, and we want to build a socialist society. But ours is a realistic party. There has just been a presidential election. The French people have opted for a new policy...."

Turning to what is at stake in the parliamentary election, Georges Marchais stressed that the problem facing the leftwing parties wasn't to "take from each other" but to take from the right.

"I hope," he said, "not only for the reelection of our outgoing deputies but for us to win new deputies from the right. We can defeat outgoing rightwing deputies and, moreover, we must do so.... Finally, we want the PCF to increase its influence because we think that is has an important role to play in the country in alliance with the PS in implementing the new policy."

Guy Hermier

LD041041 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 29 May 81 p 3

[Report on French television channel 1 interview with PCF Politburo member Guy Hermier on 28 May]

[Text] PCF Politburo member and REVOLUTION editor Guy Hermier was the guest on French television channel 1's "Great Debate" program yesterday evening.

On the eve of the first contacts between the Socialists and Communists, Guy Hermier recalled the spirit in which the PCF is approaching these discussions and stressed the importance of the Communist vote on 14 and 21 June.

He stressed "our desire" to reach a political agreement, which is "necessary and desirable" for "defeating the right in the parliamentary election" and subsequently for forming a leftwing government with Communist ministers.

Indicating that we have entered "a new political situation" since 10 May, Guy Hermier recalled the essential part the Communists playedin the left's victory. Today, he stressed, the Communists are part of the presidential majority and they are "prepared to assume all their responsibilities, including government responsiblities."

Guy Hermier explained that the PCF "always had the objective of defeating Giscard d'Estaing, defeating the right and creating the conditions for change and union."

"We fought the entire presidential election campaign," he pointed out, "by explaining the conditions which must be created for change: A new policy, a union government with Communist ministers and the people's will."

"There is now," he added, "an opportunity to change the country's policy." In this connection, he forcefully pointed out that the Communist intention is to "successfully bring about change."

Questioned on the "polemic" between the PCF and PS before the presidential election, Guy Hermier explained that the press had concentrated exclusively on those statements by Georges Marchais during his campaign in which he criticized the PS, whereas the PCF secretary general devoted most of his time to explaining what conditions were necessary for defeating the right and for change. "We wanted a great democratic debate on the proposals put forward by the various parties. I am convinced," Guy Hermier said, "that our action contributed to Giscard d'Estaing's defeat."

Returning to the opportunities which were opened to the country on 10 May, Guy Hermier indicated that they are very great opportunities, that the Communists wanted to make every effort to take advantage of them while being aware that there were "obstacles and difficulties," that the employers resist change and that "all those who voted for Francois Mitterrand did not have the same viewpoint on what should be done to steer the country out of the crisis." Asserting once again that the Communist desire was to reach an agreement and a union government in which they would participated. Guy Hermier indicated that "should we not participate in government, we could not feel part of it, pledged to it or involved in it."

But, he added, "that doesn't mean that bills which we regard as positive would not have our support in the National Assembly." He recalled that this had always been the position adopted by the Communists, who voted for the bill on voluntary abortion, for instance, and for the right to vote at 18. But Guy Hermier was anxious to stress the fact that this is a hypothesis and that he thought an agreement would be reached and that there would be a union government in keeping with the wishes of millions of men and women who voted for that prospect on 10 May.

RPR CHAIRMAN OFFERS 'CHANGE WITHOUT UPHEAVAL'

LD041057 Paris LE FIGARO in French 1 Jun 81 pp 1,2

[Max Clos, Jacques Jacquet-Francillon and Charles Rebois interview with RPR Chairman Jacques Chirac: "The Veil Must Be Drawn Back"--date and place not given]

[Excerpts] Question: It is certainly too early to assess the new regime but Mr Mitterrand was elected 3 weeks ago and there are a number of alarming signs which cannot be ignored. For their part, the Socialists are saying: People predicted chaos and an apocalypse but there has been no such thing. What is your view of the situation?

Answer: Personally, I never predicted chaos or an apocalypse. But you certainly cannot say that nothing has happened.

First, right from 11 May, Mitterrand's election has led to very strong attacks on the franc whose value has been called into question on all the world's financial markets. To stem this trend, the Bank of France was forced to spend more than one-fourth of our currency reserves in little more than 2 weeks. At that rate, they will be exhausted by the beginning of July. That is the first observation to be made.

The Bank of France also was forced to increase its prime rate from 12 percent to 22 percent also to stem the loss of capital due to the distrust aroused throughout the world by the Socialists' arrival into power. This staggering rise in interest rates already is paralyzing investment by enterprises and individual spending and is preventing any revival of economic growth and hence will aggravate unemployment. This is the second observation to be made.

There is such anxiety, especially among small savers, that the stock exchange is falling to a considerable extent. The French people's heritage is being attacked and people are talking to us about encouraging saving. This is the third observation to be made.

With obvious electioneering intentions, the government is going to hastily decide on a massive increase in a whole series of benefits and allowances: minimum wage, family allowances, minimum old age pension, housing allowance and allowance for the handicapped. Who is going to bear the cost of these hasty decisions?

Will it be the enterprises? That would threaten their competitiveness, prevent exports, jeopardize jobs and increase prices. Will it be individuals? That would mean an increase in taxes and social contributions and, hence, an overall drop in purchasing power. This is the fourth observation to be made.

Just look at the record of the past 2 weeks. Without wishing to be a prophet of doom, I would like to point out here and now that, at this rate, we will have 2 million people unemployed before the end of the year, a 20 percent increase in prices and a Fr100 billion deficit in the budget and in social security.

Question: Some people think that if the Socialist president were to be faced with an assembly dominated by an opposition majority, the institutions would be endangered and France would be ungovernable. Is that your view?

Answer: The institutions certainly would not be in danger. They clearly attribute specific powers to the president, the premier, the government and the assembly. Each must be able to exercise them fully. Our Constitution doesn't state that the French people must always elect an assembly of the same political complexion as the president. If it did, we might as well stop holding parliamentary elections. Moreover, this is what Mitterrand himself wrote in virtually the same terms a few years ago.

As for the policy to be implemented, we are absolutely determined to bring about change. The French people want that and I proposed it during the presidential campaign. But we want change without upheaval and we are the only people who can ensure that. If we have a majority in the assembly, I am sure that the public authorities will be able to run in a harmonious way, provided there is an effort to reach mutual understanding and respect.

Our Change

Question: But what is this change which you are proposing?

Answer: What we are proposing to the country is to preserve the Fifth Republic's achievements in the political, institutional, diplomatic and military spheres. We also are proposing to go further toward strengthening our defense system and asserting our national independence. To do that, unlike the Socialist government, we don't need either time to think or to suspend our nuclear effort, even if only temporarily.

In the economic sphere, we want change, in other words, we think it is vital to revive production, particularly by tax relief on investment, because increasing production is the only way of paying for imports and reducing unemployment. Taxes must be reduced, whether it be tax on individuals by ending income tax for all taxpayers earning less than Fr5,000 per month and introducing 5 percent relief on all sections of income tax, and automatically index-linking income tax groups to prices. We also propose eliminating the labor tax, value added tax and tax on rights of succession on the transmission of the means of production in small and medium-sized enterprises.

State administration must be reformed by increased decentralization benefiting local councils and giving regional communities more power development, employment, education and cultural action.

There must be increased solidarity with families and old or handicapped people as I have done in Paris, and procedures for consultation and dialogue must be instituted, since without them, there is neither political nor economic democracy.

In the name of justice, the PS intends to make the state stronger and more omnipresent. For our part, we want to give the French people greater freedom and make France more fraternal.

Question: From the correspondence which we receive, we know that many of our readers attribute Mitterrand's victory to the quarrels which divided the majority. They are convinced that the parliamentary battle can be won if the majority forms a common front. This common front exists in theory. Does it exist in practice?

Answer: First, it isn't accurate to say that Mitterrand's victory is due to the divisions in the majority. There are deeper reasons connected in particular to the crisis which has undoubtedly been hitting France for several years. That is the essential reason.

But it is true, as your readers think, that unity among all those men and women who are attached to certain principles and rules for running society--I am thinking of the principles of freedom, initiative and responsibility—is now vital if we are to approach the parliamentary elections under good conditions. As you know I proposed this unity on the morning of 11 May to our UDF, national center of independents and radical partners, and we subscribed to it together.

This has enabled us to draw up a joint pact for a new majority and reach an election agreement comprising automatic standing down when there is more than one candidate but, above all, comprising a very large number of joint candidates in the first round. I believe that this agreement is a fairly good reflection of the aspirations of all French people who are attached to the values of freedom. And whatever has happened in the past, I believe that this unity will be really reflected in the votes cast by the voters for the new majority. That is why I am optimistic about the outcome of these elections.

Automatic Standing Down

Question: Will it be possible to maintain this unity after the election?

[Answer] It will be absolutely essential to do so. Of course, I hope that the Union for the New Majority will win the elections. Whatever happens, the dangers posed to our country by the Socialist plan mean that the political forces which we represent together and which are determined to uphold the ideas I mentioned before must remain fully united and show complete solidarity. I am sure that will be the case.

Question: Do you really believe that the outgoing majority can win the parliamentary elections on 14 and 21 June, as you maintain it can?

Answer: All Socialist experiments in Europe have been failures, particularly in Britain. That is why we are observing a swing away from Socialist objectives in almost all those countries. What a time for France to choose to adopt that path!

In fact, I believe that France hasn't suddenly become Socialist. The 10 May vote was dictated more by circumstances than by real support. I am convinced that the French people, who are attached to progress but reject any upheaval and who are sensible people, will express their will in the parliamentary elections. Yes to renewal, but no to adventure.

A new and important event took place on 10 May. I understand why this should have repercussions and why those repercussions should have made the French people confused and even anxious. But they must not give in. They must continue to have confidence and courage. It is more important than ever to reject illusions and build France's future on realities.

PREMIER CONCLUDES PRELIMINARY ECONOMIC TALKS

LD041125 Paris LE MONDE in French 3 Jun 81 p 38

[Text] The talks with the social partners, which Mauroy concluded early this Tuesday, 2 June, by meeting the Workers Force, the General Confederation of Managerial Personnel and the PMI [Small and Medium-Size Industries] took place, according to the Hotel Matignon, in "an atmosphere of mutual attention, responsibility and level-headedness and desire to succeed on all sides," including the employers' organizations.

However, while the CGT, French Democratic Confederation of Labor [CFDT] and the National Education Federation [FEN] expressed definite satisfaction after their meetings with the premier, the General Confederation of Small and Medium-size Enterprises [PME] and the National Council of French Employers [CNPF] seemed to have more reservations.

Speaking on the PME's behalf, Mr Bernasconi "warned" the government against "any new burden" which would prevent small and medium-size enterprises from making "their full and entire contribution" to employment. For his part, Mr Ceyrac, although he said that his conversation with Mauroy was "marked by great frankness," stressed that there could not be "social progress aside from that paid for by increased productivity."

"This government has started well," Mr Maire exclaimed as he left the Hotel Matignon. In the CFDT's view, "the first indications and measures are good: suspension of the expulsion of immigrants, change in the nuclear policy, presidential decision on the death penalty, circular on strict respect for trade union rights and investigation of enterprises in difficulty." Maire added: "This is the first time in the CFDT's history that we can say after meeting the premier: 'Things have started well.'" Moreover, [CGT Secretary General] Seguy stated that "an era of negotiations is starting" and that the trade unions can henceforth "play their role in a constructive way."

Owing to this Tuesday afternoon's meeting of the higher commission for collective conventions and to Wednesday's cabinet meeting, now final figures have been settled, particularly with regard to the minimum wage. But negotiations are to be restarted on reducing the working week, the creation of a fifth shift for continuous working and the general introduction of a fifth week of paid leave. A tripartite meeting (government, employers and trade unions)--in which the FEN would like to take part--is to be held next week to provide a "framework" for future discussions on this subject between the CNPF and workers' organizations.

After his meeting with Mauroy, the CGT secretary general indicated that the fifth week of leave would "probably be effective" before the end of the year. [Apparent line drop] "delighted" with the government plans in the social sphere, pointed out that the premier will chair the Higher Civil Service Council "probably next week." Mrs Lalumiere, secretary of state attached to the premier for the civil service and administrative reforms, is to meet the trade unions on Friday, 5 June. Finally, the French Confederation of Christian Workers, which was less "enthusiastic" than the other trade unions, reaffirmed that it will continue to be "very vigilant" in defending independent education.

MINISTER WARNS AGAINST HIGH U.S. INTEREST RATES

LD041458 Paris LE MONDE in French 31 May-1 Jun 81 p 16

[Text] "The maintenance of high U.S. interest rates would have dreadful economic, social and political consequences likely to provoke destabilization phenomena in the European countries," Economy and Finances Minister Jacques Delors stated in a speech to members of the International Association of Exchange Dealers (Forex Club) which was holding its 25th annual assembly for the first time in Paris.

"While the United States has rights, it also has duties," Delors specified. He did not deny that he has had contacts with Washington on this subject. Confirming that the French economy's open international approach will be maintained ("I solemnly state that it will not be called into question"), the minister reaffirmed the government's intention to defend the currency by combating speculation. "All our calculations show that the French economy is competitive, probably more readily competitive in the dollar zone than in the European zone, more especially against the mark."

MAGISTRATES ORDER SEARCHES OF P-2 MEMBERS' HOMES

[Text] Rome, 4 Jun (ANSA)--Investigating magistrates probing the Masonic lodge at the center of a sweeping political scandal which toppled the Italian Government last week, ordered about a dozen searches in homes of as many alleged members in the Propaganda-2 secret lodge Wednesday. The persons named in the search warrants and the results of the police operation were not revealed.

Meanwhile, the repercussions of the scandal surrounding the P-2 lodge, whose alleged members include members of the outgoing government, top-ranking officers in the police and armed forces, magistrates, prominent businessmen, journalists, publishers, M.P.'s and other figures in public office, are being felt also in the Supreme Council of the magistrature.

The judiciary's self-governing body questioned Tuesday the presiding judge of the Forli Court, Antonio Buono, whose name was among 953 alleged members of the lodge in a list the government revealed about two weeks ago.

In other developments, the Social Democrat Party, whose Secretary Pietro Longo was also included in the list, has announced it intends to present a bill calling for disbandment of the lodge, which is suspected of involvement in numerous misdeeds and criminal activity.

Socialist M.P. Falco Accame, a former navy officer, has called on President Sandro Pertini "to restore a climate of trust" within the armed forces, which has been virtually stripped of its commanding officers, also named in the P-2 list. Accame also called for a meeting of the Supreme Defense Council and that it issue a statement censuring membership of members of the military in the secret lodge.

PCI, VISITING LCY DELEGATION HOLD ROME TALKS

LD041409 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 31 May 81 p 18

[Text] At the PCI's invitation, an LCY [League of Communists of Yugoslavia] delegation headed by LCY Central Committee Presidium Member Aleksandar Grlickov and composed of Vlado Janzic, executive secretary of the Presidium for International Relations, and Mojza Turk of the Foreign Bureau has met with a PCI delegation composed of the following comrades: Directorate member Paolo Bufalini, Secretariat member Mario Birardi and Foreign Section Deputy Chief Rodolfo Mechini. The talks took place on 29 and 30 May in the spirit of friendship which characterizes relations between the parties.

During the conversations, it was observed that relations between the two countries are continuing to develop in a climate of friendship and mutual understanding and confirmation was given of the both parties' particular commitment to ensuring that Yugoslav-Italian relations become increasingly fruitful in terms of results in the intersts of the respective countries and at the same time constitute a positive factor within the international framework.

Emphasis was placed on the LCY's and PCI's commitment to the initiative and struggle for peace and detente; it was agreed that there is a pressing need for arms reduction negotiations, partly to develop cooperation and restore a climate of trust in interantional relations. Confirmation was given of the need for a policy of security and peace in Europe and the Mediterranean and for the establishment of a new international economic order that will guarantee the independence and development of every people and country.

Emphasis was placed on the Nonaligned Movement's role as an independent factor outside the blocs. The PCI delegation reasserted its conviction that Socialist Yugoslavia, united, independent and nonaligned, is a factor essential to European and world stability and cooperation. The LCY delegation expressed the hope that the PCI will achieve further successes in the struggle that it is waging in Italy for democratic progress and social regeneration.

A. CUNHAL REPORTS CONCLUSIONS OF PCP PLENARY SESSION

LD040943 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 28 May 81 p 2

[Report on PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal 26 May press conference in Lisbon]

[Text] Last Tuesday a press conference was held at the Soeiro Pereira Gomes office in Lisbon to inform the media of the conclusions of the PCP Central Committee's 25-26 May plenary session, as laid down in a document titled "For a Democratic Turning Point in Portuguese Life" which we print in full on another page of this edition. The following comrades were present: PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal, PCP Central Committee Secretariat and Political Commission member Carlos Costa, PCP Central Committee member Aurelio Santos and PCP Central Committee member and Azores Autonomous Region Organization Directorate member Jose Decq Mota.

First Comrade Alvaro Cunhal gave a brief resume of the PCP Central Committee's plenary session, which examined the national situation stemming from the policy of restoring the power of the monpolies (the associates of imperialism) and landowners carried out by the Democratic Alliance government and by the Democratic Alliance -majority in the Assembly of the Republic and from the persisting plans to eliminate the democratic system.

It was concluded that the economic crisis is deepening, the social situation is worsening, a succession of violations of legality are occurring and dependence on foreign countries has become an inherent part of the state's approach. There is an accumlulation of new threats to the democratic system and to Portugal'sintegrity, and the PCP Central Committee draws attention to the fact that "the reaction's subversive plan is being implemented in the present situation and in current action through unconstitutional plans to revise the constitution, prominent among which is the objective of a radical modification of the armed forces through their government control and partisan manipulation" (an issue which the PCP secretary general broached in greater detail during the question-and-answer session.)

The revision of the constitution, the serious threats stemming from the coincidence between several points in the blueprint of the Socialist Party and Republican and Socialist Front and the reaction's blueprint, and the analysis of the powerful mass struggles being waged in our country--which show that the Portugal of April [1974] has the strength to prevail--were other issues analyzed at the PCP Central Committee Plenum, which concluded that conditions are being created for a democratic turning point in Portuguese political life, as a result of several factors, amply illustrated in the final document.

The PCP Central Committee also stressed that not only is the Democratic Alliance creating a serious political, economic and social situation, but there is a political problem affecting the very system, stemming from the existence of a government and a majority in the Assembly of the Republic whose aim is to eliminate the democratic system. Pointing out that such a situation cannot be surmounted by subsituting individuals of by reshuffling the coalition of government political forces, it asserted that the Pinto Balsemae Democratic Alliance government must resign and a democratic government must be formed, in accordance with the system enshrined in the consitution, in order solutions to the nation's serious problems by returning to the April path.

The Central Committee also examined the state of preparations for the PCP local government conference scheduled for 21 June in Almada, and the situation, problems and struggle of women; the decision being made to begin preparations for a party conference to be held in the first half of 1982. Several matters to do with the party's current work were broached, a greeting was issued to the party members for the holding and extraordinary success of the 60th anniversary exhibition, and matters connected with the 4-6 September AVANTE! festival were discussed.

Questions and Answers

Next, Comrade Alvaro Cunhal answered journalists' questions, which broached such diverse subjects as the granting of a military base to the United States at Porto Santo, police repression, the fascist coup in Barcelona and the alternatives to this reactionary government.

With regard to the increasingly frequent use of the police for repressive actions, the PCP secretary general said that "we cannot rule out actual government involvement in the violent actions recently carried out by the police and, indeed, their dependence on the government," recalling last Sunday's events at the Luz stadium, "which well characterize the fascist-style methods being used and the use of the police which this government would make regular practice if it remained in power long." "Moreover," he added, "you will see that the document mentions the government's attempts and efforts to adopt organized repressive measures--the intelligence services, the coordination of the police forces, and other measures proposed by the government and designed to create a repressive machine at the service of a reactionary policy."

Answering questions on the imminent revision of the constitution and defining the guidelines for the revision proposed by the PCP, Comrade Alvaro Cunhal stressed that "the Communist Party's proposal aims to improve certain parts of the constitution, substituting those that can no longer be updated or which are obsolete; with the aim, on the one hand, of correcting solutions which experience has shown to be unsatisfactory, filling the gaps which experience has revealed, and eliminating measures which are now either completed or have lapsed; and, on the other hand, of preserving everything essential in the text of the constitution, especially the consecration of the principal gains of the revolution."

In this connection, the PCP secretary general also pointed out that the revision plans of the governing parties "are plans not to revise the constitution but to eliminate it; and unfortunately we note that the Republican and Socialist Front and Socialist Party revision plan in some respects coincides with the rightwing parties' plan to destroy the constitution, and also to use constitutional revision, not so much to modify or improve the democratic system, but as a tool for the immediate situation--as in the case of the appointment of the armed forces chiefs of staff and the reduction of the military and political responsibilities and powers of the president of the republic, with a view to government, and thereby party, control over the armed forces, which we consider particularly dangerous."

A "Major" Issue

"The Porto Santo base is a major issue," Alvaro Cunhal said when asked whether the Central Committee had broached the issue of the government's alleged concession to U.S. imperialism. "The government," he added, "is preparing to hand over national territory for the installation of nuclear missiles which, in our opinion, seriously compromise the Portuguese people's territorial independence and integrity, security and tranquillity. We warn against the dangers of pursuing such a policy, whether in Porto Santo or in Beja. This is a problem which our entire people and entire country are anxious to see resolved, since there are in Portugal bases for bombarding the possible adversaries of the countries which deploy their missiles here; it is our very existence as a nation that is at stake. It is necessary to prevent Portugal from being transformed into a springboard for the Pentagon's aggressive policy--as seems to be the present government's policy."

Commenting on the recent events in Barcelona, having stated that the fascists in Spain have failed in a further terrorist coup, Alvaro Cunhal said: "What worries us is not only these extreme rightwing terrorist attacks; we are also worried by the immediate attempts to absolve these forces, whose demands were very explicit (the release of the fascist officers implicated in the previous coup)--an immediate attempt having been made to absolve the extreme right and to attribute the siege of the Barcelona bank to common criminals. Of course, we hope that the Spanish people and democrats and our PCE comrades will successfully organize the struggle to prevent successive reactionary and fascist coups in their country."

He added, with regard to our own country, that "terrorism--whether under the 28 May banner or under the misused 25 April banner--can serve the extreme right, destabilize the national situation and create a situation favorable to counterrevolutionary violent coups.

"Hence our complete condemnation of terrorism."

Last, answering a question about the Pinto Balsemao Democratic Alliance government, he pointed out that the PCP wants to change not the faces, but the policy. This does not mean Balseamo leaving to make way for Freitas do Amaral; it means the departure of the reactionary Democratic Alliance government to make way for another, democratic, government that will satisfy our people's aspirations.

POLICE NOTE DIFFERING STATEMENTS ON BANK SIEGE

LD032058 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] Barcelona: We now have a note from the Barcelona Higher Police headquarters with regard to the attack on the Banco Central on 23 May. In essence, the police note makes the following points:

Nine people--common criminals--have been arrested for direct participation in the attack, among them the so-called No 1. The alleged No 2 was killed. Another of the attackers fled during the final intervention of the special operations group. The person who placed a communique in a telephone booth has been identified--he is (Antonio Madoleni Rueda).

The No 1, Jose Juan Martinez Gomez, has made two completely different statements to the police. The first, made on 26 May, is that which is already known and which is basically as follows: A meeting with a certain (Antonio Luis), of an ultrarightwing tendency, in Perpignan; an offer of 5 million pesetas to carry out an important action consisting of seizing the Banco Central with hostages and demanding the release of Gen Torres Rojas, Col San Martin, Lieutenant Colonel Tejero and Lieutenant Colonel Mas within a period of 72 hours; (Antonio Luis) reportedly handed over the arms to him; he reportedly ordered him to act at all times in a military way.

The man making the statement had the support of several people for whom, he was led to believe, it was a question of trying to carry out a political action. The assault having been carried out, and the authorities not having agreed to their demands, they stood firm until the police intervened 37 hours later.

On taking this first statement, the police have been trying to identify and arrest the so-called (Antonio Luis) with no success up to now. They have had the cooperation of the French police in this.

But on 31 May, the so-called No 1 said that the previous statement which you have been listening to was false and that the idea for the attack was his, led by him in collaboration with Jose Maria Cuevas, the dead gunman. According to this second version, he had wanted to attack the bank for some time. He planned the operation when he received ample information from former bank employee (Julia Cabrera Banos). This information was handed over to (Carmen Debeu Sole). After the assault, (Carmen Debeu) sent this information to (Manuel Marti Rey), who handed it over voluntarily to a magistrate on 27 May.

According to the plan, at no time would they use the plane to fly to Argentina. The escape was to be made through the sewers whilst the solution to the hostage situation was being worked out--for this purpose they bought a drill and bits. The drill did not work because it came up against a stone wall and not a concrete wall as they had thought. The financing of the operation was the exclusive responsibility of the No 1. During the operation, they tried to pretend that the number of gunmen was greater than it was, and that the work being done to prepare the escape was drilling in order to plant explosives. They were found in possession of nine pistols, a submachinegun and two revolvers.

According to the note from the police, in March the No 1 led the attack on the Banco Hispano-Americano, together with five others who took part in the Banco Central raid. Another two members of the gang were responsible for digging a tunnel last year which ended at a branch of the (Banca Juvell). They also drilled another hole in Casanova Street with the aim of hiding arms. Investigations are continuing.

UN EXTENDS MANDATE OF FORCES FOR 6 MONTHS

NC050806 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0430 GMT 5 Jun 81

[Text] The UN Security Council last night approved a new 6-month extension of the mandate of the United Nations Force in Cyprus [UNFICYP]. The relevant resolution calls upon UN Secretary General Waldheim to continue his good services toward attainment of a political solution to the Cyprus problem. The resolution was supported by 14 members of the Council, while China abstained. Speaking after approval of the resolution, Waldheim said he expects the intercommunal talks to be further invigorated next month. He also mentioned that the two sides have assured him they are prepared to make serious efforts in the direction of achieving a general settlement. Waldheim assured the Security Council that UNFICYP continues to be in a position to carry out its mission.

Cyprus' permanent representative at the UN, Mavrommatis, said the Greek Cypriot side continues to demonstrate patience and good will. The intercommunal dialogue, Mavrommatis added, continues, but it has so far brought no results. He denounced to the Security Council the recent violations of Cyprus airspace by Turkish jet aircraft. The Greek representative, Katapodhis, mentioned that the intercommunal talks are the last opportunity for attaining a settlement that will guarantee the territorial integrity, unity and non-aligned character of the Republic of Cyprus.

The Turkish representative said that progress can only be achieved through mutual, as he stated, concessions. Turkish Cypriot Atalay, who addressed the Council as a private citizen, recommended a 30-percent cut in UNFICYP's strength. He also recommended a revision of its mandate in the occupied nortnern part of the island.

MITSOTAKIS, OTHER SOURCES COMMENT ON COUP RUMORS

NC041837 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 4 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] A statement by certain retired officers, "where shall we find the uniforms?" and certain other suspicious remarks that came to the knowledge of National Defense Minister Averof, as well as other indications, were last Monday's "unknown events" that urged Mr K. Bandouvas to pose the question about preparations for a coup attempt.

This was reported last night by an authoritative source who stressed that the exercises conducted by units in the Attiki basin were planned, but that after the above-mentioned reports, they were started 5 to 10 hours earlier. Most probably other preventive measures would also have been taken had these exercises not been imminent.

The same source stressed that there is continuing vigilance to prevent suspect persons from creating problems.

However, it is certain that no officer--either on active service or retired--has been arrested during the past few days, despite the fact that certain unrepentant retired officers have been making various plans which, as a rule, are comical. They try to win over active duty officers. Their attempts have been confirmed by law-abiding officers in the army leadership who have been approached by these retired officers, who then made proposals to them.

Speaking to foreign correspondents yesterday, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis described reports about the suspicious movements of retired officers as not being serious, and that it did not require court action. He also added that the movement would have been averted had the banishment measure been enacted.

Asked about the same issue, the government spokesman replied that he had nothing to add beyond what National Defense Minister Averof had already stated.

AVEROF: AEGEAN ISLANDS WILL NOT BE DEMILITARIZED

NC041600 Athens NEWS in English 4 Jun 81 p 4

[Text] The government has never had the slightest intention of even considering a demilitarization of the Aegean islands, Defense Minister Evangelos Averof said yesterday, in response to a letter by a group of Khios-born Greek emigrants. The letter had expressed concern over the defense of the Aegean islands, should any steps towards demilitarization be taken by the Greek Government.

"It is vital," Averof said, "for all Greeks to have confidence in those responsible for national defense, and to ignore irresponsible and harmful rumors which have no basis on fact, distort the truth, and can only cause damage."

DEPUTY MINISTER OZAL REVIEWS ECONOMIC SITUATION

TA301512 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1507 GMT 30 May 81

[Text] Ankara, 30 May (AA)--Deputy prime minister in charge of economic affairs Turgut Ozal said today the Turkish economy had experienced in 1979 and 1980 the worst crisis of the last 30 years. Addressing the general assembly of the Turkish Union of Trade, Agriculture and Industry Chambers, Ozal praised the progress achieved since the beginning of the current year, with special emphasis on the increase of Turkish migrant workers' remittances in foreign currency. Export revenues have increased since the turn of the year, he added.

Interest rate on credits to the industrial sector would be diminished in time with the increase in bank deposits, Ozal said, adding that Turkey would reach in three or four years "a level unimaginable for the time being."

By the end of 1981, volume of Turkish exports would reach four billion dollars, Ozal predicted.

In his turn, Mehmet Yazar, president of the union, complained about the "economic recession and the halt in investments," adding "yet, we have to maintain the economic development efforts since this is the sole path which will take us to salvation."

INDUSTRY MINISTER KOCATOPCU GIVES EXPORT FIGURES

TA221705 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 22 May 81

[Excerpts] Minister of Industry and Technology Sahap Kocatopcu this morning addressed the exports goods exhibition that opened in Ankara. Long-lasting consumers goods and electronic equipment is being displayed at this exhibition which is the third of its kind organized on occasion of the Ataturk centenary. Speaking at the opening ceremony of the exhibition organized jointly by the Ministry of Industry and Technology and the Turkish Union of Chambers, Kocatopcu said:

[Begin recording] The economic stability measures taken in 1980 have begun to yield their fruit. Our exports for the first 3 months of this year have reached $1.2 billion. The figure for the corresponding period in 1980 was $714 million. According to initial estimates, goods worth $310 million have been exported in April. This figure shows an increase of 50 percent compared to last year. In other words, our work is encouraging and we are in a position to look into the future expecting more positive results. Industrial goods exports constituted 31.1 percent of our total export during the first 3 months of 1980, whereas this percentage has increased to 39.4 percent for the corresponding period this year. We estimate that this figure will considerably increase during April.

Our government's 1981 plans and programs envisaged our exports to be about $3.5 billion. Our industrial goods exports were envisaged as $1.6 billion. However, to increase our total exports to over $4 billion for 1981 will be a way of expressing our gratitude to Ataturk on his centenary. No doubt, we shall all work toward this end. [end recording]

Greets Mongolian Party

TA281049 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 28 May 81

[Message by Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to the 18th congress of the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party--read by announcer]

[Text] Dear comrades, on behalf of all the Turkish Communists, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee extends its heartfelt greetings to the 18th Congress of the brotherly Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party [MPRP] and it conveys the revolutionary struggle greetings of the Turkish working class and the toilers of our country.

Your congress is convening at a time when the Mongolian people, guided by the MPRP, are completing the material and technical foundations of socialism and taking important steps for turning Mongolia into an industrial-agricultural country. This success of the MPRP proves that it is possible to move toward socialism without going through capitalism if there is cooperation with Lenin's country, the Soviet Union, and with other socialist countries. In this respect, the MPRP becomes an example to the revolutionaries of many countries that are in a similar situation.

Since the 17th congress, industrial production has increased, the people's standard of living has risen and the country's defense capability has grown. Our people view the space journey of a Mongolian astronaut as a symbol of the increasing power of socialism.

Comrades, international developments place urgent duties before all the brotherly communist and worker parties' to protect peace, to stop the arms race, to stop aggression and hegemonism, to guarantee the future of mankind--these are urgent duties not only for the international working class but for the well-being of all the peoples. The peace proposals announced at the 26th Congress of the CPSU constitute a stable foundation for the struggle of all the peace-loving forces in this line.

The pressures and impositions of imperialism on our country have increased further lately with the escalation of the tension in the Near East. The continuing and intense oppression of progressive forces in our country by the military junta and the elimination of the basic democratic rights and freedoms are further weakening the capability of the country to oppose the imperialist blackmail.

Under harsh conditions the TCP is trying to weave a single front of all the national democratic forces against imperialist impositions, against Turkey's dependence on NATO, against the anticommunist activities of the most reactionary collaborationist circles inside and outside the junta, against the monopolies' fierce exploitation and against the junta's antidemocratic oppression.

Comrades, the TCP and the brotherly MPRP are linked to each other with tight ties based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. We are convinced that the future will be one of warm friendship and cooperation between the peoples of the two countries. We wish your congress great success.

Long Live the MPRP! Long live Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism!

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen, 26 May 1981

Greets Canadian Anniversary

TA040840 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 4 Jun 81

[Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee Secretary General Bilen's message to the Canadian Communist Party Central Committee on the latter's 60th anniversary]

[Text] To the Canadian Communist Party [CCP] Central Committee: Dear comrades, on behalf of all Turkish Communists and the Turkish working class, the Turkish Communist Party Central Committee heartily congratulates the brotherly CCP on its 60th anniversary and extends its revolutionary struggle greetings.

The CCP, which has defended the interests and rights of the Canadian working class and toilers under legal and illegal conditions in its 60-year-old struggle, is still in the foremost ranks of the struggle for basic democratic changes against the exploitation by the monopolies and the antiworker and antipeople measures by multinational monopolies. It is leading the struggle for peace, disarmament and detente against the imperialist policy of confrontation--which is endangering the entire mankind--and of escalating armament. The CCP is making efforts to enhance the unity of the world communist movement based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

The TCP is waging a struggle under difficult conditions to secure the united front of all the national democratic forces in a bid to ensure all the interests of the working class and the toilers, national independence, peace and democracy against the pressure and blackmail applied on Turkey by the U.S. administration and the NATO ringleaders, the pressure by the military administration on the progressive forces, the anticommunist moves of the most reactionary forces within and outside and the junta and the fierce exploitation by the monopolies. The TCP wishes the 60th anniversary of the fraternal CCP to be a year of new successes in the cause for peace and socialism.

[Signed] With communist greetings, TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen

MINISTERS CRITICIZE HIGH U.S. INTEREST RATES

Cheysson News Conference

LD061526 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 6 Jun 81

[Text] The rising dollar and high U.S. interest rates presently constitute the principal points of disagreement between France and the United States. This was stated today at a news conference Claude Cheysson, the French foreign minister, held after a 3-day visit to Washington. The rise in the dollar constitutes for us a third oil shock, added Cheysson, stressing the necessity for a stable reference currency.

Cheysson also announced that he would be meeting his Soviet counterpart in September.

Delors Proposal

NC062026 Paris AFP in English 2019 GMT 6 Jun 81

[Text] Brive, Central France, 6 Jun (AFP)--French Economy Minister Jacques Delors proposed today that European governments issue a warning to the United States to modify its "mad" policy of high interest rates.

Talking before newsmen, the minister sharply attacked the U.S. interest rates as "exorbitant." He said these rates had been adopted "in the name of a simplistic vision of the fight against inflation, with total disregard for the rest of the world and particularly Europe."

Mr Delors developed the idea that because Europe had to pay its needed oil imports with dollars, ever more expensive dollars resulting from the high interest rates had produced "a third oil shock" after the value of European currencies dropped by between 32 and 35 percent in relation to the dollar since last February.

In the face of such a situation, he said, France had taken the necessary measures so that "the franc will not slide down a fatal slope." At the same time, however, he suggested the European allies of the U.S. should endeavor to make the Americans understand that only "solidarity" could pull out everybody from the current crisis safely.

OFFICIALS DESCRIBE POLICY DIRECTION CHANGES

Mauroy: 'Historic Transition'

NC070816 Paris AFP in English 0715 GMT 7 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 7 Jun (AFP)--The new French Socialist government is undertaking a "historic transition" in the most radical change in the country's direction since the liberation of 1944, Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy said in an interview published today in the newspaper JOURNAL DU DIMANCHE.

Mr Mauroy warned that France's current situation was worse than the previous administration of President Valery Giscard d'Estaing had admitted, with a budgetary shortfall of 50,000 million francs (10,000 million dollars), an inflation rate of 14 percent and too low prices for public utilities.

The prime minister indicated that the next cabinet meeting would decide on a series of measures to create jobs in hospitals, education and the post office.

He said that the recently-concluded pact between the Socialists and Communists--they agreed to cooperate in elections and in the National Assembly but avoided the problem of Communist government ministers--was "satisfactory," but would be examined in greater depth after the parliamentary elections later this month.

Spokesman: 'Progressive, Measured'

[Text] The meeting of the interministerial committee held at the Hotel Matignon on the afternoon of Friday, 29 May, under Mauroy's chairmanship was attended by 21 members of the government. Following this working meeting, the secretary of state and spokesman for the premier, Jean Le Garrec said: "It is now up to Pierre Mauroy's government to guide the desire for change demonstrated on 10 May. But for the promised change to have some direction and to be lasting, the government must demonstrate rigorousness equal to its desire for change.... The change will be paid for. Rigor will be allied with imagination, efficiency with lucidity. The immediate measures to relaunch the economy and social measures (the increased minimum wage, the housing grant, family allowances and the lower limit for old age pensions and allowances for handicapped adults) must not be governed by receipts envisaged in the initial 1981 budget, but will be included in an adjustment to the finance law which the budget minister will be instructed to draft and which will be presented to parliament following the elections.

"Their effect on production costs, especially for small and medium enterprises, will be examined with a view to introducing effective compensations. All other measures, whether job creation or operating and investment expenditure with budgetary repercussions, will have to be financed either by actual receipts or by savings. Apart from these five measures and further ones which, while not dependent on public financing, will make it possible to considerably modify the daily lives of French men and women, the change will be measured and progressive. Progressive, because some of the most important measures envisaged (the reduction of the working week, the lowering of the retirement age to 60, a fifth week's paid leave and a fifth shift for shift work) also will require systematic consultations with the social partners as well as negotiations among them and in some cases measures of a legislative nature; measures, because the government is anxious to adjust the rate of change very carefully to the available resources. In this connection, obviously, an effort of national solidarity aimed at reducing inequalities and redistributing income will be undertaken. This will make it possible to finance the change."

UDF'S CHINAUD QUESTIONS MITTERRAND DECISIONS

[Text] UDF National Assembly Group Chairman Roger Chinaud was the guest on Friday's "Great Press Debate" program on French television channel 1. In connection with the decisions to halt nuclear experiments and to halt work at the Progoff powerplant he said: "On an evening when a premier announces two decisions of this kind--a halt to our effort to achieve energy independence and a halt to our effort to achieve nuclear defense means, in other words, a halt to progress in the two major fields which enable our country to be considered one of the world's major powers--well, on such an evening, I feel sorry for France!"

Chinaud added: "As far as Mauroy is concerned, I knew that he would be a minister of words, while others would take the action, even on the streets.... Projects are being halted. A futile grand national debate is being generated and the French people are being told: 'We shall see later, when we have time to examine the subjects.' I consider this entirely unacceptable."

He added: "What kind of state have we been living in for the past few days? What has happened to the sense of state? I see a new justice minister asking the public prosecutors not to implement the penal code as it stands, even with regard to the death penalty.

"What kind of state is this in which the justice minister asks magistrates responsible for establishing justice, and especially public prosecutors, not to implement all the articles of the penal code?

"What kind of state is this in which an interior minister cancels the expulsion of a number of people--whether foreign or French--whom I would term dubious--people either convicted or accused of crimes? How can such an interior [minister] secure respect from his own police forces? How can such a justice minister secure respect from his own magistrates?"

Regarding foreign policy, Chinau said: "I wonder whether for the past few days provocation hasn't been practiced on the international plane. What do we see? We learned a few hours ago that Mitterrand's special adviser on Latin American affairs is to be Regis Debray. I have nothing against him personally. He is someone who fought for his political options. But, in the final analysis, is it a good move? Is it a responsible one?

In the world as it is today, while the world economic battle is raging, when job security and France's future depend on securing foreign markets, is it responsible to have such aims while at the same time trying to maintain contracts worth Fr 7 billion in Latin America? I see that by jeopardizing the new contracts being negotiated between the major French industrial groups and several countries--whether in the Near East, Latin America or the oil-producing Asian countries--this government has in the past few days dealt what could be a fatal blow to our country's economic development. This is another reason why I feel sorry for France."

POLL GIVES LEFT 52.5 PERCENT OF VOTE IN ELECTIONS

[Text] Paris, 5 Jun (AFP)--The French left stands to win 52.5 percent of the vote in parliamentary elections called by President Francois Mitterrand for later this month in a bid for a working majority for his new Socialist government in the 491-seat National Assembly, a new public opinion poll indicated.

The poll, published in the weekly news magazine LE POINT, showed the Socialist Party, associated with the Leftist Radical Party, as likely to win the highest score of 35.5 percent, up 10 points from elections three years ago.

Fourteen percent of those polled said they planned to vote for Communist candidates, a further drop from the Communists' poor 15.35 percent showing in the presidential election last month.

Three percent planned to vote for candidates of several small extreme left parties in the balloting called for June 14 with a run-off on June 21, the poll showed.

On the right, former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's Union for French Democracy was likely to get 21.5 percent of the vote, and Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac's Rally for the Republic 18 percent, the poll said.

Extreme right wing candidates could expect four percent of the vote, with the ecologists, apparently out of favor, gleaning only three percent, it said.

JOSPIN ON POSSIBILITY OF LEFT UNION STRATEGY

[Excerpt] Questioned on the possibility of a new "leftwing union strategy," PS First Secretary Lionel Jospin, who was the guest on the "Great Debate" program shown on French television channel 1 in the evening of Tuesday, 2 June, stated:

"We only just failed when united and we succeeded when divided. It is true that it is rather surprising that it was in a state of total division, when there was reason to think that Giscard d'Estaing would be easily reelected ...that the people of our country found the resilience to struggle against division. They made a strength out of what might have been a weakness. There are advantages and disadvantages in any political situations. We, and especially our candidate Francois Mitterrand, made very good use of the advantages of a situation which did have disadvantages...The workers--and they showed this very clearly in the first round by voting overwhelmingly for the Socialist candidate--pushed division aside. This may be an illustration of the laws of dialectics. In any case, I think that it is proof of our people's maturity and intelligence....

"We already have rethought our strategy and we have adapted to this new situation, in other words, we haven't accepted that the division and its consequences are inevitable...."

Regarding the negotations between the PS and PCF, Jospin indicated: "Regarding the question of whether there should be Communist ministers in the next government, I will say that, in any case, it depends on the result of the discussions which we have started and the question should be put in simple terms: To what end and on what bases should this be agreed and is it possible to reach prior agreement on a minimum of conditions or elements which would give that credibility? That is the problem as I see it, quite simply. And moreover, that is how the French people see it. The premier and the president are still free to judge...."

The PS first secretary added: "If it is possible to reach an agreement, we want it to be a responsible, lasting agreement. We don't want changes of position in a direction which might seem positive now but which could later be accompanied by new changes of position...."

'PORTABLE' ANTIAIRCRAFT MISSILE UNVEILED AT AIR SHOW

[Text] Paris, 7 Jun (AFP)--The curtain has been raised at the Paris air show on a new portable anti-aircraft missile that specialists say will be as formidable as the Soviet SAM-6 missile--but 100 times lighter.

The missile's maker, the French firm MATRA, refers to it with this phrase: "A ground-to-air system of combined anti-aircraft defense based on very-short-range missiles." It is referred to more economically as the "SATCP," which stands for "very-short-range system" in French.

The system's big attraction--and it shares this with the somewhat similar French-German "Milan" anti-tank missile built by the Euromissile company--is that two men can carry it into battle, each bearing a load of less than 20 kilos [44 pounds].

The SATCP is also unique in having a sophisticated, infrared guidance system of the "fire and forget" type, reducing the vulnerability of the firer.

MATRA was chosen by the government to build the SATCP last August, beating four other French bidders. The missile is now in its final development stages. The weapons firm hopes to go into final production in 1984 and to have an operational system two years later.

The missile, which is equipped with both a proximity fuse and an impact fuse and can be fired at night, can be used against fast low flying aircraft or helicopters, at a range of between 500 and 4,000 meters (yards).

STACP would be particularly useful against fighter-bombers supporting infantry attacks, but it is being issued to all three services of the French Armed Forces for use on light vehicles, helicopters and small marine craft. A first batch of 10,000 missiles will be produced, but the market is expected to be at least 30,000 to fill a gap in the armoury of Western forces.

FORLANI DENIES ANY CONNECTIONS WITH P-2 LODGE

[Excerpt] Rome, 5 Jun (ANSA)--The Christian Democrat prime minister, Arnaldo Forlani, whose government resigned on May 26 in the wake of the spreading scandal surrounding Italy's secret Propaganda-2 Masonic lodge, today denied allegations linking him with the P-2 grand master, Licio Gelli. Forlani, who is now seeking to form a new government, also filed suit against former Freemason Francesco Siniscalchi, the man who mentioned the prime minister-designate in connection with the grand master of the lodge.

In an interview appearing in today's edition of the Rome journal, LA REPUBBLICA, Siniscalchi declared that when Forlani was a young man he was initiated into the Masons but that he left the organization when he embarked upon his political career. Forlani also denied this allegation with the statement that, "such inventions are worthy of nothing other than contempt."

More on Investigations

[Excerpts] Rome, 6 Jun (ANSA)--The murky goings-on of the P-2 secret Masonic lodge looked even murkier here this morning after yesterday's death of revenue police Lieutenant-Colonel Luciano Rossi by his own hand. Rossi, a high-ranking officer in Italy's police corps responsible for such varied tasks as guarding the frontiers, tracking down smugglers, and investigating tax frauds, shot himself in the head at home yesterday morning. The officer was serving in the revenue police's first office [which is] according to most reports this corps' equivalent of a counter-espionage unit. Even though official explanations attribute the suicide to health reasons, the general feeling among observers here is that it was not unrelated to Rossi's recent questioning in connection with the P-2 affair.

Meanwhile, in Bologna, magistrates yesterday searched the home of retired General Vittorio Lipari after some magistrates informed him that he was under investigation for forming part of an association to commit crime. The general appears among the P-2 lodge's members.

In Rome, magistrates held a summit on documents found in Florence in the home of a journalist belonging to the lodge. The magistrates were reportedly seeking eventual links between P-2, Gelli, and a rightwing extremist organization, the Revolutionary National Front.

In other developments, moves by Roman magistrates to file charges against state employees who figure as members of the secret lodge met with indignant protest from the Italian Social Democrat Party (PSDI). The PSDI's own Secretary Pietro Longo has denied belonging to P-2 after his name emerged on the lodge's list of members.

High-ranking Social Democrat officials indicated that they saw the magistrates' move as the drawing up of "lists of proscription" in conflict with the constitution. Under Italian law, however, state employees and public officials who swear fidelity to the constitution are banned from signing on with secret organizations.

GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES COMING VISIT OF JAPAN'S SUZUKI

AU051603 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 5 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 5 Jun (ANSA)--A Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki will be in Italy on official visit from 11 to 13 June on the invitation of Prime Minister-designate Arnaldo Forlani, who also headed the outgoing government. The official announcement of Suzuki's visit was released today.

PCI'S BERLINGUER RELATES TALKS WITH FORLANI

LD051159 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 2 Jun 81 p 16

[Text] Rome--Following a meeting in the Palazzo Chigi between Prime Minister-designate Arnaldo Forlani and the communist delegation (comprising, in addition to Enrico Berlinguer, parliamentary group leaders Fernando Di Giulio and Edoardo Perna), the PCI secretary general issued the following statement to the press.

"In view of the known fact that Forlani doesn't intend to propose that we participate in the government he is trying to form, and also in view of the fact that, for its part, the PCI has case no intention of collaborating with Forlani and considers that the government leadership ought not to fall to him or any other DC representative, we proposed that this meeting with us take place after the other meetings which Forlani is to have with the parties with which he intends to try to form a government and if it, in fact, seemed possible to do so. Only in this case would consultation with the main opposition party have been logical, with a view to listening to its observations and suggestions at that stage. However, it was pointed out to us that there is a usual practice governing the prime minister-designate's consultations and their order; and it was also pointed out to us that invitations already had been issued. Under those circumstances, we decided to attend this meeting out of courtesy. We are not impolite people."

[Answer] Of course, since we were talking with Forlani, we discussed some questions and particularly the P-2 events. Forlani gave his well-known reconstruction of the affair and his of the government's and prime minister's behavior on this affair. We also discussed other aspects of the outgoing government's policy. We then discussed the relations and present polemics between the DC and PCI.

[Question] Does Forlani show signs of intention to institute real reform?

[Answer] No.

PCI DELEGATION HAS TALKS WITH POLISARIO DELEGATION

LD051205 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 2 Jun 81 p 16

[Text] Rome--A Polisario Front delegation comprising Mohamed Sidati, Politburo member and Saharan Democratic Arab Republic minister, and Polisario Front representative in Italy Omar Ali had talks yesterday with PCI Foreign Section Chief Antonio Rubbi and Comrade Nadia Spano.

During the meeting Mohamed Sidati provided full information on the struggle being waged by the Saharan people for recognition of their right to self-determination and independence and appealed for an intensification of international initiative and support for this struggle from all progressive and democratic forces. The PCI reiterated its pledge of solidarity with the Polisario Front's struggle.

BERLINGUER DISCUSSES NEED FOR ALLIANCE AGAINST DC

LD050943 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 1 Jun 81 pp 1-2

[Ugo Baduel report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer's 31 May speech in Giulianova: "Only by Eliminating DC Power System Can We Pave Way to Alternative"]

[Excerpt] Giulianova--Once again, the topic was the government crisis and the need to resolve it by halting the degenerative process centered on the DC power system--but this time from a different angle, that is, within the framework of the events in other European countries in recent weeks, with special reference to the similarities and differences in relations among the leftwing forces in France and Italy.

Speaking in Giulianova yesterday evening, following Saturday's Ascoli Piceno speech on the Italian Government crisis, Comrade Enrico Berlinguer gave a broad analysis of the international situation, devoting particular attention to the topics of Eurocommunism, the "third way" and the prospects of socialism in the West. We will never abandon the aim of building a new kind of society, no longer capitalist but on the road to socialism, he said. And we wish to wage the struggle for this objective by seeking agreements and alliances in Italy and Europe with all the forces which represent the workers and people's movement, with the leftwing and democratic forces. Precisely because we are pursuing this aim and this form of conduct, we welcome the victory of the leftwing forces in France, which brought Mitterrand to the presidency.

What does that event tell us? The PCI secretary general asked. First, it tells us that even following Reagan's victory in the United States, it isn't true that the world and the whole of Europe are moving rightward. Of course, there is a wind blowing to the right, toward reaction and repression. And it can be seen in varying degrees and forms in several countries. But it is nevertheless true that there are also forces that are resisting, counterattacking and gaining major successes.

Berlinguer pointed to Mitterrand's victory in France; to the laborities' success in the British local elections, and again to the success in the recent Netherlands general elections by the forces opposing the deployment of Euromissiles in that country. In Italy too, he added, in the 17 May referendum, we achieved a major democratic victory, the significance of which perhaps has not yet been fully appreciated, but which is already making itself felt. Its positive consequences will in time become apparent if we work hard, particularly among women who were the prime protagonists in and chief movers behind that victory, but also within the Catholic movement and even among the section of the DC electorate who voted "no" twice.

In this connection, Berlinguer emphasized all the great effort which the PCI made in that battle, the lucid aim of which was to combat clandestine abortion and to set in motion the gradual elimination of abortions as a whole--a battle which is continuing to that end. By thus committing themselves, the communists proved themselves a force that has conducted a thorough battle for women's emancipation and liberation. Women understood that the PCI is the party which understands them best. The result of the referendum on the abortion law doesn't directly reflect any government alignment or formula, Berlinguer continued, but it does constitute a positive indication of the spirit of the nation and a further eloquent demonstration that this Italy of ours deserves to be governed very differently and by very different forces.

So Mitterrand's election is situated within this context of successes against the regressive and rightwing forces in Europe, primarily. But the leftwing forces' victory in France tells us something else too, the PCI secretary general observed. it tells us that the people's and leftwing forces can only win if they stand and fight--on the basis of a policy of broad unity--for a clear alternative to the existing power system in the individual countries.

In France, this system was "Giscardism;" in Italy, it is the power system centered on the DC. So, in our country, it is against the latter that it is necessary to achieve the broadest unity so as to defeat it definitively.

This is the analogy between the French and Italian situations. But, Berlinguer stressed, there is also a difference--and it is a very clear one. In France, communists, socialists and other leftwing and democratic forces, though adopting different stances on several issues, were all alien to and not involved, implicated or entangled in the Giscardian power system and, despite the polemics, stood firm on the decisive joint aim--to overthrow Giscard and "Giscardism."

Here in Italy, it isn't like that. Here the DC's power system has taken shape and spread in such a way that only one party--the Communist Party--has remained alien to it. However, this fact has kept open the possibility for all leftwing and people's forces to work and struggle with chances of success for a democratic alternative to the DC power system.

However, Comrade Berlinguer continued, the PSI--a party which, after all, has been and remains a very important leftwing force--has allowed itself, though not entirely and completely, to be involved, since the time of the center-left and especially in recent times, in the DC's government methods and power machinery, drawing advantages from it in the acquisition of particular positions of power. But by so doing, it has deprived the working and people's masses of a commitment and form of conduct clearly aimed at building a democratic alternative based on a broad alliance of forces, including Catholics. keen to put an end to the DC's domination.

So if the French example is evoked, it mustn't be done so superficially. And it is our wish and our desire that the socialist comrades, as well as other forces within other parties, will eventually and entirely autonomously manage to approach--in the same terms in which we approach it--the same objective of change and regeneration in pursuit of which the alternative to Giscardian power triumphed in France.

Nor do I believe, Berlinguer added, that one can resort to the empty and contradictory argument, which eventually becomes an excuse, that the alternative would be impossible in Italy, simply because the PCI, having now over 30 percent of the vote, is too strong and that the PCI would have to abruptly reduce its influence to make the democratic alternative to the DC power system possible. The different balance of power between communists and socialists in France and Italy in fact reflects different historical and political developments and is also the result of the parties' different characteristics and stances.

Of course, we don't deny the PSI's right and aspiration to increase its political and electoral strength and to compete even with us communists. But having said that, to establish a radically different balance of forces between the PSI and PCI as a precondition for a democratic alternative would effectively mean abandoning the struggle for the objective for which there is a more pressing need than ever.

OFFICIALS DISCUSS ARMED FORCES, ENTRY INTO NATO

Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman

LD051201 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 30 May 81 p 9

[Mary Merida interview with Spanish Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Lt Gen Igancio Alfreo Arregui; date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] With what degree of concern do you regard the terrorist escalation against the armed forces?

[Answer] One of terrorism's aims is obviously the destabilization of the armed forces--to shatter their discipline and their devotion to the fatherland--and this is why they are claiming so many victims in that dirty war in which they act whenever they have nothing to lose and when they are confident of achieving their aims. The armed forces' envisaged response? The same as always, to offer Spain that sacrifice with their ideals and their unyielding stance unimpaired and more attached, if possible, to our commander in chief, who is his majesty the king. Of course, it causes us great sorrow and enormous, although controlled, anger not to respond with the same weapons, not because we cannot, of course, but because we must not wage the same war!

Yes, I believe that terrorism gradually will be eradicated. Although it is a slow and tough process, a day will come when it will be ended. I am confident, but there must be an international agreement because this phenomenon is widespread throughout the world and not merely confined to Spain. In additon to the state security bodies, we are all engaged in the struggle against terrorism and the united nation will never allow itself to be intimidated by those terrorist minorities.

[Question] Do you believe that terrorism in Spain in not confined to domestic organizations, but is strongly supported by specific countries?

[Answer] Yes, I do believe this, and the countries which are supporting Basque Fatherland and Liberty, for instance, are seeking nothing other than the destabilizaton of the Western world in general, and perhaps they have a special interest in Spain because of our particular conditions.

[Question] How do you envisage the armed forces of the 1980's?

[Answer] The joint chiefs of staff have made a detailed study of this matter and the standards which it would be good to achieve have been laid down. A modern army is really very expensive nowadays because we must be equal to the others in the world and succeed in peacetime in maintaining sufficient deterrent power to make ourselves respected in the international community.

[Question] And are there financial means for this?

[Answer] We hope to have sufficient means, if not for everything, then for almost everything. And with this, I believe that we will be able to discharge our task effectively. Moreover, the measures which are being adopted during theis transition in Spain are being reflected concurrently in the armed forces, and thus a series of laws and ministerial orders have been published which are improving the three services' structures. The army isn't only military equipemnt, but people. And it is crucially important for these personnel to be the right personnel and trained under the best conditions. Yes, we have units trained to the standard of the Western world. And we wish to continue to maintain this standard with whatever replacements and enlargements are necessary.

[Question] It seems, General, that our entry into NATO is already irreversible and it is said that the armed forces' favorable stance in this connection is virtually unanimous. As chief of the military chain of command, can you see no problems or drawbacks in this entry? On the contrary, do you believe that it would benefit Spain?

[Answer] We are in a position for any treaty or alliance on which our government reaches agreement with the Western countries to appear positive to us, since our technology and our training can be on the same level as those of other armies. I am personally in agreement with that intention on the part of the government because our entry into NATO would constitute a further incentive for achieving better levels of efficiency on the part of our armed forces.

[Question] But won't we be posed to greater dangers if we are in NATO?

[Answer] In the first place, we already have had nuclear weapons in Spain. But moreover, our entry into NATO doesn't necessarily mean that that kind of weapon must be deployed on our territory. It isn't decisive. It depends on the terms which our government sets in the negotiations. But, on the other hand, the countries which have nuclear weapons have a greater power of deterrence. Unarmed neutrality is impracticable and armed neutrality is an unpunishable expense.

[Question] Could your advice have had a decisive influence on the government's stance on this matter?

[Answer] We can advise on matters of military policy, but it isn't binding. Instead, it is guiding and it is the government which ultimately decides. As for the army's general opinion, we have conducted no opinion polls to this end. And last, I will tell you that we have enough to do with defending the part of Europe which Spain represents in its so crucial geostrategic position.

[Question] With regard to our treaties with the United States, do they constitute a negative dependence or, on the contrary, do they benefit us?

[Answer] The negotiations have now begun to find out what will happen after September when the 5 years of the current treaty expire. I sincerely believe that these treaties help us to achieve a technology and training which we would not have achieved on our own, so that, in view of this, I believe that they are not negative for Spain.

[Question] Last, General Alfaro, what conclusions have you drawn now that several months have elapsed since the 23 February events?

[Answer] Well, I believe that the nation's problems must not be exaggerated, especially when they are already over and have been surmounted. Although, of course, they aren't forgotten and are taken into account for future action. What must be done is that they be handled in their proper dimensions by those people and bodies with whom responsibility for handling them rests. It is true, and this is apparent to everybody; that we have experienced very difficult, and even critical, moments. But fortunately, we have surmounted them and we have made progress--as I hope we will do henceforth if we all contribute our sense of responsibility and our determined desire for cooperation.

Defense Minister

LD051235 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 31 May 81 p 7

[Mary Merida interview with Spanish Defense Minister Alberto Oliart; date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Minister, do you believe that, in general, the armed forces are popular in Spain?

[Answer] Yes, I sincerely believe that they are very popular, and moreover, this year, with the constant and tremendous attacks which they have sustained, the people--citizens --have drawn even closer to them and have seen their great calm, their courage, their indestructible desire to serve Spain--their exempary attitude, in a word--proven. There can be no better recognition of this conduct or greater condemnation of terrorism, whose target is the armed forces, than that of the entire Spanish population, and specifically, this year, that of Catalonia. It must be very much borne in mind that we are achieving democratic life with effort and with many moments of great sorrow, and thanks, to a major extent, to the armed forces. The army is the people and the people are the army, otherwise, who are those 194,000 troops this year, with whom the Spanish people are swelling the army's ranks?

[Question] What is the current defense budget? Is it sufficient to maintain an army equal to those of the rest of Europe?

[Answer] We have all read or heard that Spain devotes a lower percentage of its GNP to defense than almost all the countries on our economic level, and this is the case. But even if the budget is low and we would like it to come closer to real needs, the really important thing is that we should secure the proper return from what is invested in defense, and that is our aim.

[Question] How should any defense capability be defined?

[Answer] In relation to the theoretical danger. For instance, our defense capabilities are sufficient for localized dangers.

[Question] Does that mean that those capabilities are good?

[Answer] Yes, they are. But of course, if we were to take action against greater dangers, then we would have to increase and improve those capabilities. For instance, one of them is deterrence, when it is a matter of resisting an attack which hasn't been carried out and against which we must defend ourselves.

[Question] Perhaps it is in this aspect of deterrence that the arguments which you put forward for our entry into NATO can be shown most clearly?

[Answer] Of course, I am in favor of the Atlantic alliance, especially because it was set up to defend a way of life--that of the Western democracies. The countries belonging to that alliance are communities with interests in common with ours, and through ideology, history and other circumstances, are those which are closest to us. So NATO isn't merely a military entity as far as Spain is concerned, but also a very important political and economic entity for defending us better in any contingency which may arise. The fact of belonging to NATO binds us more closely to Europe, and that, I believe, matters to Spain, because Spain is, in fact, part of Europe.

[Question] But when the strongest opposition parties and much of the population reject entry, this must undoubtedly be because there is a negative side and important quid pro quos which could harm our country. Isn't this so?

[Answer] It must be borne in mind that this entry begins with prior negotiations and it is in those negotiations that Spain must establish its terms, which, of course, we will seek to make as advantageous as possible. Each government of each country puts forward its terms and so nothing need be imposed on us. For instance, the danger of nuclear weapons? We really have no cause to agree to have them or to their being deployed in Spain.

The cost entailed by entry? It is perfectly bearable. It amounts to a somewhat lower sum than that entailed by many of the subsidies which we have in our parliament. And, of course, it is far more expensive to be neutral, so expensive that it is impossible for us to be neutral and face all possible dangers. But there is yet another argument against a would-be neutrality. And this is that not being in NATO would be worse than belonging to it in the event of a conflagration. The modern concept of strategy is based more on deterrence than on aggressive action. But, in short, I believe that there is nothing to be feared because the government would not enter into negotiations which were contrary to our interests, as is obvious. I have never concealed the fact that I am decidedly in favor of joining NATO. And my argument in support of this stance is that which I set out previously--that being in NATO brings us closer to Western democracies and to Europe, and that is very important for us.

[Question] Mr Minister, you aren't a military man and yet you are a member of the government and the one responsible for defense. From your twofold vantage point, how do you think the military currently views the way in which the country is being governed, the process of struggle against terrorism, the new approach to the autonomies and so forth?

[Answer] The military is endowed with great sensitivity with respect to the matters which you mention and is following the current situation very carefully. There is great hope that these problems will be surmounted, being fully aware that there are many difficulties, that the objective isn't close and that, in the case of terrorism, it is very possible that the list of casualties is unfortunately not closed.

PLO REPRESENTATIVE IN SPAIN DENIES LINKS WITH ETA

NC062005 Paris AFP in English 1951 GMT 6 Jun 81

[Text] Sevilla, Spain, 6 Jun (AFP)--The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) representative in Spain, Munzer Dajani, denied today that there were any links between his organization and the Basque separatist ETA [Basque Fatherland and Liberty] movement.

In a press conference Mr Dajani thus rejected recent charges brought by Manuel Fraga Iribarne, head of Spain's rightwing Popular Alliance Party, that documents he had been shown during a visit to Israel established such links.

The Palestinian official, who came here upon an invitation to participate in a congress here of the Socialist Party of Andalucia, said charges of collusion of the PLO with ETA were aimed at obtaining an expulsion of the Palestinians from Spain.

SKP CHAIRMAN CONFIRMS DECISION TO RETIRE EARLY

LD041037 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 2 Jun 81 p 20

[Excerpt] Finnish Communist Party [SKP] Chairman Aarne Saarinen yesterday confirmed at a meeting of the party's Helsinki district organization that he intends to retire from the post of chairman before the end of his present mandate, that is, before the next ordinary party congress, which will be held in 3 years' time. He also admitted--in response to criticism--that he had perhaps been wrong to make public mention (in HELSINGIN SANOMAT) of two party members (Arvo Aalto and Olavi Haenninen), who in his opinion were suitable successors. But he did not think that this would complicate the election of a new party chairman, which will be prepared as democratically as possible.

NORWAY'S GRO BRUNDTLAND HOLDS TALKS WITH KOIVISTO

LD051027 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 2 Jun 81 p 12

[Text] The discussions which have taken place on a nuclear-free Nordic zone have been positive, even though they have not led to any concrete results contained in a treaty, Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto said in his speech at the dinner for Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland on Monday evening. Koivisto noted that the discussions have made it possible to chart in a valuable way the situation under the changed circumstances.

In his speech at the dinner, the prime minister reiterated the Finnish principle of noninterference in other states' internal affairs, but said that there was nevertheless the hope in Finland that each Nordic country considers the interests of all the Nordic countries when it makes its security policy decisions.

Koivisto described Finland's relations with Norway as "quite excellent. We had not expected anything else," he said in a comment on the discussions he had held earlier in the day with his Norwegian counterpart.

However, Koivisto was concerned about the international situation and the increased tension between the superpowers. It has not been possible to record any positive results in the detente process in recent years. The difficulties have been very obvious at the CSCE meeting in Madrid.

In her speech at the dinner, Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland said that Norwegian security policy will not be changed. "Norwegian security policy is based on membership of NATO and within the framework of cooperation within the alliance we have imposed a number of restrictions on oursleves," she said. She stressed that in Norway there is broad agreement across the political spectrum about the present policy.

"In our view, this policy also makes a contribution to the preservation of stability in northern Europe and the low tension in the northern areas," Brundtland said. Prime Minister Brundtland said that her talks with President Kekkonen and Prime Minister Koivisto had confirmed that Finland and Norway have a common view of many international questions. Both sides are worried by the serious developments on the international scene.

Brundtland stressed that in the present situation great importance should be attached to arms control and disarmament. She added that in Madrid both Finland and Norway were working for agreement for a mandate for a conference on disarmament in Europe. The first phase of this must be an increase in the confidence-building measures, after which troop reductions can be the objective.

"But the most important task is to bring about an agreement on the reduction of nuclear arms in Europe. Here all countries have a role to play, even if it is the United States and the Soviet Union which have the key roles. However, I am sure that the two countries--each in its own way--is making its contribution to a positive trend," Brundtland said.

Press Conference

LD050841 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 2 Jun 81 p 5

[Eivind G. Karlsen dispatch: "Norwegian Initiative Outside NATO"]

[Excerpts] Helsinki, 1 Jun--It is possible that a Norwegian initiative for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area could be taken outside NATO. When Prime Minister Gro Harlem Bruntland was asked at a news conference in Helsinki today if it was not so that this would primarily happen through NATO, she replied that this question also belonged within the alliance. "But not only there," she added. In a speech this evening the Norwegian prime minister said that if viable oil and gas deposits were found off northern Norway, this would create a basis for comprehensive cooperation in the northern parts of Finland, Sweden and Norway.

In her speech of thanks at the dinner given in her honor by Finnish Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto, Prime Minister Harlem Bruntland explained that Norway's NATO policy--with its self-imposed restrictions--would not be changed. In Norway's view this policy also made a contribution to the preservation of stability in northern Europe and low tension in the northern areas, she said.

The prime minister stressed that the most important international task at present is to bring about an agreement on the reduction of nuclear arms in Europe. All countries have a responsibility here and a role to play even though the United States and the Soviet Union have the key roles. "I am sure that Norway and Finland are both aware of their responsibility and that both countries--each in their own way--would make their contribution to a positive development."

AFTENPOSTEN asked the prime minister if this should be taken as a promise on the Norwegian side and a call on Finland to try to exert pressure on the superpowers. Mrs Harlem Brundtland replied that Norway and Finland try to make their influence felt not only through one channel, but partly in common cause with the Nordic countries, partly bilaterally in relations with other countries, and partly in other ways. The prime minister repeated that disarmament and detente are the most important tasks today, but that this is something which Norway and Finland have limited influence on.

When the subject of a possible change of government in Norway was raised at the news conference, the prime minister replied that the Labor Party has been a major driving force in Norwegian foreign and security policy for most of the period since World War II, and that the party's views would therefore still be of importance. Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland said that the question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries had been raised at her meeting with President Kekkonen today, without there being any concrete discussion of these questions. "Nor did we make any comparison between the Kekkonen plan for a nuclear-free Nordic area and the Norwegian Labor Party outline. We consider them to be two separate things within the same field, put forward at different times," she said.

At the news conference this afternoon, Prime Minister Harlem Brundtland did not attempt to conceal the fact that increased cooperation in the northern areas is entirely dependent on the petroleum finds which may be made off the north Norwegian coast and their dimensions.

During Mrs Harlem Brundtland's visit, Finland is supposed to have expressed its fears of further "export" of labor to Norway in connection with oil prospecting activities in the north. As far as AFTENPOSTEN has been able to learn, wishes were expressed for Norwegian investments in northern Finland.

SWEDEN

GENERAL INTERVIEWED ON INTRUDING FOREIGN SUBMARINE

LD051510 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1030 GMT 5 Jun 81

[Text] A mysterious new submarine has been sighted in the Stockholm archipelago. The navy is now engaged in a wide search to find the submarine and drive it out of Swedish territory. Nobody knows to what nation the submarine belongs or what its assignment is. The submarine was spotted yesterday and a depth charge was dropped to frighten it away. Lars (Adaktusson) knows more about it:

Yesterday morning, one of the navy's patrol vessels spotted this submarine. The crew caught sight of the submarine, presumably as it surfaced to take fresh air. The search was intensified and at about 1500 yesterday the navy made contact with the submarine with the help of a submarine detector; and it also made attempts to drive it from Swedish territory. The customary thing in such cases is for the navy to use so-called detonating blasts to warn the foreign submarine, in this way telling it to leave immediately. And if the submarine, despite the warning, does not leave, the next step is to drop depth charges. But yesterday the navy did not use any detonating blasts. Instead, a depth charge was dropped immediately to frighten the submarine away. It is doubtful that it was successful since less than 1 hour later the search staff made fresh contact, using a submarine detector, with the submarine. It was still in Swedish territory despite the strong warning. But after than the navy lost contact with the submarine. And right now the defense staff cannot say with certainty whether the submarine is still here or not. The search has been in progress throughout the night and morning. The search is carried out in parallel by the coast guard and the navy, using both helicopters and ships. The submarine was spotted in exactly the same area as the much discussed submarine which eluded Swedish defense in September last year. It kept to the areas south of Huvudskaer in the Stockholm archipelago. Yesterday, the submarine was spotted in the same area. And Gunnar Eklund, commanding general in Straengnaes, who is heading the search, is not particularly surprised at the connection.

[Begin Eklund recording] This is the area of our greatest activity, and for that reason it is natural that the area may be of interest, and it is also natural that it is the area where submarines appear, where we have the biggest chance of spotting them.

[Adktusson] But what is there in this area of a more concrete nature which is of interest to a foreign power?

[Answer] We have our exercises. We have installations and I presume that the area has been designated as one of interest for other reasons, too.

[Question] Are military exercises in progress there right now?

[Answer] Well, that (?is decided) [words indistinct].

[Question] [Words indistinct] that this submarine is [words indistinct] reconnaissance mission?

[Answer] I do not want to say anything about that. I have no evidence of whether they are out on a reconnaissance mission or whether they are training or whatever. But the area is apparently of interest. [end recording]

This was said by General Gunnar Eklund, the commander general who leads the search for the unknown submarine.

FOREIGN MINISTER RECEIVES CSSR'S JABLONSKY

LD022316 Prague CTK in English 1801 GMT 2 Jun 81

NICARAGUA'S D'ESCOTO: LATIN AMERICA WOULD DEFEND ITSELF

LD031529 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 27 May 81 p 13

[Kaa Eneberg report]

[Text] "A U.S. military intervention in Latin America today would be a catastrophe. For now the situation is different from what it was during the 1950s violations of the Dominican Republic and the Bay of Pigs invasion in Cuba. A politically awakened and strong Latin America would defend itself."

Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto said this during his visit to Sweden on Tuesday. He is making his first round trip through Scandinavia since Nicaragua gained its independence in 1979. During the liberation struggle against the U.S.-supported Somoza regime he visited Sweden several times.

On Tuesday he held talks with Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten and Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin. He then left for Helsinki with a Swedish promise of 10,000 tons of wheat worth 14 million kronor. The Nicaraguans themselves had asked for twice this much wheat from Sweden. Nicaragua is in great need of food since the Reagan administration suspended the aid shipments which the Carter regime initiated immediately after the revolution. But the foreign minister was satisfied with the Swedish contribution and said that Sweden belongs to the small group of countries in the world which is helping struggling Nicaragua. Sweden is in good company with Cuba, Mexico and Spain.

On Nicaragua's relations with the United States, D'Escoto said that he has himself asked for a meeting with the new U.S. Secretary of State Haig but has not yet received any reply. He also pointed out that he is not to be viewed as "anti-U.S." because of his criticism of the United States. "But we Nicaraguans have our own particular experiences of the United States. We have been invaded several times. And several times the Americans have used us for their attacks on other countries in the area. Take the invasion of the Dominican Republic and that in the Bay of Pigs on Cuba."

The foreign minister firmly declared that "that sort of thing will never happen again."

On the relations with Cuban the foreign minister said that the Cubans have helped Nicaragua with many doctors and teachers. Relations between the two countries are considered to be very good and are based on mutual respect for each other's independence. "They have their political process and we have ours and we do not ask that anyone should follow us."

He said that Nicaragua, which in his opinion still needs another 5 years to build up its economy, is not ready for general elections. "If elections were held today, the Sandinists would win and this would be unfair on other political parties," he said. Elections are planned for 1985.

PAPER HOPES FOR U.S. SENATE REJECTION OF LEFEVER

LD031053 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 1 Jun 81 p 2

[Editorial: "The Carter Legacy"]

[Text] Jimmy Carter was rejected by the voters in last year's presidential election, but one of his political initiatives retains its vitality--the struggle for human rights. The controversy in the United States surrounding Ernest Lefever bears witness to this.

Lefever has been nominated by President Reagan as State Department undersecretary with responsibility for questions touching on human rights. This is one of the nominations which must be approved by the Senate, but judging by the tough cross examinations which Lefever has had to endure in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, it is very likely that he will be rejected.

The opposition to Lefever is strong even among Reagan's own party colleagues, and Charles Percy, the Foreign Relations Committee's Republican chairman, has called on the president to withdraw the nomination. However, the latter refuses to give way. The battle could be a hard one.

Lefever is ordained and in the past was a pacifist, but over the years he has been transformed into an anticommunist of the overheated variety. The committee hearings have made it clear that he intends to be extremely hard in his assessment of crimes against human rights in communist countries, but indulgent if the crimes are committed by regimes friendly toward the United States. It is this which has caused the tough criticism of him.

However, in this respect Lefever's attitude reflects--if in a coarsened form, perhaps--the policies of the Reagan administration. According to repeated official statements the administration considers that as far as crimes against human rights are concerned, a distinction should be made between "totalitarian" (communist) regimes and "authoritarian" ones (that is, Latin American military dictatorships and other similar regimes). For, it is said, repression and oppression are considerably more far-reaching in totalitarian countries than in authoritarian ones. Perhaps this can be said, but those being broken in the torture chambers would probably find it hard to appreciate the difference.

Violations perpetrated by pro-U.S. regimes against their own citizens ought to be able to be corrected through "quiet diplomacy," Lefever claimed when he was before the committee. Carter's open condemnation and attempts to exert pressure were ineffectual.

However, on this point, Lefever was swiftly corrected by someone who knew what he was talking about, Jewish publicist Jacabo Timmerman, who happened to be in Washington at the time. Timmerman was an editor in chief in Argentina until he was imprisoned without charge by the military authorities and tortured. He was finally released and allowed to travel to Israel. "Carter's campaign saved the lives of thousands of Argentinians, including mine," Timmerman said. "Quiet diplomacy is capitulation."

A Republican member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the German-born Jew Boschwitz, who lost many friends and relatives during the Hitler epoch, announced his agreement. In general, Jewish circles in the United States are playing an extremely active role in the opposition to Lefever's appointment. However, the latter--according to a statement which he has in vain tried to deny--dismissed the criticism as the result of a "communist conspiracy."

At the beginning of June, the Foreign Relations Committee will deliver its judgement on Lefever and this will probably be a proposal that his nomination not be approved. In cases like this, the Senate nearly always follows the committee's lead. Hopefully this will be what will happen this time, too. Lefever is a repulsive figure, and a selective campaign for human rights could never win any credibility.

PAPER VIEWS SCHMIDT DIFFICULTIES OVER ARMS CONTROL

LD011229 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 27 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Schmidt in Difficulties"]

[Text] After returning from his visits to Washington and Paris the West German federal chancellor announced on Tuesday that the foundations had been laid for intimate cooperation. Schmidt could have need of such foundations, since his own are quaking. But in his report to the West German Bundestag he was hardly able to convince either the dissidents in his own party or the non-socialist opposition that there is any real harmony in the Western alliance.

This was also made obvious in the vote which took place after the 4-hour security debate. It is true that the Social Democratic-Liberal coalition did win this vote, but by a narrow majority, which showed that West Germany's largest party is going through a crisis and that it could be difficult for Schmidt to fulfill the security policy promises he gave during his visit with President Reagan. The opposition within his own Social Democratic Party is accusing him of being in favor of rearmament and claiming that the talk of negotiating with the Soviet Union to limit the Western European nuclear arsenal is no more than an alibi for renewed arms buildup.

The parliamentary opposition--which in fact supports the chancellor's defense policy--accuses him of not being able to implement it since he did not put his own house in order in time and deal with the opposition in his own party.

Schmidt was one of the first Western European leaders to warn that the balance of strength between the East and West was in serious danger of being disturbed as a result of the fact that the Soviet Union was deploying one new medium-range missile per week in its territory bordering Western Europe.

The Russians now have an estimated 220 SS-20 missiles, while NATO has not gotten further than the decision to deploy by 1983 572 cruise and Pershing missiles in Western Europe. But the NATO decision which was made in December 1979 also means that at the same time negotiations should be begun with Moscow on arms limitations. During his visit to Washington, Schmidt failed to get Reagan's word that these negotiations would be expedited. He did not succeed because Reagan, for internal political reasons could not give Schmidt as much support as he might perhaps have wanted.

It would be natural, given the dominant mood within the West German Social Democratic Party, if the chancellor now put the emphasis on the fact that Reagan clearly demonstrated his determination to adhere to arms limitation. But this would not be enough to pacify the growing West German opposition to the deployment of nuclear arms in Western Europe.

It is only natural if disinclination grows in countries like West Germany and the Netherlands in the face of the prospect of having nuclear arms stationed on their territory. This opposition is something of which the democratic nations' leaders must take account. Soviet leaders on the other hand do not need to worry in the same way about what the populations in the Baltic states and the western parts of the Soviet Union think about having such gadgets at their backdoors.

The growing protests against the NATO rearmament decision shows that it could become increasingly difficult for Western Europe to keep its share of the NATO agreement. But the dilemma is bigger than that. If negotiations with Moscow cannot be started soon, the West will be forced to go to the negotiating table under great pressure from large groups within its own population. Negotiating under pressure always means weakness.

Moscow already has a negotiating advantage inasmuch as it already possesses military superiority on the European stage.

There is a risk that this advantage could grow if Western Europe and the United States cannot draw closer in their views on the best way of reestablishing a military balance between East and West. The prospects of getting the Soviet Union, through negotiations, to reduce its existing arms stocks are probably very small. They will shrink to the microscopic if the West does not succeed in showing a stronger common front.

PAPER LOOKS FOR 'UNCONVENTIONAL' GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

LD291553 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER IN Swedish 20 May 81 p 2

[Svante Nycander editorial: "Falldin's New Government"]

[Text] "Beleaguered Centrist Government," "Falldin III--A Catastrophe," "A Dull Government," "Center Government an Emergency Solution." These headlines indicate a recurrent theme in newspaper commentaries on the expected new Center Party-Liberal Party coalition. Seldom has a government been given so many negative advance notices and been surrounded by so many gloomy observations.

When Tage Erlander was asked what he thought about the negative critcisim to which he was subjected when he became prime minister, he said that it "wasn't a bad starting point." Attacks at the very beginning are of little significance. The third Falldin government will be judged on its actions and not on the maneuvering which preceded its formation or the emotions which the government crisis itself called forth in various camps.

The departure of the moderates has weakened the government's power, but constant compromises on the verge of collapse would in the long run have led to the same result. If the Moderates were not prepared to accept the decisive role of the parties of the center in central questions of policy, it was best that the break came about. The new government's parliamentary position is not as weak as it looks. The considerations which made the Moderates abstain in the vote for Thorbjorn Falldin as prime minister will continue to influence their attitudes in the future. For them it verges on the impossible to act in such a way that govenment power would pass to the Social Democrats. When would they do this, if they were not prepared to do it now?

It is easy for DAGENS NYHETER to see the brighter sides of this situation. "Centrist Government Cooperation" was the title of an editorial on 10 January 10 1979. We pointed out that a government can be formed on the basis of the Liberal, Center and Moderate coalition parties without all three parties' having to take part in the actual work of government. The two parties of the center could rely on the fact that the moderates "could not act in such a way that government power would slip from nonsocialist hands." Our forword to a government of the center, based on a nonsocialist majority in the Riksadag, envisaged a situation "in which it would not be possible to bring about stable cooperation across the so-called bloc boundaries." After the 1979 election, we once again advocated a government of the center, supported by the nonsocialist majority. The notion was then slaughtered almost unanimously as unrealistic and even unjust, since because of the outcome of the election the Moderates were thought to have a right to a greater influence over the government. Now the Moderates themselves have cleared the way for a government of the center. As long as stable cooperation across bloc boundaries cannot be achieved, the present solution will have to be welcomed.

Some of the problems facing the new government are on the personnel level. Several of the departed Moderate ministers are capable and experienced politicians, who cannot be replaced through routine promotions within the Center and Liberal parties. In a minority government, extra-high demands are made on ministers' personal capacity.

Falldin and Ullsten must now avoid politically comfortable appointments, perhaps with short-term popularity--some names about which there is speculation are worrying mediocrity--but rather boldly try unconventional solutions.

The situation in the Defense Committee, whose chairman recently resigned, and the preparations for the 1982 defense bill make the post of minister of defense politically one of the most important in the government. The party which lays claim to this task must be prepared to put foward one of its top names. Experience in government and political reliability are more important here than commission service and the like.

Gosta Bohman and Staffan Burenstam Linder, an economics professor in civilian life, have represented the three-party government's economic policy with indisputable talent. It is now being said that the post of economy minister does not need to be filled, since the Economy Ministry has so few tasks of its own. But it would do no harm if someone in the government apart from the heavily-laden budget minister and the party leader had the responsibility of thinking about the general economic strategy and speaking for government policy in public debate. Neither Wirten, nor Falldin nor Ullsten is particularly persuasive as an economic debater. The new government must not only be able to measure up to Kjell--Olof Feldt and Gunnar Straeng [Social Democratic economics spokesmen] but also to the moderates who have left the government.

PRIME MINISTERS PARLEY DISCUSSES NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

LD031251 Stockholm SVENKSA DAGBLADET in Swedish 31 May 81 p 2

[Editorial: "In the Harspund Rowboat"]

[Text] There has been another prime ministers' meeting at Harpsund [Swedish prime minister's country retreat]. In an informal atmosphere, the Nordic government heads discussed security policy, the question of an official announcement of the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone and the North-South dialogue which will take place in Mexico. A number of specific Nordic questions were also dealt with.

With the weak governments which the Nordic prime ministers have behind them, the prime ministers' meeting at Harpsund was perhaps even less authoritative than ever before. The host himself, Thorbjorn Falldin, leads a clearly minority government whose parties and their leaders have recorded their worst ever figures in the most recent opinion polls. Anker Jorgensen's Social Democratic minority government in Denmark drags itself along through agreements with a number of small parties which fear a new election more than anything else.

Gro Harlem Brundtland's Social Democratic government in Norway is looking forward to a Storting election. There are enough indications that after the election it will have to hand over power to the nonsocialists. In Finland, the popular front government led by Manuno Koivisto was recently shaken by a serious crisis. In Iceland, Gunnar Thoroddsen rules in conjunction with another few defectors from his own Conservative Independence Party together with the Progress Party (an agrarian party) and the People's Party (communists).

Against the background of the so-called Unden plan Sweden has up to now claimed that a nuclear-free zone must embrace an area considerably larger than the Nordic countries, that is, also areas which lie within the Soviet power sphere. The so-called Kekkonen plan on the other hand advocates that the Nordic countries alone--where there are no nuclear arms deployed--should form a nuclear-free zone. However, various social democratic circles seem to have certain sympathies with the idea of having the Nordic countries form with the guarantees of the superpowers a nuclear-free zone as a first step in a broader European context.

For this reason, it is a good sign that at Friday's conference--which was characterized by statements open to many interpretations--Prime Minister Falldin adhered to the Unden line. He quite rightly pointed to the Baltic where, as is well known, Soviet submarines with nuclear armaments operate. Because of this, the Soviet Union has transformed the Nordic countries into a non-nuclear-free zone.

Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen also stressed that a nuclear-free zone must be seen in a broader European context. This was also the Norwegian Government's position in the past. But recently the Norwegian Trade Union Federation went against the government line. Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland stayed more in the background awaiting the Labor Party's decision on what line to take. This is understandable. Security policy has been described as the Labor Party's Achilles heel in the next Storting election, and without confidence in its security policy the party would probably go down to certain defeat in the election.

Thus, nothing seems to have changed. There is no Nordic agreement on the so-called Kekkonen plan. And the Soviet Union dismisses all suggestions that parts of its territory should be included in a nuclear-free zone.

This is of course no obstacle to a continuation of the debate. And for this reason it is important to bring to the debate more facts and less emotion for instance, how many Swedes really know that 2/3 of Moscow's strategic submarine fleet and important surface vessels are stationed in Murmansk? Between 1950 and 1968 the number of submarines in the northern regions increased from 30 to 181!

The five Nordic prime ministers probably did not give this a thought--perhaps forgivably--when by tradition they took to the water in the famous Harpsund rowboat. But it is of the utmost importance that the security policy debate in the Nordic countries--and especially in Sweden where the debate leads a languishing life--is given a basis of actual facts from which the emotional storms can be combatted.

Riksdag Passes Motion

LD031810 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 3 Jun 81

[Text] The Swedish Government, with the governments of the other Nordic countries, should try to bring about a zone in the north free of nuclear arms. A statement to this effect was unanimously adopted today by the Riksdag. Making the north free of nuclear weapons is part of the work for a Europe free of nuclear weapons, the Riksdag says.

DEFENSE COMMITTEE CONSIDERS U.S. AIRPLANE ENGINE

LD011213 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 14 May 81 p 1

[Text] A billion-kronor deal for Swedish industry looks as if it will come about when the successor to the Viggen combat aircraft, the so-called Jas, is fitted with a Swedish-produced U.S. engine from General Electric, SVENSKA DAGBLADET has been told.

There is general silence from the companies concerned, but in the somewhat delayed tender those in Sweden responsible for the Jas aircraft will submit it to the Armed Forces in June. General Electric's F-404 engine is the major alternative. It will be manufactured by Volvo's aircraft engine division.

The other main competitor, Pratt and Whitney, have offered a heavier and more expensive engine.

This fall the Defense Committee will decide whether a Swedish Jas aircraft is preferable to direct aircraft purchases in the United States. This will decide whether manufacture of the engine will take place in Trollhaettan. If not, 6,000 jobs in the Swedish aircraft industry will disappear. Of the 20 billion kronor that will go to the Jas project, 2 to 3 billion will go in engine costs.

NONALIGNED POLICY SYMPOSIUM MEETS IN NICOSIA

Government 'Boycotts' Meeting

NC060823 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 6 Jun 81 p 1

[Excerpts] Yesterday, the Government of Cyprus boycotted the symposium of Mediterranean nonaligned policy attended by 21 countries--most of them with delegations from government parties. The boycott was expressed through cancellation of a scheduled greeting from President Kiprianou which was announced to the organizers only a short time prior to the opening ceremonies in Nicosia. No explanation was given for this act which caused direct speculation among delegates about the possibility of a revision of Cyprus' nonaligned policy.

The greeting was to have been read by Minister to the President Katsellis in front of the 61 delegates from parties and organizations of 21 Mediterranean countries supporting nonaligned policy, including France, Yugoslavia, Libya, Syria and Greece.

The symposium was organized by the socialist party EDEK and the organization of Mediterranean Progressive and Socialist Parties (PSOM) whose seven-member permanent secretariat, made up of Algeria, Malta, Spain, Greece (PASOK), Libya, the PLO and the strong Lebanese Patriotic Front, also attended the symposium.

Yesterday's boycott of the symposium by Kiprianou's representative occurred in a country which has thus considered itself one of the founding members of the Nonaligned Movement and whose policy both internationally and at the UN was based on the principles of this movement. Certain delegates, whose countries and organizations strongly support the independence and nonaligned policy of Cyprus and the withdrawal of all foreign troops and bases from our island described the inexplicable boycott as "an aggressive act" against the Nonaligned Movement.

Government Reaffirms Policy

[Text] An official statement says that the Cyprus Government is consistently following a nonaligned policy and remains firmly attached to the principles of the Nonaligned Movement. The statement adds that the reason why the government refrained from greeting, through its representative, the congress on nonaligned policy being held in Nicosia, is due to the fact that a coorganizer of the congress is EDEK whose chairman, according to the statement, unleashed an attack against the president of the republic and the government on the eve of the congress. The statement adds that reasons of fundamental sensibility dictated the decision not to have the minister to the president address the congress, which is presided over by the EDEK chairman.

A statement issued by EDEK says that with its decision, the government has created doubts about its position toward the nonaligned countries. EDEK adds that the government has insulted parties and organizations from 21 countries, many of which are ruling parties and with which Cyprus has reasons to maintain excellent relations.

Denies 'Boycott' Charge

NC070907 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 7 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] The Cyprus Government has reaffirmed its attachment to the Nonaligned Movement and dismissed suggestions that it deviates from nonaligned policy. At the same time the government denied that the socialist EDEK Party had the right to claim sole championship for nonalignment.

"Neither EDEK nor any other Cyprus party can or has the right to monopolise dedication to the non-aligned movement and non-aligned policy, which has the support of the great majority of the Cyprus people, regardless of party affiliations," an official government statement said yesterday. The government statement was issued in reply to a report in the EDEK Party paper TA NEA which noted the absence of any government representative at the non-alignment symposium by socialist and communist parties from Mediterranean countries.

The report said that a presidential message which was to have been read at the opening of the symposium on Friday by the minister to the President Mr Katsellis was called off at the last moment, and the paper hinted that the government "boycott" of the meeting caused speculation about intended revision of the Cyprus non-aligned policy.

However the government described such suggestions about change of non-aligned policy as "unfounded allegations" and underlined that the Cyprus Government since the establishment of the republic has been consistently following a non-aligned policy and has been dedicated to the principles of the non-aligned movement of which Cyprus has been one of the founders. The government admitted it has cancelled plans to send a presidential message to the symposium, but blamed the socialist EDEK party for the decision.

The government statement, which shows the deterioration of relations with the socialist EDEK party, says: "The reason why the government avoided addressing the meeting through a representative, is solely due to the fact that one of the organisers of the meeting is a party whose leader, on the eve of the meeting, launched an improper attack on the president of the republic and the Cyprus Government." Therefore, it said, in view of this improper behaviour, reasons of elementary sensitivity prompted the decision for the minister to the president not to attend and address the meeting because of the continued inadmissible attitude of the leader of the EDEK party who is president over the meeting.

In conclusion the government welcomed the presence of the participants to the symposium and added: "Cyprus will remain dedicated to the non-aligned movement with which it is ideologically aligned and to which it owes so much. The presence in Cyprus last week of the non-aligned committee for the Iran-Iraq conflict is the most recent additional confirmation of Cyprus's dedication to the principles of the non-aligned movement." The non-aligned symposium which is organised by the permanent secretariat of the "Progressive and Socialist Parties of the Mediterranean" (PSOM) and hosted by the Cyprus socialist EDEK Party, will be concluded today.

GOVERNMENT REJECTS EDEK ALLEGATIONS ABOUT ASSEMBLY

[Text] The government yesterday rejected the allegations made by the EDEK socialist Party leader Dr Lissaridhis during the first session of the new House that it has strengthened the rise of fascism by the alleged entry of coupists in the House.

In this connection the government spokesman said: "The president of EDEK, Dr Lissaridhis, speaking at yesterday's first session of the House of Representatives, before walking out of the assembly hall thought it fit, inter alia, to repeat his accusations against the government and to claim that the government, by its mistakes and omissions and the trampling upon of democratic procedures and through blackmailing, intimidation and unacceptable use of the state mechanism during the electoral period, has strengthened the rise of fascism and led to the present situation which constitutes violation of the people's will.

"What Dr Lissaridhis said about the government is an insult and is categorically rejected as completely unfounded and having nothing to do with the reality and the truth.

"The government mechanism and its competent organs functioned in an organised and conscious manner to secure all the prerequisites for the implementation of the constitunal principles and the democratic and legal procedures for the free exercise of the electoral right of every citizen, regardless of political ideology or party affiliation. And all the measures taken and services used have indeed safeguarded the free exercise of the citizens electoral right. Some 95.72 per cent of the registered voters cast their votes and this is a record.

"And all the measures taken order prevailed during the elections. [sentence as received] with the exception of some minor incidents, which took place during the electoral period, mainly during the display of banners and the pasting of slogans of the various political parties, there were no incidents, no clashes or attacks and nothing happened making necessary either the intervention of the security authorities or the taking of any measures by the competent authorities.

"All parties conducted their electoral campaign quite freely and the competent authorities extended every help and facility in the application of democratic and constitutional procedures. In the course of the whole electoral campaign various allegations were made about state organs being used to serve partisan aims. Such allegations were made against not only one party but against also all parties participating in the elections. It was also stated that the government used the state machinery to serve party interests.

"In repeated statements the government denied and denies such allegations. During the electoral period some civil servants belonging to all parties including EDEK may have participated in the campaign more actively than it was proper, but not to an extent creating a real problem. We shall not today analyse the reasons for the upsurge of the extreme right, but definitely one of the reasons for this is the extremism and lack of responsibility and generally the attitude of some who today appear to be concerned and to monopolise patriotism.

"The president of EDEK described as stage-managed the election of the president of the House of Representatives. The election of the president of the House, which was watched by all the people, took place under the laws and the constitution of the republic, through the normal submission of a candidacy, supported by the relevant rules and the taking of a vote in which the majority of the House members voted for Mr Ladhas. Some members voted against him and others chose to walk out of the House at the time of voting. Therefore, where is the stage-management of the collusion."

In a statement Dr Lissaridhis said that a characteristic of the first session of the new House is that only his party has felt the need to refer to the occupation of house seats by coupists. For all the others, he alleged, their target was EDEK and not fascism.

O AGON SAYS MILLIYET HAS NEW CYPRUS SOLUTION PLAN

NC071207 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 7 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] In a report from London, the Turkish newspaper MILLIYET speaks of a new plan for the solution of the Cyprus issue which has already been discussed by the United States, Britain, Turkey, Greece and the United Nations and which is expected to come under implementation within the next few months.

After maintaining that "this plan could be acceptable to both sides in Cyprus," the newspaper adds that the basic lines of the new plan are as follows:

1--The island will be separated into two autonomous areas in the form of a weak confederation. The plan uses the term "semifederation."

2--The Turkish side will undertake certain territorial concessions which will include the area of Varosha.

3--Seventy percent of Greek Cypriots will return to Varosha, 25 percent will receive compensation but will not return, and 5 percent will return under Turkish administration.

4--Approximately 15 months will be needed for the delineation of the new frontiers and the preparation of the new constitution. During this period "the areas which will be changing hands" will be placed under UN control while simultaneously the two sides will discuss questions related to the economy, tourism and substructure projects.

According to MILLIYET, the United States played an active role in the preparation of the new formula which will be announced after the Turkish Cypriot elections. UN Secretary General Waldheim will undertake to promote the new formula. In the meantime, the Turkish newspaper BOZKURT reports that "the visit of Kiprianou to Athens was scheduled to take place after the Greek Cypriot election but that it was postponed until July when the results of the elections in the north are announced."

Government Rejects Plan

NC071208 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 7 Jun 81

[Text] The government spokesman referred to today's press reports and said the government is not aware of the existence of any plan for confederation or of any other plan. In any case, he added, we reiterate that for the Government of Cyprus any confederation or other form of partitionist solution is totally unacceptable. The spokesman added the government insists on the UN resolutions and on the summit agreements.

UN SECURITY COUNCIL EXTENDS MANDATE BY 6 MONTHS

TA050604 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0415 GMT 5 Jun 81

[Text] The UN Security Council has extended the UNFICYP mandate by another 6 months. The decision was accepted with 14 votes against none, with the PRC not participating in the vote. Speaking at the UN Security Council meeting which was held last night, the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus representative, Nail Atalay, said that the only way to guarantee a lasting peace in Cyprus is the establishment of a bicommunal and biregional federation where the two communities can carry out their domestic affairs without interfering or preventing each other. Atalay also accused the Greek Cypriot side of not recognizing the equality of the Turkish Cypriot side. The representative of the Greek Cypriot adminsitration, Mavromatis, accused the Turkish Cypriot side of not taking the intercommunal talks seriously.

Addressing the conference after the voting, Secretary General Kurt Waldheim said that he expected the intercommunal talks to enter a more active stage next month. He urged both sides to make efforts in order to obtain favorable results from the talks. Waldheim also said that even though no progress was made so far, he believed that the intercommunal talks constituted the best existing method for reaching a political solution to the Cyprus problem.

[Text] The government spokesman, asked about the Cyprus Government's response to French President Mitterrand's statement that his country is willing to offer assistance toward the arrival of the intercommunal talks at a result, has stated that France's contribution within the UN framework is welcomed. Asked whether it is true that the Greek Government has expressed concern over AKEL's progress and the election of Mr Ladhas as House president, the government spokesman said that, as far as he knows, the Greek Government has not at all interfered, either in the form of giving advice or of expressing concern over the situation in Cyprus.

BASES TALKS WITH U.S. SEEN NEAR DEADLOCK

U.S. Blamed

NC051400 Athens NEWS in English 5 Jun 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] Greek-American negotiations on the future of U.S. military bases in Greece are nearly deadlocked, and may be discontinued at any minute, reliable sources reported yesterday.

According to the sources, news of the talks' imminent deadlock caused concern to the government, and led to an unscheduled, informal meeting at the Presidential Palace yesterday evening, in which Premier Yeoryios Rallis, Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis, and Defense Minister Evangelos Averof briefed President Konstandinos Karamanlis on the latest developments.

The sources attributed the sudden change in the climate of Greek-U.S. talks to Washington's refusal to provide formal guarantees of the Greek frontier with Turkey, and to commit itself to maintaining the present 7:10 ratio of military aid to Greece and Turkey. The Greek side has been strongly insisting on those two points since the beginning of the talks, expected to lead to a new Greek-U.S. defense treaty regulating among other things, the future status of American bases in Greece. But Washington, under evident Turkish pressure, the sources said, has turned down both Greek demands and has informed Athens it considers the issue of U.S. military aid to Greece and Turkey as "non-negotiable." In the past, Washington had accepted, on principle, the maintenance of the 7:10 ratio which Greece considers vital for maintaining the balance of power between the two countries in the Aegean.

The participants of yesterday's meeting at the Presidential Palace, the sources said, made a full review of the situation and examined all aspects of the problem. Shortly before the meeting, the Greek Foreign Ministry received a message from the State Department, indicating Washington would be willing to discuss Greek demands under certain conditions. No further details became available. The sources said the Foreign Ministry was awaiting clarifications on Washington's message, possible during the night or early this morning, before making the Greek position officially known.

Because of the difficulties in Greek-American talks, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis called off his scheduled departure for Romania today. Foreign Ministry sources however said Mr Mitsotakis' trip to Poland will take place June 10 as scheduled.

Commenting on the situation, diplomatic sources last night described it as very fluid. Although some indications allowing for a certain degree of optimism did exist, they said, deadlock could be reached at any time, and, in this case, talks might have to be postponed indefinitely.

U.S. Answer Awaited

NC051403 Athens NEWS in English 5 Jun 81 p 4

[Text] Greek-American negotiations over U.S. bases in Greece stopped as the Greek side is now expecting the asnwers to its proposals. Reliable Greek sources said that the American answers will be of decisive importance as to whether the new economic and defense agreement between Greece and America will eventually be signed or not. The Greek side has warned Americans that the matters should be concluded in a few days as the still existing differences are only the amount of the American aid to Greece and the Greek right to dishonor the agreement if the Greek national interests are hurt. The sources added that the Americans are willing to discuss the first Greek claim but they are absolutely negative as far as the second one is concerned.

Mitsotakis Denies Breakdown

NC051824 Paris AFP in English 1811 GMT 5 Jun 81

[Text] Athens, 5 Jun (AFP)--Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis today denied reports that negotiations between Athens and Washington over renewal of an agreement authorizing U.S. bases in Greece had broken down. In denying the reports, the minister, who has been conferring since January with U.S. Ambassador to Greece Robert McCloskey admitted that the negotiations had entered a critical phase. He added, however, that on both the Greek and American sides there was a desire to see the negotiations through to an agreement.

It is understood here that the government of Premier Yeoryios Rallis is determined not to continue the agreement provisionally if a new accord cannot be reached. In such a case, the sources said, the government will order the bases closed and the Americans to leave. Observers believe that the Americans are convinced that the Rallis government is taking a firm line because of opposition attacks on the treaty.

Socialist Leader Andreas Papandreou has led the fight against the accord and the issue has become a major factor in the current parliamentary campaign. Greek-U.S. relations threaten to deteriorate drastically if Mr Papandreou's party wins control of the legislature. Many observers believe that a socialist victory is likely.

Last Minute Effort Seen

NC061527 Athens NEWS in English 6 Jun 81 pp 1, 4

[Excerpt] The Greek Government may close down all U.S. military bases in Greece and freeze all negotiations on the bases' future until general elections this fall if ongoing negotiations on a new Greek-U.S. defense treaty reach a deadlock, informed sources said yesterday. The sources said Athens was currently waiting for a substantive answer by Washington on Greek proposals. If the American response does not come by Wednesday, or if it is found unsatisfactory for the Greek side, Greek-American talks will be discontinued, the sources said. The government's next step will then be to denounce U.S. policy to the Greek people, take immediate steps to close down the bases, and freeze talks until the elections.

If this happens, the sources said, the bases should be expected to stop operation by August. After the elections, and provided American positions remain unchanged, the government, if re-elected, intends to initiate the process for permanent and complete withdrawal of all U.S. military bases in Greece. U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger have sent messages to their Greek counterparts in what appeared to be a last minute bid to save deadlocked negotiations.

Later yesterday, a government spokesman said the Greek response to the Haig and Weinberger letters had already been delivered to U.S. Ambassador Robert McCloskey, who was to forward it to the State Department. The messages are understood to be a last minute effort to save the negotiations between the two sides which well informed sources said last night had reached deadlock.

PRIME MINISTER DISCUSSES TERRORISM, ECONOMIC ISSUES

TA061114 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 6 Jun 81

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that those who have realized that they cannot hide in Turkey and thus have fled abroad are terrorist elements being sought for murder and assault and are not political criminals. Ulusu noted that these persons also constitute a threat to the countries in which they reside.

Ulusu, who held his third news conference in Ankara today, said that these terrorists who flee abroad are being closely followed and that the necessary information is continuously being supplied to the governments of countries where they are likely to be found. Pointing out that it is essential that these countries fully evaluate Turkey's applications on this matter, Ulusu continued: I would like to take this opportunity to reiterate that all countries should fully cooperate in combatting anarchy and terrorism. It is essential that all countries close their doors to suspects of anarchy and terrorism, who wish to take refuge in their countries. Otherwise, it will not be possible to eradicate anarchy and terrorism from our world. We are ready for any kind of cooperation necessary on this subject. Our wish is that all states feel the necessity of acting as we do.

Ulusu explained that every measure is being taken to transform schools and universities into genuine educational instutions where parents can send their children without any concern.

Noting that the literacy campaign launched on the occasion of the Ataturk centenary is being continued with care, the prime minister said that there are plans to teach some 3 million persons how to read and write this year.

Referring to economic issues in his news conference, Ulusu noted that the economic policy implemented by the government is aimed at controlling the inflationary process, reducing foreign deficits and eliminating production bottlenecks. Pointing out that the rate of inflation has decreased since the beginning of this year and a decrease in prices has been registered during certain months, Ulusu said that it is probable that the rate of inflation in 1981 might be even less than the 40 percent envisaged for this year. He noted that, in accordance with the positive development in the price levels, the total exports in the past 6 months were 56 percent greater than the exports during the comparable period last year and that an 87 percent increase was noted in nonagricultural exports for the same period.

The prime minister said: The government activities of the past 8-and-1/2 months had two main goals: first, to save the economy of the country from its impasse and render it healthy and second, to restore tranquillity and security in our country, which was on the verge of civil war. Very significant distances have been covered in these two areas.

AUSTRIA

FOREIGN MINISTRY PUTS RESTRICTIONS ON NICARAGUA AID

AU041350 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 4 Jun 81 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Text] Vienna--Austria will in future grant its aid for Nicaragua only for clearly defined products, for example the literacy campaign, a Foreign Ministry source declared after the 3-day official Visit to Vienna of the foreign minister of this Central American country. The minister, mission priest Miguel d'Escoto Brockman, has meanwhile left for Budapest. According to political quarters, the impression he has made in Vienna was "not really absolutely favorable"--D'Escoto behaved like a "professional revolutionary" and on the whole made a "rather confused impression."

At a press conference held by the Nicaraguan foreign minister yesterday before his departure, the padre bluntly declared that there was no generally valid system of democracy and that it was, accordingly, difficult for Nicaragua, which "never has a democratic system, to establish such a system. The foreign minister also remarked that 1985 was "rather on the early side" as far as the date for genreral elections was concerned.

In his press conference, Padre Miguel stressed Nicaragua's good relations with the Soviet Union and did not rule out the purchase of Soviet weapons. Asked about reports from Washington according to which Nicaragua was also getting tank deliveries from the Soviet Union, the foreign minister was not able to give any information. He said, however, that Nicaragua had earlier sought to buy arms in the United States but that such arms deals were not permitted by the U.S. authorities.

Haroldo Montealegre International Reconstruction Fund minister explained that the country had incurred heavy foreign debts and that it was suffering from the war destruction and, recently, also from the high oil prices. The most specific development aid project on which agreement was reached in Austria, he said, was the working out of a forestry report. Nicaragua will seek to obtain from Austria an import credit line enabling it to buy from Austria the required machinery for a saw mill complex.

TURKISH-EEC ASSOCIATION COUNCIL MEETS IN BRUSSELS

TA051706 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 5 Jun 81

[Text] The Turkish-EEC Association Council meeting in which relations between Turkey and the EEC were discussed was held in Brussels today. Turkish Radio and Television correspondent Nusret Ozgur reports from Brussels:

[Begin recording] [Ozgur] The Turkish-EEC Association Council meeting was held in Brussels this morning. The Turkish and EEC delegations exchanged views on the latest situation in association relations, during a meeting which lasted for an hour and a quarter. After the meeting, the Turkish permanent representative at the Common Market, Ambassador Cenap Keskin, made the following statement on the issues discussed at the council meeting:

[Keskin] The Association Council held its 28th meeting this morning. The major issue discussed was the latest political developments in Turkey and the results of the economic measures. The Turkish delegation briefed the council on the issues. At the end of our briefing we also found the opportunity to refer to a resolution on Turkish-EEC relations adopted at the Security Council on 25 March. That resolution was about Turkey's application for membership in the EEC immediately after democracy becomes operational in the country, and the measures to be taken for the time being. It is also very satisfactory for our counterparts that Turkey has made a decision concerning the fulfillment of certain of its obligations that had been postponed till today. This was well received. After this, we discussed technical issues which [word indistinct] interest us: most importantly, the fourth financial protocol. The Council had authorized the commission to continue talks on the fourth protocol. At today's meeting, we asked our counterparts what kind of progress is being made on the fourth protocol. We were told that a decision had been taken, that the talks will be held and that they propose 19 June as the date for the talks.

Another important issue at today's meeting was the political aspect of terrorism. We briefed them on the dimensions of terrorism. We told them it is wrong to view this as a national problem but that it is gaining international dimensions, as seen in certain recent incidents. This issue actually concerns the whole world and could even threaten democracy. We noted that this problem has to be fought in unity. This is the outline of our talks. [end recording]

The Turkish-EEC Association Council meeting in which Turkish-EEC relations were reviewed was held in Brussels today. Turkish Radio and Television correspondent in Brussels Nusret Ozgur reports that in addition to its determination concerning full EEC membership, Turkey will fulfill its obligations frozen in 1976 in accordance with a schedule. Turkey's obligations for the year 1982 will also be fulfilled. Keskin said that latest political and economic developments in Turkey were discussed at the Council meeting. According to Keskin, unity of views has been reached on continuing the talks in connection with the fourth financial protocol in Brussels on 19 June. The $80 million worth of economic and technical aid the EEC is expected to extend to Turkey was also discussed. The intention to finalize the aid as soon as possible was expressed.

FRG 'CONCERNED, DISMAYED' OVER ISRAELI ACTION

LD090934 Hamburg DPA in German 0858 GMT 9 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 9 Jun (DPA)--The Federal Government has said that it is "concerned and dismayed" at the Israeli attack on the Iraqi nuclear research center. A statement released by the Foreign Ministry today says that the air raid creates the danger of a further escalation of the already difficult and dangerous situation in the Middle East.

"The Federal Government reaffirms its repeatedly stated opinion that only a policy based on respect for the principle of the renunciation of violence can lead to a lasting solution in the Middle East," the statement says. "The Federal Republic condemns any violation of this principle."

ARGENTINA CANNOT EXPORT TANKS, PARTS SUPPLIERS SAY

PY082158 Paris AFP in Spanish 1911 GMT 4 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 14 Jun (AFP)--Argentina cannot export the tanks and armored vehicles manufactured with parts supplied by FRG enterprises, spokesman for these enterprises stated here today.

FRG-Argentine cooperation in the construction of tanks and armored vehicles started in 1974 and is focused on the production of the Argentine TAM battle tank and the VCTP armored personnel carrier, which were developed after the German Marder model.

The Thyssen-Henschel Company, which is the mother company for the contract with Argentina, today stated in a communique that it has no information about the alleged negotiations conducted by the Argentine Government to export military implements to third countries.

The communique refers to reports published by the HERALD TRIBUNE of Paris indicating that thanks to German aid, Argentina might become an exporter of sophisticated armored equipment to Third World countries.

The AEG-Telefunken Enterprise, which delivers electrical equipment for the tanks manufactured in Argentina, also has issued a communique stating that the quantity of parts delivered lead to the assumption that the TAM tanks will be built exclusively to meet the needs of the Argentine Army.

The other companies involved, especially Rank AG--which manufactures the gearbox for the armored vehicles--and Motoren Und Turbinen-Union (NTU)--which supplies the 720 diesel motor--don't believe that Argentina will export any tanks.

The communique issued by Thyssen-Henschel also states that its commercial relations with Argentina are limited to the 1974 agreement, which is signed with authorization from the FRG Government, on the supply of parts for construction of mechanical equipment which do not fall under the arms export control law.

A spokesman for the FRG Economies Ministry has confirmed that the export of parts and technology of a military nature do not fall under the above law which exclusively affects the sale of complete military equipment.

AEG-Telefunken also emphasized the government's authoritization for exporting its electrical parts.

CDU-CSU SPOKESMAN WELCOMES TALKS ON EUROMISSILES

LD081054 Hamburg DPA in German 0953 GMT 8 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 8 Jun (DPA)--The CDU-CSU welcomes the start of U.S.-Soviet talks in preparation for the negotiations planned for the autumn of 1981 on limiting Eurostrategic medium-range weapons. The foreign policy spokesman for the CDU-CSU Parliamentary Group, Alois Mertes, said today that the CDU-CSU has no doubt that the United States intends to implement both parts of the NATO decision of December 1979 on limiting missiles and will seek an outcome to negotiations which will produce balanced arms limitation in the field of land-based nuclear missiles systems in Europe.

Mertes said the CDU-CSU considers that, in view of the devastating effect of modern mass annihilation weapons and of the misery in the Third World, a serious East-West dialogue aimed at arms control and disarmament is an imperative necessity. The union parties support disarmament which will (?bring) equal security for West and East. The NATO strategy of deterrence serves the aim: "neither Red nor dead." This strategy also would be possible at a lower military and financial level if the Soviet Union would submit to a verifiable reduction of its potential.

VON DOHNANYI ON EUROPEAN COOPERATION, INTEGRATION

LD081431 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 3 Jun 81 pp 13-14

[Dinis de Abreu interview with FRG Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Klaus von Dohnanyi; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Will the turning point in French politics constituted by Francois Mitterrand's election also mark a turning point in relations with Bonn and within the EC context?

Klaus von Dohnanyi: The solid foundation of French-German cooperation is the 1963 French-German treaty. Over the past 18 years, this treaty has, through the cooperation of both sides, become a force vital to everyone and a guiding factor for France and Germany. I am sure that the multiplicity and potential of French-German relations as manifested now will continue to be supported and developed by the next French Government. When the time comes, President Mitterrand will announce France's foreign policy. In principle, I believe that there will be continuity in all sectors. This also applies to relations within the EC.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: With Reagan in Washington and Mitterrand in Paris, will conditions be better for detente in the East-West dialogue or will it be more complex?

Klaus von Dohnanyi: In both countries, the new presidents express the intention to continue the East-West dialogue.

Terrorism

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: The FRG has pursued a policy of supporting the Mediterranean countries, as an integral part of an attempt to protect NATO's southern flank. In this connection, how do you view the systematic acts of terrorism in Spain and that country's future membership in the alliance? Do you believe that there is any interrelation between terrorism and the Spanish leaders' desire to join NATO and the EEC?

Klaus von Dohnanyi: Your first observation is correct. This is why the FRG helps its NATO partners, Greece, Portugal and Turkey, in the defense field, thus supporting them in maintaining their defense capability.

As for the second part of your question, I see no link between terrorism and Spain's desire to join the EC and NATO. Like Portugal, for some time Spain has wanted to join the EEC and, again like Portugal, satisfy the precondition for that by democratizing. Spain's desire to join reflects the fact that Spain is deliberately turning toward democratic Europe. The Federal Government has always supported Spain's and Portugal's EC membership because it hopes that this step will have beneficial effects for both the EC and the two countries themselves, in terms of their economic development and political stability. The FRG would also welcome Spain's entry into NATO. In this connection, it has always stressed that the decision is primarily a Spanish domestic matter, just as the decision on its membership application lies with the alliance's sovereign member states.

I am not sure whether terrorism in Spain deserves the epithet "systematic." Terrorism exists not only in Spain, prompted by the most diverse motives; it exists in many countries and, because of its international links can only be combated through cooperation in solidarity among all the countries affected.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Helmut Schmidt has won the election bu has not yet surmounted the crisis, German opposition circles were saying in October 1980. Several months later this crisis seems to be persisting and creating difficulties for the chancellor within his own party, specifically with its leftwing. Will the German Government inevitably face a regression, like that of 1973-74?

Klaus von Dohnanyi: The opposition pointing out the government's difficulties is one of the basics of any democracy. Nobody--not even the FRG parliamentary opposition--claims that it is easy to govern and lead a country such as the FRG today. Nevertheless, I don't agree with the pessimistic leaning implicit in your question, the assumption that there will almost inevitably be a crisis. In the final analysis, politics and government in fact mean forging the country's future even in critical and difficult situations, seeking and implementing constructive solutions to problems which undoubtedly exist everywhere.

SPD Crisis

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Hans Juergen Wischnewski said recently that the German Social Democrats are experiencing one of the major crisis of their postwar history. Do you believe that the possibility of a split in the government coalition has been averted?

Klaus von Dohnanyi: The shared political aims still exist. Therefore, there is no reason and no intention to dissolve the coalition.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: The SPD's defeat in the Berlin municipal election can be interpreted as a specific symptom of this crisis. How do you explain the ecologists' gains?

Klaus von Dohnanyi: We Social Democrats did indeed lose the Berlin election, but this is no symptom of any "greater crisis." Clearly, in previous years, all the parties in Berlin were careless and failed to perceive the extent to which, outside their own organizations and political decisionmaking processes, alternative structures were developing. It is a challenge to all the parties to prove their credibility to the voters of the so-called alternative groups--and this doesn't apply to the SPD alone.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: How do you view Portuguese-German relations in the light of President Eanes' private visit and Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao's official visit a few days ago? What aspects do you give priority to in the bilateral sphere?

Klaus von Dohnanyi: Portuguese-German relations have traditionally been characterized by great friendship and there are hardly any problems at all. It was with great sympathy and admiration that the German people followed the Portuguese people's path to democracy. Your compatriots who are living and working among us enjoy great respect because of their conscientiousness and diligence. Our countries have good economic relations. We also have varied cultural ties.

We regard Portugal as a trusted ally within NATO and we share a common assessment of the central problems of international politics. We regard the series of relatively numerous visits as an expression of friendly and close relations between our two countries.

When I said before that there are "hardly any problems at all", I was referring to the fact that there are certain compensation cases which haven't yet been successfully settled. But I hope that the talks which are being held on this matter will soon lead to solutions which will satisfy everyone involved.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Is the FRG still interested in maintaining its presence at the Beja base? And how do you view the idea of sharing it with the United States?

Klaus von Dohnanyi: The Portuguese-German agreement on the use of the Beja airbase for training is a 10-year agreement up to 1988. This demonstrates that the FRG is interested in the long term use of Beja.

The Beja airbase is under Portuguese sovereignty. So the decision on the idea of sharing it with the U.S. Armed Forces is primarily one for the Portuguese side. If Portugal and the United States reach an understanding on this, we will be prepared to consider the technical feasibility of using it jointly with the U.S. Armed Forces.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Portugal is a candidate for Common Market membership and it is also the FRG's partner in NATO. The economy needs to be strengthened and the armed forces need to be reequipped. What kind of assistance does the FRG give priority to at this time?

Klaus von Dohnanyi: Please don't ask me to give the Portuguese Government advice on what the priorities should be. If I am not mistaken, the Portuguese Government attaches equal importance to strengthening its economy and to equipping its armed forces.

(DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Obviously, this missed the point of the question, which wasn't to ascertain the Portuguese Government's course on a matter which clearly falls exclusively within its sphere of authority. The purpose was merely to obtain the German viewpoint).

European "Political Union"

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher spoke recently about the formation of a "political union" of EEC members. What "specific suggestions" does the FRG intend to make in this connection?

Klaus von Dohnanyi: In 1972, the EC member states decided to shape their relations as a whole into a "European Union." Despite major developments (direct elections, the European Monetary System, European political cooperation, the beginnings of an extension southward, and so forth), hitherto no major steps toward a political union have been taken.

This is why FRG Minister Genscher is convinced that the task of European unification needs a new thrust. International economic problems, but also opposition within the EC itself, have hindered the European unification process in recent years. There are signs of a certain weariness with regard to Europe: National interests are gaining increasing prominence.

Foreign Minister Genscher's 6 January 1981 initiative in terms of a European policy was an attempt to react against this evolution. With European unity in mind, he was trying to make people aware of the political objective of a European unification process. On the one hand, this can facilitate the solution of the EC's internal problems, but it is also important for strengthening Europe's capacity for foreign policy action and also for Europe's world role.

As a future EC member, Portugal should also have great interest in a Community of Ten, economically and politically consolidated in this way. We are ready to present our ideas regarding specific steps toward European unity to our EC partners. There are two objectives. The first is to set down in a single treaty Europe's present assets; the EC, cooperation in the foreign policy of the Ten EC member states, and the Council of Europe, formed by the European heads of state and government and the foreign ministers of the Ten and in which the president of the EC Commission participates.

The second objective of our initiative is to include new areas in European cooperation, namely, security policy, partly with a view to stabilization and confidence building, as well as in cooperation in the cultural field. International political crises demand a harmonization of the Ten in matters of security policy. With cooperation in the cultural field and without an awareness of the Europeans' shared cultural heritage, there can be no European unity.

MINISTRY SPOKESMAN REEMPHASIZES STAND ON POLAND

LD081238 Hamburg DPA in German 1216 GMT 8 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 8 Jun (DPA)--The convening of the Polish Central Committee for Tuesday has caused the Federal Government to stress its stand of noninterference toward Poland. A Foreign Ministry spokesman today referred to the speech by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher who, last week in the Bundestag budget debate, clarified this Federal Government attitude.

Genscher also had expressed the hope that all the signatory states of the CSCE Helsinki Final Act will exercise restraint with regard to Poland. The minister also emphasized the importance of the East-West dialogue, negotiations on arms control and disarmament as well as the CSCE followup conference in Madrid for stabilizing developments in Poland.

BULGARIAN DELEGATE GREETS COMMUNIST PARTY CONGRESS

AU292016 Sofia BTA in English 1922 GMT 29 May 81

[Text] Hannover, 29 May (BTA)--Mr Dimitur Stanishev, BCP Central Committee secretary, greeted the Sixth Congress of the German Communist Party on behalf of the Central Committee of the BCP. Emphasizing that considerable successes have been achieved for the last 10 years in the preservation and consolidation of peace, in the development of the process of detente, in establishing mutually advantageous cooperation among states, Mr Dimitur Stanishev said: "In its activity and struggle your party, without underestimating also the other spheres and directions of work, has correctly concentrated its strength in solving the cardinal problem of our time--preserving peace for mankind. This finds its most accurate expression in the basic slogan of the sixth congress: 'Everything in the Name of Peace.' In the conditions of your country this struggle means first of all multilateral activity to avert the perilous NATO decision on producing and deploying the new U.S. nuclear missiles in West Europe including the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany."

The speaker said further: "The world, our countries and parties are stepping over the threshold of the 1980's. We are faced with new, hard and responsible tasks and struggles. In the future, too, the main task of all communists, also of the progressive and peace-loving people, must be ensuring the peace on our planet."

He emphasized that both the West German and the Bulgarian communists accept the CPSU peace program actualized at the 26th congress, as one of their own.

Mr Dimitur Stanishev said: "Not only the joint struggle for peace unites our two parties. First of all, and what is a guarantee for the lasting and indestructible nature of the relations of the BCP and the German Communist Party, is our common loyalty to the great teaching of Marx, Engels, and Lenin, to the great principles of proletarian internationalism, our common struggle for the further consolidation and uniting of the world communist and workers' movement. This is the loyalty of our parties to the cause of the great sons of the Bulgarian and German working class--Georgi Dimitrov and Ernst Taellmann.

DIE WELT URGES NATO 'LITTLE FOOTPRINT' CAPABILITY

DW011148 Bonn DIE WELT in German 30-31 May 81 p 2

[Cay Graf Brockdorff article: "Missiles Aboard Ships: the Wrong Place for NATO"]

[Text] For the Soviet Union there is something cryptic about the NATO strategy of "flexible response." Having been laid down in the alliance document MC 14/3, it simply says that the alliance will react to an attack as the situation warrants.

This makes any aggression an incalculable risk--and the method of blackmail through military threat is correspondingly reduced in value. With how many arms will the attacked octopus lash out? The prerequisite being, of course, that NATO visibly has all the means necessary for reaction. Besides, it should beware of speculating publicly on potential war scenarios by talking, for instance, about "graduated deterrence" and thus suggesting to the adversary a calculableness of the risk.

Moscow seeks to reduce its attacking risk not only with psychological weapons but also with weapons like the SS-20 medium-range missiles. It is being passed off as a simple modernization measure. The Moscow planners are, of course, perfectly aware of its actual quality. Its accuracy is so great that the Soviet Union can eliminate pinpoint targets in West Europe (command bunkers, missile positions). NATO calls this the "little footprint."

NATO doesn't have any such weapon. Its four or five nuclear submarines carrying Poseidon missiles are inaccurate. With these missiles, it is possible to devastate population centers such as Kiev or Leningrad but not to hit pinpoint targets--"big footprints."

This means that if the Soviets destroy a military pinpoint target and harm relatively few civilians, NATO can respond only with the destruction of a whole city. This threat is incredible and, thereby, the entire flexibility of response is rendered incredible. The risk becomes calculable. The aggressor is encouraged, even if "only" to extortionary threats for the time being--and their dangers of escalation.

This is why NATO plans to deploy these 572 U.S. medium-range weapons which now irritate Moscow and its "peace friends" so much. The decision has a multiply signal effect.

To begin with, because NATO doesn't try to reach the level of the Soviet weapons warhead by warhead. In doing so, NATO makes it clear that contrary to the contentions disseminated everywhere by the "friends of peace," it doesn't intend to wage separate war in Europe and leave the United States "out of it as the third party having the laughs on its side." The relatively small number instead indicates the "hitching" of the European nuclear forces to the U.S. nuclear forces: The aggressor provokes the U.S. intercontinental weapons and, to this extent, his risk becomes incalculable as well.

On the other hand, NATO--and this insinuation also is part of the arsenal of the "friends of peace"--doesn't want to obtain a first strike capability. This is why it came to terms on only 108 fast Pershing II missiles with a range limited to 1,800 km. They cannot eliminate the Soviet nuclear potential. The remaining 464 new NATO systems are cruise missiles which fly no faster than a Lufthansa Boeing. By the time they reach their targets, the adversary can have all his missile silos emptied.

Yet all these weapons are extremely accurate. The aggressor is aware that his headquarters, communication centers, depots, junctions, and so forth will be "picked out" infallibly should he start war. They have made the "little footprint," this counterthreat, credible. They make the risk of war intolerable to Moscow. Without them, the risk of war would grow, meaning: Moscow's chance to blackmail the West. It is understandable that the Soviets pull out all stops against the weapons which leave a chance to the population but none to those waging war.

What has now cropped up is the proposal that the West's new weapons be based at sea. Reportedly, this would save the country from Soviet nuclear attacks, better protect the weapons themselves, and keep the whole nuclear problem off our backs. The proposal is an amiable self-deceit. Chancellor Schmidt, who years ago also believed in something of this sort, has long repudiated it.

Sea-based weapons are inaccurate. This would take us back to the point where we stand with the Poseidons today: an incredible deterrence which could respond to "small" pinpoint target destructions only with the annihilation of entire cities. What is more, ships can be watched and hit more easily. Beyond the direct disadvantage of the greater likelihood of loss, this has a momentous military-political consequence: It is easier to get over the loss of ships than over strikes against a country. Thereby, a detachment from the U.S. strategic weapons would be achieved. Should intercontinental missiles be used just because a few ships are destroyed at sea? In this way, at least a certain calculableness would be introduced in the Soviet assessments of the nuclear risk. And war would move a bit closer again.

Moscow's advocates assure us that Moscow has "anxieties," that it feels threatened. If this is the case, why does it deploy weapons systems which don't have any defensive mission but a pure offensive and threatening mission? This can be balanced out again only by means of the new NATO systems. Those trying to dissuade us from doing so are strange "friends of peace" indeed.

MAUROY CALLS ISRAELI RAID 'UNACCEPTABLE, SERIOUS'

NC081749 Paris AFP in English 1745 GMT 8 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 8 Jun (AFP)--French Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy today fiercely condemned the Israeli attack yesterday on the Iraqi nuclear power plant Tammuz, being built with French technical help.

"It is an unacceptable and very serious act that can only increase tension in this region of the world," Mr Mauroy said.

It "can only complicate a situation which was already very explosive," he said in an interview with Europe One radio station from Lille where he is mayor.

[Excerpt] Paris, 8 Jun (AFP)--The French Foreign Ministry summoned Israel's ambassador to a meeting Tuesday morning to express the government's concern over the death of a French citizen, the ministry announced.

PREMIER GIVES ASSURANCES ON MIDDLE EAST POLICY

LD081637 London AL-HAWADITH in Arabic 5 Jun 81 pp 34-35

[Report on interview given to Hasan Hamadah by French Premier Pierre Mauroy in Paris--date not given]

[Excerpt] Paris--"We are not enemies of the Arabs, as our opponents wish to portray us," new French Premier Pierre Mauory said categorically after meeting for the first time with French and foreign journalists at his Hotel Matignon headquarters.

I detected in the manner of Mauory's statement that he had been impatiently waiting to discuss French-Arab relations in order to emphasize the continuity of the French policy with regard to the Arab world at a time when great anxiety has appeared in Arab circles as a result of the French Socialists' assumption of power.

Mauroy considered the former French regime responsible for causing anxiety among the Arab officials regarding the Socialists' attitude on the Middle East crisis and the overall relations between France and the Arab world. When I told him that the anxiety was due to the statements made by prominent Socialist leaders before the election, Mauroy replied: "We don't disavow the statements we made before the election and we find nothing in our statements that is harmful to the Arabs. We don't hide our concern for Israel's safety and security but, at the same time, we are keen on restoring peace to the Middle East on a basis of mutual respect for the legitimate rights of all people in the area to live in peace, proceeding from our firm belief in the right of peoples to determine their own fate. There are our principles. Is there any ambiguity in them? And does this prove that we are enemies of the Arab world? Our political opponents have launched a venomous campaign to the effect that the assumption of power by the leftist opposition, particularly the Socialist Party, would deal a fatal blow to Arab-French relations. This is completely untrue and, for this reason, we have decided to dispatch a number of envoys to the Arab states to clarify the picture, to show our good will toward the Arab world and our determination to strengthen our friendship with the Arabs and give a new momentum to our relations with them. The change that has occurred in France will prove to you in the near future that French--Arab ties will be strengthened--ties which, in our concept, transcend the level of mere interests to include the levels of principles and morals. The first visit I would like to make is to Algeria."

The premier, who is known for his calmness, went on to explain with enthusiasm the policy of the new regime. He said: "I emphasize that our concern for our friendship with the Arabs isn't based on mere interests but stems from a principled conviction and a moral concept. You undoubtedly will be surprised by the development which will occur in our relations with you. These same principles also apply to our policy regarding the entire Third World. The best proof of this is the mammoth international demonstration which took place in Paris concerning the sanctions against South Africa because of its racist policy. Our Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson participated in the demonstration and frankly expounded the French Government's attitude toward the policy of colonialism and racial discrimination and its support for the right of peoples to independence and self-determination. If we were only concerned about our economic interests, as the former regime was, we would not have adopted this stance regarding South Africa. We are men of principle first and foremost. We spent 23 years in opposition adhering to our principles. We now want to put these principles into effect as much as we can."

At this point, I asked the premier if rumors about differences between him and the external relations minister are true. He replied: "On the contrary, there are no differences in our viewpoints. Claude Cheysson is a great and competent man. His appointment as minister for external relations is highly significant because he is known for his openness to the Third World and his sound knowledge of Third World issues--something which proves our eagerness to open wide the doors of cooperation with Third World countries. In any case, you soon will witness a substantiation of what I have just said."

I asked the premier whether France would continue to play the role of primary motivator of European policy in the Middle East or be satisfied to lend modest support to the European initiative for the area. He replied: "France's role under the left regime will be no less important than its role under the rightist regime. What will happen is the contrary. France is a great state not because it is a major industrial country but because it is a country of social and moral revolution, a country of laws and principles and a country of mankind. On this basis, France's stances must be great, and it will not abandon its role and responsibility in the international sphere. Our political opponents have tried to portray us as people who aren't interested in foreign policy, whereas the reverse is true."

When I asked him about his opinion regarding the Gulf leaders' decision to keep the foreign naval fleets away from the Arab Gulf, Mauroy preferred not to delve into this subject before the French administration has formed a complete picture about this unexpected decision."

TROOPS WITHDRAWN FROM CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

AB051624 Paris AFP in French 1421 GMT 5 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 5 Jun (AFP)--A 138-man company of the 3d French Marine Regiment which had been stationed in Bangui (CAR) flew back to its base in France on Thursday evening, the French Defense Ministry announced on Friday.

The withdrawal is part of the 4-monthly rotation plan of the French troops stationed in the CAR. The plan was suspended upon the election of President Francois Mitterrand. It is not known yet whether the company will be replaced.

The strength of the French troops stationed in Bangui and the north western town of Bouar totals 1,165 men, after the withdrawal.

Meanwhile, three companies of the 3d Naval Regiment stationed in Bouar will soon be replaced by three companies from the 8th Naval Infantry Paratrooper Regiment, RPIMa.

L'HUMANITE PUBLISHES ELECTION AGREEMENT WITH PS

LD081351 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 5 Jun 81 p 3

[Text] The text of the statement read by Jean Poperen at 1300 yesterday at the end of the discussion between the PCF and PS delegations:

"The election of Francois Mitterrand as president was felt to be an event of great importance both in France and abroad. It is the result of a powerful desire for unity to which the two parties and the other constituents of the people's movement have contributed. It has profoundly modified the facts of French politics and raised great hopes in our country.

"It is in a desire to respond to these hopes that the PS and PCF have begun discussions dealing with the problems of national life as a whole. These discussions have taken into account the personality of each party to which respectively the participants legitimately belong. They have confirmed that disagreements exist between the two parties on a certain number of questions, on which they have agreed to have deeper discussions.

"At the same time, they have verified the existence of a number of points of agreement, relating primarily to the adoption of immediate and long term measures against unemployment and for the creation of jobs and training for young people; the progressive reduction of the work week by negotiation to 35 hours without reduction in salaries; the improvement of working conditions and job stability; a fifth week of paid leave and the lowering of the retirement age; the increase of the interoccupational minimum growth wage, family allowances, old age pension, handicap allowances, superannuation and pensions, the guaranteeing and improvement of the income of family agricultural small holdings; the cessation of attacks on schools; the guaranteeing of trade union and political freedoms, the extension of rights for workers in industry, the suppression of discrimination against women, young people and immigrant workers; the democratization of the public sector, the development of freedoms; proportional representation; the election of regional assemblies by universal suffrage; decentralization of authority; and support for France's action for peace and disarmament, respecting its alliances.

"This is why, at the present stage, the PS and PCF have here and now agreed to confirm and strengthen the 10 May victory by developing their cooperation, in particularly wherever they have been so placed as to manage public affairs together, and naturally by deciding for the second round of the legislative election to stand down in favor of the candidate of the left, who is placed in the lead by universal suffrage; the two parties will meet immediately after the first round to put this withdrawal into action.

"Thus, a great victory will be made possible in the National Assembly election to be held on 14 and 21 June. Thus, the conditions will be created which will allow the constitution of a coherent and lasting majority, determined to do its utmost to participate in applying the new policy which French men and women chose by electing Francois Mitterrand president.

"At that point, a new meeting will be necessary."

PREMIER IMPLIES NO EXTRADITION OF BASQUE MILITANTS

NC082137 Paris AFP in English 2127 GMT 8 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Paris, 8 Jun (AFP)--New French Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy today implied that France would refuse to extradite Spanish Basque militants in this country back to their homeland.

"It is one thing to fight these activities on French soil and extradition is another affair," Mr Mauroy said. "There is no question of Basque terrorists operating from French soil," he said.

Spanish Request Denied

[Text] French Premier Pierre Mauroy has just announced a negative decision in response to the Spanish request for the extradition of the alleged member of ETA/M [Basque Fatherland and Liberty-Military Front], Tomas Linaza Echeverria, but he also has promised a more rigorous approach to controlling the activities of the Basque terrorist movement on French territory.

LE MATIN VIEWS CHEYSSON'S WASHINGTON VISIT

LD081115 Paris LE MATIN in French 5 Jun 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Socialism and Atlanticism"]

[Text] With the accession to power, in January 1956, of the Republican Front, a coalition dominated by Guy Mollet's Workers International, French section, one of the government's basic foreign policy features was a rapproachment--or alignment--with the United States. Whether it was a case of Suez, the affair of Mattei, the Italian oil company director who died under such mysterious circumstances, or of Algerian policy, which needed U.S. support in the United Nations, Guy Mollet never sought to disguise his Atlanticism. At the time, the main argument in favor of this diplomacy was the existence of threat of communist imperialism," as Mollet said at a meeting with Eisenhower.

If times have changed greatly since then, it is nonetheless true that "socialism a la Francaise,"--that is, social democratic rather than truly Socialist--continues to be viewed favorably by the White House. More favorably than Gaullism, for instance, ever was. There is therefore no reason to be surprised at the way that our Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson has been received since yesterday by U.S. officials. Not one of them was absent from the meeting--President Reagan, Vice President Bush, right down to Secretary of Commerce Balbridge, via Secretary of State Haig, with whom Cheysson is to have three rounds of talks. Washington could scarcely have done better if it had been a head of state involved.

Such attention has nothing to do with etiquette or the traditional French-U.S. friendship. Indeed, scarcely had it been installed before the Mitterrand team--while reasserting the dogma of national independence--gave assurances of loyalty to the Atlantic alliance, in a way which could have been no clearer, on an essential point: For the first time, a French Government supported the deployment of U.S. cruise and Pershing missiles in Europe and clearly denounced the deployment of Soviet SS-20 missiles in the Eastern republics. We can read the following in the Socialist draft: "While the Atlantic alliance remains at present, for our country, a necessary counterweight to Soviet power in Europe, it should not serve as a pretext for France's alignment with imperialist positions in the world nor should it lead it to join, directly or indirectly, the U.S. strategic mechanism in Europe."

It is certain that Claude Cheysson didn't arrive in the United States with the Socialist draft in his briefcase. The new head of our diplomatic service has displayed, since he took office, a spirit of independence akin to that of a technician little concerned with considerations of doctrine or politicking. Moreover, the White House is aware of Cheysson's highly European feelings and these are close to the ideas of the State Department.

In other words, the foreign minister's trip to the United States should enable him to develop with respect to the White House a diplomacy which is both uninhibited and friendly. If there are any differences, they would be formal rather than substantial. We have, therefore, a visit which should defuse Washington's reputed worries and uncertainties since Francois Mitterrand's election. But this is also something which threatens to give the new French diplomacy a more Atlanticist hue, whereas it was expected that initially it would be "equidistant from the two blocs."

LE MONDE EXAMINES U.S. INTENTIONS TOWARD AFRICA

[Editorial: "A New Policeman in Africa?"]

[Text] Just before receiving Claude Cheysson, the U.S. Government explained with unusual vigor its intentions with respect to Africa, a subject which in view of foreseeable changes in French policy will play an important part in the coming talks. To check the "adventurism" of Colonel al-Qadhdhafi who, according to Washington, has been responsible for both international terrorism and--what is more likely--destabilization in North Africa, the United States will help several African states which have asked for assistance "in secrecy." This action isn't only aimed at countries like Egypt and Sudan, which have never been given any French assurances with respect to their security, but also concerns Tunisia, Mali and Niger which have traditionally enjoyed Paris' protection. When receiving the Niger ambassador's credentials on Wednesday, Mitterrand stated again that "the French Republic will honor all its commitments."

Far from ignoring the black continent, the Reagan administration has gradually been determining the field of action for a policy which has the obvious objective of reducing Soviet-Cuban influence wherever it can be observed. As some "leaks" of certain State Department documents published by the American press in recent days suggest, Washington seeks to ensure a global settlement in southern Africa which would make simultaneously possible the reintegration of a "reformed" South Africa in the Western defense system, Namibia's independence under "internationally acceptable conditions" and the withdrawal of the Cuban forces--some 20,000 men--which have been stationed in Angola for more than 5 years.

As far as the northern region and the Horn of Africa are concerned, it would be a question of making the Soviets understand with reference to Libya, which they have transformed into an arsenal, and Ethiopia that they will be unable to acquire with impunity any bridgeheads with a view to "destablizing" weak and often resourceless border states.

However, it seems that the means for pursuing such a policy are far from being assured. Washington's "friendly" policy toward South Africa certainly will not make it easier for it to persuade African states to listen to its request to "isolate" Libya.

The Americans, who want to acquire intermediaries rather than intervene directly, are bound to take into account Paris' role which maintains a special relationship with so many countries on the African continent. If, as the president has stated, France intends to "fully play its role," will it be possible to reconcile its action with that of the United States? Or is a new "policeman" of Africa preparing to follow in France's footsteps with a view to ensuring the security of countries to which Libya obviously represents a serious threat?

GOVERNMENT 'DEEPLY CONCERNED' ABOUT ISRAELI RAID

[Text] Rome, 9 Jun (ANSA)--Italian concern over the consequences of the Israeli bombing attack on Iraq's nuclear installations at Tammuz and the threat to personnel working on projects for peaceful purposes in the zone was voiced in a statement released here Monday evening by the Italian Foreign Ministry. The note released to the press at the Farnesina Foreign Ministry building described the concern as "deep" and noted that episodes of this kind compromise the security and safety of staff who work on "plant for peaceful purposes". The plant, Foreign Ministry sources pointed out, is for peaceful purposes, like all the other plant supplied to Iraq.

According to the statement, the Tammuz plant conforms with both the letter and the aims of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, which Iraq has signed. According to the Italian Foreign Ministry, all the nuclear plant supplied to Iraq is open to inspection by the Vienna-based International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). According to other reports, IAEA inspections have been carried out at the plant hit by Israeli bombers Sunday, and no infraction of international regulations governing their use had been found.

FRENCH FOREIGN MINISTER HOLDS TALKS, DEPARTS

[Text] Rome, 8 Jun (ANSA)--"Preoccupation" over the stresses created by United States economic and monetary policy in the EEC Ten was the central concern at talks here today between Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and French Foreign Affairs Minister Claude Cheysson. Cheysson, appointed when President Francois Mitterrand was voted into power last month, flew in from Washington via Paris. He stayed only a few hours and returned to the French capital in the afternoon.

European problems took up a big slice of the consultations. As Colombo pointed out, both of them know this field because they have "worked together for Europe for a long time." Before being named as French diplomatic chief, Cheysson was long-time EEC commissioner for development and relations with the developing countries.

Speaking with reporters, both ministers agreed on the need to relaunch Europe in political terms. In particular, Cheysson said, France intends to strengthen cooperation with Italy in all fields, arguing that the "intimate relationship" between Paris and Bonn "is in no way exclusive. Europe must go still further", he added in urging moves to put the EEC's budget policy back into balance and to improve the Community's common agricultural policy.

On his talk with the Reagan administration and President Ronald Reagan in Washington, Cheysson said he had tried to make them grasp the "grave consequences" of the soaring parity of the dollar on all the international currency markets. One of these consequences is an "indirect condemnation to growing unemployment" for the United States' Western allies, he pointed out.

He also hinted that the problem may be taken up when the European leaders meet in Luxembourg at the end of June and at the July summit in Ottawa of the West's seven major industrial powers--the United States, Britain, West Germany, France, Japan, Canada and Italy.

Other major areas reviewed were Afghanistan and Poland. The two ministers also agreed on active moves for cooperation in the Mediterranean area and for concrete talks in the North-South dialogue between industrialized and developing countries. Cheysson brought a message of "respectful and affectionate" greetings from Mitterrand for Italian head-of-state Sandro Pertini.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH LIBYA

AU081953 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 8 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 8 Jun (ANSA)--Italy's relations with the Libyan Jamahiriyah are "delicate", but the Rome government is doing "everything possible to keep open dialogue and cooperation," according to Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. Interviewed for the latest issue of the weekly OGGI, Colombo pointed out that 20,000 Italians reside in the North African state, which supplies 17 percent of Italy's oil needs.

"It is obvious that, in a situation of this kind, political lines that others may assume must be assessed with realism on our party", the diplomatic chief asserted.

Describing Italo-Libyan relations as a mixture of "feelings of friendship, interests, [word indistinct]," Colombo added that "we intend to do what is possible to keep dialogue and cooperation with Libya open, but this would be easier if the divergencies that currently separate us in international behavior were less." Colombo also said that Italy's relations with the North African state are on a different plane than those maintained by the other EEC countries because of the two countries' geographical location.

According to Colombo, "our country must in fact ensure that, in every moment, these relations correspond to the rule traditionally requiring each country to have a good understanding with all its neighbors, and this is what Libya is for us."

Asked about the Middle East crisis, Colombo noted that the "most difficult nexus" was the definition of the Palestinian problem. It is now broadly recognised that solution of this problem is an essential factor in the framework of the zone," he asserted, "but an equally essential element is Israel's security."

"The path will be open for peace when it is possible to achieve Palestinian recognition of Israel and Israeli recognition of some fundamental rights of the Palestinians. This should be within an overall settlement for the zone ensuring adequate guarantees for everyone and, of course, international guarantees."

On the situation in France after the election of Socialist President Francois Mitterrand, Colombo said the problem of the French Communists' role in the government or government majority would rest on their attitude to "Europe and the Atlantic alliance."

"I must say," Colombo added, "that if the opinions of (French Communist Party Secretary Georges) Marchais remain those voiced in the European Parliament, I cannot see how their eventual assumption of government responsibility could fail to influence the continuity and political validity of these two pillars fundamental for all the Western countries."

PCI AIDES CONFER WITH LEBANESE NATIONALIST LEADER

LD081005 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 4 Jun 81 p 18

[Text] Rome--Lebanese National Movement Secretariat member Doctor 'Abdallah Sa'adah has been received at PCI headquarters by PCI Foreign Section Chief Comrade Antonio Rubbi and Comrade Remo Salati of the Foreign Section. During the cordial conversation, Doctor Sa'adah provided a full report on the Lebanese situation, which is being increasingly exacerbated by the continual bloodthirsty Israeli violations of Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity. Comrades Rubbi and Salati confirmed to Doctor Sa'adah not only the PCI's solidarity with the Lebanese people and its condemnation of the Israeli aggressions, but also the party's commitment to do its utmost to help safeguard Lebanon's integrity and independence and assert the Palestinian people's national rights.

PCE'S CARRILLO SEEN IN CONFLICT WITH 'RENOVATORS'

LD081215 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 3 Jun 81 p 13

[Joaquina Prades report]

[Text] PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo has placed himself at the head of his party's hardliners to oppose the current of the "renovating Eurocommunists"--a group comprising 25 percent of the Central Committee, whose viewpoint is characterized by development of the Eurocommunist theses and by the renewal of the current leadership team.

This current, which recently emerged publicly, believes that the time has come in the PCE "for electing at the next congress a new leadership capable of giving impetus to the new political tasks and of surmounting the danger of the ossification of Eurocommunism." They assert this in a document endorsed by 25 signatures collected in Madrid.

The tone adopted by Carrillo in referring to this current--"you are so weak," he told them, according to a communist municipal councillor, at a meeting which he held with several of them Monday, "that I would not care if your document were published in MUNDO OBRERO"--might suggest that the renovating Eurocommunists are an unimportant minority in the party. However, despite their small numbers, Carrillo has been worried by the political stature and professional qualifications of most of them, since they include virtually all the youngest deputies, almost all the Madrid city councillors, the Galician and Basque secretaries general and a large number of grassroots members, as well as intellectuals.

The best proof of Carrillo's anxiety, in addition to his flat refusal to make statements on this group to the press, is the numerous and intensive meetings called in Madrid since the existence of the document, handed over by its authors to Simon Sanchez Montero for publication in MUNDO OBRERO 2 weeks ago, became known. Since then, the following internal reactions have occurred: An initial Central Committee meeting was held at which it was decided by an absolute majority to issue an unusual communique to the press warning about "factional activity" in the PCE, without specifying to what activity it was referring. That executive committee communique appeared all the more unusual since it denied a report which had never been published in any of the news media.

The issue was broached in the provincial committee 3 days later. Some 13 of its members were signatories of the document and therefore rejected the proposal that it be banned; another 22 voted in favor of issuing a milder communique than that of the executive committee and advocated its publication in MUNDO OBRERO. So the document was referred to the committee which selects the communist press organ's forums. Its editor, Jose Maria Gonzalez Jerez, and Organization Secretary Jaime Ballesteros declared themselves opposed, while Nicolas Sartorius and Manuel Azcarate were in favor of its publication.

Following the deadlock, the Central Committee Secretariat, after 8 hours of intensive debate, leveled harsh accusations against the signatories of the document, whom it charged with "playing into the putschists' hands" and being "splittists" and "social democrats." Only Pilar Brabo and Carlos Alonso Zaldivar--leaders belonging to the renovating Eurocommunists--defended the document. Such was the degree of confrontation, especially with Romero Marin, that it was decided to wait until Santiago Carrillo returned from Romania. With Carrillo in Madrid, the debate was repeated last Friday, with the important factor of Carrillo's unconditional alliance with the hardliners and the renovators' disenchantment.

Carrillo met Monday with a group of the signatories, whom he reproached for their stance, warned that they might play into the hands of the pro-Soviets and forbade them to publish anything in MUNDO OBRERO. His interlocutors refused to obey their secretary general's orders and no one withdrew his signature from the document.

SPAIN, MEXICO TO INCREASE EDUCATIONAL EXCHNAGES

FL041544 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1518 GMT 4 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Madrid, Spain, 4 Jun (NOTIMEX)--Mexico and Spain today agreed to intensify educational exchanges between the two countries, to support educational cooperation in Latin America and to defend the Spanish [language] and history of the two countries. All this is stated in a memorandum signed by Fernando Solano Morales and Juan Antonio Ortega, secretaries of education of Mexico and Spain, respectively, at the conclusion of Solana Morales' visit to Spain.

The document signed today also provides for an increase in the bilateral exchange of professors and students, in cooperation among experts and in the exchange of educational documentation and training material. It also encourages a more realistic and objective knowledge of the history of Mexico and Spain, both in the two countries and in textbooks of other nations, as well as to cooperate in achieving the success of UNESCO educational efforts in Latin America and the Caribbean region.

On another subject, Fernando Solana stated that Mexican-Spanish relations are excellent, especially in the educational and cultural fields.

OAU OFFICIAL ARRIVES IN CANARY ISLANDS FOR TALKS

AB070631 Paris AFP in English 0415 GMT 7 Jun 81

[Text] Santa Cruz, Canary Island, 7 Jun (AFP)--Eem Kodjo, secretary-general of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), arrived here yesterday for four days of talks with Spanish officials and members of the Canary Islands political parties.

He is accompanied by Foreign Affairs Secretary of State Carlos Robles Piquer. Mr Kodjo is to meet King Juan Carlos I when he returns to Madrid.

The Canary Islands, off the northwest coast of Africa, form two provinces of Spain.

The liberation committee of the OAU 13 years ago recognised a separatist group seeking their independence, the Movement for Self-Determination and Independence of the Canary Archipelago (MPAIAC). Ten years later the same committee recommended material and financial aid for MPAIAC, but an ensuing OAU summit failed to follow through, although the Council of Ministers formed a special Canaries decolonization commission.

MPAIAC, headed by lawyer Antonio Cubillo, operates out of Algiers. In 1977 and early 1978 it staged bomb attacks here on Tenerife and in Las Palmas. Mr Cubillo was seriously wounded in a knife attack in Algiers in April 1978.

Mr Cubillo has since complained to the liberation committee about getting only nice words without effect from the OAU.

FOREIGN OFFICE 'CONDEMNS' ISRAELI RAID ON IRAQ

LD081940 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1922 GMT 8 Jun 81

[Text] The Israeli air attack on the Iraqi atomic reactor near Baghdad has been condemned by the Foreign Office in London as a grave breach of international law.

A Foreign Office spokesman said Britain did not yet have confirmation of the raid "but it appears to have been an unprovoked attack."

"We can only condemn such a grave breach of international law which could have the most serious consequences."

DEFENSE SECRETARY DEFENDS TRIDENT MISSILE COSTS

[Nicholas Comfort report]

[Text] The controversial Trident missile would give much better value than some existing defence commitments and projects, Mr Nott, defence secretary, said in Nottingham yesterday.

Mr Mott set as the target for the defence review the securing of "more defence from more money, rather than less defence from even more money."

And in an apparent criticism of Conservative MPs who fear cuts in the Royal Navy and elsewhere, he asked: "What will make the Russians think--the Russians, not the West, because deterrence turns on what the other side thinks, not what we think?" The real question we have to ask is what is more likely, in terms of defence capabilities, to achieve NATO's objective, the preservation of peace. What would help us most in our defences, in making the Russians hesitate before launching an attack? More tanks, when they already have 17,500 on the central front to the British 600? More Tornadoes, when they already have a numerical superiority in modern combat aircraft? Or an updated British nuclear deterrent? The answer is plain: Trident is not only a numerical addition to the nuclear deterrence of America: It involves a quite different multiplication of risk to a potential aggressor which only the United Kingdom can provide to NATO.

"Of course Trident will be expensive and of course money which has been spent on Trident is not money which can be spent on other things. But many equipment projects are expensive."

Mr Nott said he estimated the cost of Trident at about 5,000 million pounds (at September, 1980, prices). "This expenditure will be spread over 15 years, taking on average only three per cent of the defence budget and 6 per cent of the equipment budget. For that small proportion of the budget, we get a complete capability, of great deterrent worth, and we get a force which is cheap to run."

POLL RESULTS PUBLISHED ON MEMBERSHIP IN EEC

LD011459 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 1 Jun 81 p 10

[Text] By a margin of more than two to one, the British people think the Common Market is a bad thing for Britain, according to the latest Gallup poll for THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The poll was carried out as Britain approaches the second anniversary of the first direct election to the European Parliament. The finding contrasts with the result of the referendum six years ago when the country voted approximately two to one for the market. The latest opinion poll indicates, however, that there is still majority support for the general idea of the unification of Western Europe.

To a question about the government's policy on the Common Market, the majority of people (54 per cent) indicated that they thought the government were not tough enough. Seven per cent thought they were too tough, and 26 per cent said their policy was about right.

One indication of the public's lack of interest in the European Parliament is the low awareness of that parliament: only one in three (31 per cent) people have seen or heard anything about it in the papers, on radio or on TV recently. The public's view of a British Euro MP shows little change over the period. The majority (61 per cent) think a British member of the European Parliament should support the interests of Britain all the time, while 31 per cent believe he should give priority support to things that are good for the Community as a whole. Two years ago, the figures were 59 per cent and 31 per cent respectively.

Answers to the question, "generally speaking, do you think the British membership of the Common Market is a good thing, a bad thing or neither good nor bad?" were:

	Today Percent	Oct 1979 Percent	June 1979 Percent
Good thing	21	24	37
Bad thing	50	54	34
Neither good/bad	21	17	19
Don't know	8	5	10

Given this finding, it is not surprising that one in two people would be relieved if they were to hear that the Common Market had been scrapped. Sixteen per cent would be very sorry to be told this, and 28 per cent would be indifferent to the news.

Scepticism about the unity of the Community persists practically unchanged. The vast majority (80 per cent) of the British public think the EEC is divided, with the French, as in the past, being almost solely blamed for this. Replies to the question: "In general, are you for or against efforts being made to unify Western Europe?" were:

	Today Percent	June 1979 Percent
For--very much	24	25
--to some extent	38	36
Against--to some extent	10	13
--very much	5	7
Don't know	23	19

This latest study was conducted among a nationally representative sample of 972 electors in more than 100 districts, between May 19 and 26.

NONALIGNED SYMPOSIUM ENDS SESSION IN NICOSIA

NC091016 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 9 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] The nonalignment symposium which started last Friday at the Filoxenia Hotel, organised by the permanent secretary of the Progressive and Socialist Organisations of the Mediterranean (PSOM), and hosted by the Cyprus socialist EDEK party, has concluded yesterday. At a press conference, the chairman of the symposium, Dr Vasos Lissaridhis, said the conclusion of the symposium will be carried forward through the permanent secretariat at the Algiers conference that is due early in 1982.

The symposium, Dr Lissaridhis said, discussed the effectiveness of the Nonaligned Movement and the role it plays in the political field. It also examined the cultural role of the Nonaligned Movement and its part in telecommunications.

The members, Dr Lissaridhis said, expressed concern about Middle East developments and dealt with the Cyprus problem as well. They noted the violation of nonaligned principles and condemned the aggressive policy of Turkey, emphasizing that any Cyprus settlement must be based on UN resolutions and principles, endorsed by the nonaligned.

The symposium also discussed the question of the creation of a new economic order that would allow a better understanding among the developing countries and would promote their interests as well as the return of peace in the region. Dr Lissaridhis said he assured the delegates of the Cypriot people's solidarity with those who dight for their freedom.

The assistant general secretary of PSOM, Mr Madi, said the symposium had proved its value and he reaffirmed support for the Cyprus struggle. The smyposium was attended by more than 80 delegates from socialist, communist and progressive parties from 19 Mediterranean countries, including France, Yugoslavia, Algeria, Libya and Malta.

KHARAVI DISPLEASED WITH ROLANDHIS' PRC VISIT

NC090855 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 9 Jun 81 p 3

[From the "Views and Comments" column: "Justified Question"]

[Text] We have always backed the government's drive to develop Cyprus' relations with all countries. We have repeatedly expressed the need for the development of diplomatic activities and the need for Cyprus to be represented in many parts of the world where our weaknesses are obvious. This is a very serious issue--we would say it is of vital importance--because it concerns securing support in the international arena against the unacceptable invasion and occupation by Turkish troops.

Yet, despite all this, we admit we are surprised by Foreign Minister Rolandhis' sudden visit to China, because despite its status as a permanent member of the Security Council, China has displayed an inadmissibly negative attitude toward the Cyprus problem. In the best of cases, it abstains from voting and fails even to condemn Turkey's aggression against a small neighboring state. Thus, we wonder what purpose will be served by this visit during a critical period when the foreign minister must work tediously to secure active support from many countries.

We are of the opinion that Mr Rolandhis' visit to China is a purely formal visit, without content and without serious preparation. Thus, we do not expect to see positive results or a substantive change in China's negative and hostile attitude toward Cyprus, and it is justifiable to ask: What purpose will the visit serve, at a time when the foreign minister has so many other serious issues to attend to?

POLICE SEE ARSONISTS LINKED TO WELCH ASSASSINS

NC081302 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 7 Jun 81 pp 1, 14

[Excerpt] Irrespective of yesterday's developments on the arson issue, the police believe that there is a "common denominator" among the organization that set fire to the four department stores in the center of Athens--considered for certain to be the "October 1980" organization--the"Popular Revolutionary Struggle" (ELA), which is accused of a large number of explosions and cases of arson, and the "17 November" organization, which claimed responsibility for the murders of Richard Welch, Evangelos Malios, Pandelis Petrou and Dhim Stamouli. These conclusions were made by "higher" units of the security service that have been "involved" in the arson cases involving the four department stores in the center of Athens.

These "units" are assessing data that have arisen from police investigations since the terrorist acts occurred and over the past 5 years. Moreover, according to the police, the sisters Evangelia (Litsa) and Katerina Tsangaraki belong to a branch of this terrorist organization, which changes its name and probably its structure in order to mislead the police.

MITSOTAKIS SAYS U.S. BASES WILL CONTINUE TO OPERATE

NC081252 Athens EXORMISIS in Greek 7 Jun 81 pp 1, 15

[Text] Despite the substantive concessions that Foreign Minister Mitsotakis made during the talks, the United States did not agree to "concede" even to Mr Y. Rallis' elementary conditions. These conditions would have allowed the New Democracy government to appear before Parliament and the Greek people and announce the signing of the Greek-U.S. base agreement.

The degree of the deadlock that was created last Wednesday night is shown by Thursday's quickly scheduled meeting presided over by President Karamanlis. Present at the meeting were Prime Minister Rallis, Minister of National Defense Averof, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and a small number (two or three) of other officials. The fundamental questions that were asked at this meeting were whether it is possible to continue the talks and whether the negotiating process should be frozen and the status of the bases as agreed from 1953 to 1956 should be continued.

The foreign minister's appeal for the possibility of certain dignified conditions being "conceded" in to save appearances and make possible the presentation of the agreement to the people--without the text of the agreement becoming an election catalyst for New Democracy--did not bear fruit despite the Greek side's decisive concessions.

As reported in the daily press, U.S. Ambassador McCloskey has even rejected the Greek Government's request for the supply of modern military equipment with the excuse "that the U.S. supply is exhausted." On this issue, U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger has sent a letter to Mr Averof explaining the reasons for the "U.S. inability to supply" such equipment.

When asked yesterday at noon by a journalist at the weekly Friday meet the press meeting whether the government will denounce the existing agreement since the negotiations for the signing of a new agreement have reached a standstill, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis replied: Not at the beginning.... the bases will remain and will operate according to the old status until the elections....

It is evident that Rallis' government has not dared even to give the U.S. side a time limit for the revision of the Greek-U.S. agreement on the bases. The fact is that the government's indecisiveness and the "protective" spirit that the foreign minister abides by have led to the U.S. intransigence, which can only exist in an occupied country.

Papandreou Position Assailed

NC081523 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 7 Jun 81 pp 1, 3

[Comment by Stamos Zoulas]

[Excerpts] The question of the U.S. bases is already right in the center of the political fight between New Democracy and PASOK. But according to many indications this is a "conventional" fight, particularly on the part of A. Papandreou, who again appears to covertly hate what he overtly seeks--that is, the signing of a new agreement with the United States prior to the elections is something that would better serve PASOK's political activities, and less the government. However, a third factor, which is decisive for any outcome of the Greek-U.S. talks, intervenes in the continuing controversy, even though this controversy might be conventional. This factor is Washington's intentions or according to some others, Washington's calculations in view of the Greek elections.

There is no doubt that the question of the bases was the axis of A. Papandreou's open letter to the prime minister last Monday. The most important point of the letter is confined to what the PASOK president "did not want" to point out.

According to government quarters, Mr A. Papandreou confined himself to the laying down of the position that the government must avoid signing an agreement during this period until the elections. Papandreou failed to say what he himself would do if his demand is not accepted and next autumn, when he comes to power-- or hopes to--he finds himself before a fait accompli. This "failure" is more characteristic if one takes into consideration the fact that the pro-Papandreou papers had reported in advance that the PASOK chairman was to notify the prime minister that his party, as the governnent, "would consider as null and void any agreement that the present government would sign hastily." Definitely such a statement would have been much more effective if Mr A. Papandreou wanted to really discourage Washington in connection with the question of the immediate signing of an agreement.

It is recalled in this connection that Mr A. Papandreou's declaration for the "immediate and complete removal of the bases of death" has now been replaced by the following stand: "PASOK admits that it may not be possible for the NATO and U.S. bases to be removed from Greece immediately. Thus, it is ready to accept the temporary presence of such bases on Greek territory provided that..." and so forth.

Thus, as of the moment that PASOK proceeded from an absolutely negative stand to a compromising one, it is obvious that the terms and the prerequisites for the operation of the U.S. bases do not constitute for A. Papandreou aggressive weapons for the elections struggle, but rather minefields, which he is trying to bypass.

From the U.S. attitude toward the continuing negotiations it is concluded that Washington is less concerned about the postponement of the signing of the agreement and more thoughtful about the likely closing of the question prior to the Greek elections.

This established fact definitely constitutes a change in policy. A few months ago it was the U.S. side that was in a hurry, and the possibility of the New Democracy Party losing an overall parliamentary majority was the basic factor for the haste of the United States.

Thus, political observers have justifiably pointed out that Washington's change in attitude coincides with Mr A. Papandreou's revised position toward the pending question of the bases. The question is whether the U.S. policy on this concrete question is solely based on PASOK's "controversial" public statements and on indirect reassurances, or whether the United States has already secured additional and concrete affirmations which, to this moment, are unknown to the Greek Government.

TEXT OF PRIME MINISTER'S 6 JUNE NEWS CONFERENCE

TA061609 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1445 GMT 6 Jun 81

[Text] Ankara, 6 June (AA)--Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu made his third press conference since he assumed office. Following is the text of it:

Distinguished representatives of the Turkish and foreign press, radio and television, it is an honour for me to greet you at this press conference which is the third since I assumed office.

In my capacity as prime minister I would like to explain to you, and through your media to the public opinion, our performance during the last eight months and projects to be realized by our government in the coming months.

As I indicated in my previous press conferences, our government had to solve urgently two main problems which our country had been confronted with. The first was to reinstate the inviolability of life and property and to reestablish the state authority while the second was to rejuvenate the Turkish economy which was affected adversely by the high rate of inflation. In this press conference I shall dwell upon the measures taken with regard to these two major problems as well as the measures envisaged for the future.

Anarchy and Combat Against Terrorism

Distinguished members of the press, in order to make a realistic evaluation of the results of the combat carried out against anarchy and terrorism, I would like to inform the public of the comparative figures relating to the terrorist activities witnessed during the 18 months covering the period from 12 March 1979 through 11 September 1980 and the last 9 months period covering 12 September 1980 through 2 June 1981.

Within the 18 months period prior to 12 September 1980, 8,024 armed attacks took place in 20 provinces alone where the martial law had been proclaimed, whereas this figure dropped to 558 during the 9 months period following September 12, 1980.

Within the 18 months preceding September 12, 1980, in 20 provinces where martial law has been in effect, 8,407 citizens were injured as a result of terrorist activities. This figure had declined to 619 during the following 9 months, in the whole country.

Within the 18 months period preceding 12 September, 1980, in 20 provinces where the martial law had been in effect, 3,374 persons lost their lives due to anarchy and terrorist activities. Within the 9 months period after 12 September this mortality figure dropped to 412 all over the country.

The comparative figures which I have just presented reveal that due to vigorous efforts exerted by the martial law and security forces, order and tranquillity have been reestablished in our beloved country.

32 dedicated and valiant members of the army and security forces lost their lives in line of duty after the 12th of September 1980, in the process of protecting peace and [word indistinct] of our citizens. [words indistinct] The fond memories of our martyrs I would like to express the Turkish nation's deep gratitude to them and their grieved families.

Distinguished members of the press, with a view to create a full understanding of the turmoil into with Turkey was dragged before 12 September 1980, I would like to provide you and through you the public opinion with some more comparative figures this time with regard to arms and ammunition which have been seized after 12 September 1980.

While the number of infantry rifles, automatic rifles, hunting rifles, pistols and submachineguns seized by the security forces before 12 September 1980 in a period of 16 months in 20 provinces where martial law was in effect totalled 22,732, the number of such weapons seized in the whole of Turkey, after September 12th within a (?period) of approximately 9 months amounted to 473,553.

Apart from the 473,553 weapons seized by the security forces after 12 September 1980, another 160,170 weapons have been handed in by the citizens themselves to the security forces. Thus, after 12 September 1980, 633,724 rifles, pistols and similar weapons were handed over to or seized by the security forces. These weapons included such items as rocket launchers, anti-aircraft machineguns, mortars and hand grenades.

It is possible to meet the requirements of an army with this many weapons. As you see, our country had been turned into an arsenal. Consequently, peace and security in the country no more existed and the people were forced to live in their homes or business places in fear and panic.

During the months preceding 12 September 1980, an average of 22 persons were losing their lives every day as a result of anarchy and terrorist activities. Most happily, at present this number has dropped below an average of one per day, thus our beautiful country has become a place where everybody can live in peace and security.

On behalf of the great Turkish nation, I would like to express my gratitude to our armed forces and security force who have spared no effort beyond human capabilities and some of those members became martyrs, for the sake of the peace and security of our great nation.

Distinguished representatives of the press, due to effective measures taken, some of the anarchists realized that it will be impossible to find shelter in Turkey any longer and have unfortunately fled the country. These are being closely watched and necessary information is being furnished to the countries where they may possibly be staying. These fugitives are elements of anarchy and terror, wanted for murdering or wounding people, and as such, cannot be regarded as political criminals. Undoubtedly, they constitute a danger also for these countries in which they stay.

For this reason, countries whom the Turkish Government approaches should duly and properly consider and act upon our representations. Should they fail to do so, fatal incidents which may occur can annoy us and them alike. The subject has no bearing whatever on human rights and freedoms or political crime. It is a fact that this should not be overlooked.

The assassination attempt against the life of the most reverend spiritual leader of the Catholic world, Pope John Paul II, on 13 May 1981, has been a source of profound sorrow for us as well as for the whole of mankind. Our only consolation is his steady recovery and total regaining of his health with every passing day.

I would like to take this opportunity to reiterate once again that all countries in the world must unreservedly cooperate in the combat against anarchy and terrorism. It is imperative that all states should close their doors to those who try to take refuge in their countries after taking part in terrorist activities. Failure in this respect would render it impossible to eradicate anarchy and terror from our world. We are ready for any kind of cooperation on this subject. It is our hope that all the other states should appreciate the necessity of acting in a similar manner.

Working Life and Workers Abroad

Distinguished members of the press, all the efforts are made for the best preservation and amelioration of the social and economic conditions of the workers. An indirect wage guarantee was ensured for the wage earners by curbing the rate of inflation, and consequently bringing the price increases to reasonable levels.

Apart from these, the legislative arrangements which render collective bargaining agreements effective anew, in cases of social necessity, have been put into force.

Hence, while our decision regarding the preservation of the collective bargaining system has been confirmed, in this transitional period the maintenance and improvement of the benefits of the syndicated workers have also been obtained.

The High Council of Arbitration restitutes the effectiveness of the expired collective bargaining agreements. Consequently, our workers may now benefit from new wage increases and social assistance which will ensue these collective bargaining agreements. Presently, 146,436 workers benefit from the collective bargaining agreements which are rendered effective once again by the High Council of Arbitration.

Keeping in mind the possibility that there could be some inevitable delays in the deliberations of the High Council of Arbitration, as a protective measure, the principle of advance payments by the employers to the employees which are within the scope of the already expired collective bargaining agreements which will terminate in 1981, is adopted.

Minimum wages for the workers including those in the sectors of agriculture and forestry have been fixed anew. By unanimous decision of the employees, employers and the government representatives, and taking into account prevailing circumstances, an 85 percent increase had been realized in minimum wages.

Unfortunately, our workers retiring in recent years either had not obtained seniority compensation at all--the return of their years of labour--or received incomplete payments. As a matter of fact, when our government assumed office, it had been realized that the debt of the state to the workers who retired from the state-owned enterprises had reached approximately 11 billion Turkish liras since July 1978. Today, I am happy to state that a major portion of this debt has already been eliminated and the remaining 1,428 billion Turkish liras will be paid by June 1981.

I hasten to state that the value of the labor of our honourable worker citizens will completely be paid both during the course of their work as well as in their retirement. We can never tolerate, however, the disruption of the [word indistinct] order by certain political aims under the pretext of "workers rights." I am confident that our worker brothers will never pay attention to deliberate and negative propaganda of all kinds.

They have all the opportunities to work and to be prosperous parallel to their labor. Our government considers the value of the labor of our workers as sacred and is determined to fully guarantee it.

Distinguished members of the press, the number of our workers abroad was 900 thousand at the end of 1980. Together with the family members this figure exceeds 2 million. Of our workers abroad, 87 percent is in the European countries, whereas 13 percent of them is in Libya and in other Middle Eastern countries as well as in Australia.

I have to stress at the outset that rapid solution of the problems of these workers and of their wives and children, and effective and efficient protection of their rights and benefits through efficient measures remain a subject of which our government is sensitive.

We attach great importance particularly to the issue enabling our children abroad--the number of which is nearly 470,000 today--to benefit from the educational facilities of the countries in which they reside, in equal and adequate terms. We also pay special attention to ensure that courses on Turkish language and culture should have the necessary importance in the school curricula.

With the amendments introduced in the citizenship law, facilities have been provided in order to solve the problems faced by our citizens abroad. Interpreter and translation services required at work dispute cases are ensured on a gratis basis for our workers in Federal Germany, as of 1st June 1980.

With a decision taken by the Turkish-EEC Joint Council, new provisions are introduced facilitating our workers, their wives and children to have easier access to the labour market of the countries in which they reside.

Necessary studies are being carried out to enact expeditiously bilateral and multilateral agreements which will bring about provisions in favor of our workers abroad.

In this context, the existing bilateral social security agreements with The Netherlands, Switzerland and Belgium were modified to meet present needs and the recently signed social security agreements with Sweden and Norway were ratified and our workers employed in those countries and their family members were provided with the necessary social guarantee. Necessary representations for concluding social security agreements with other countries, especially the Middle Eastern countries, as well as efforts for improving the existing social security agreement with Libya are continuing.

On the other hand, the multilateral "European agreement on the legal status of migrant workers" has been ratified. By this agreement, an important step has been taken towards ensuring equal treatment for migrant workers by the states where they are employed with the nationals of the signatory countries as far as their living and working conditions are concerned.

Furthermore, provisions were made for broadening alimony claims and facilitating the collection of alimony through the ratification of "the international agreement for the recognition and execution of alimony obligation judgements."

Agricultural and Rural Problems

Distinguished members of the press, we are closely interested with the problems of our farmers who constitute the [word indistinct] of our economy. Necessary measures have been taken to procure the fertilizers to our farmers promptly and in sufficient quantity, which are very essential for agriculture.

Our fertilizer stocks for the year 1981 are sufficient. This year there will be no problem in the way of procuring fertilizers.

Our government has also made some new arrangements for the sale of agricultural equipment and machinery. A reduction between 3 to 12 percent on tractor prices, and a reduction between 5 to 5 [as received] percent on agricultural machinery and tools have been introduced.

Moreover, some payment facilities are brought about for our farmers. For example, cash payment on tractor sales has been reduced from 670,000 Turkish liras to 480,000 Turkish liras, and the payment period for the balance account is increased from 2 to 3 years.

Credit limits have been increased in the agricultural loans. Thus intensive credit utilization facilities have been achieved. In this context, on 1st May 1981, interests of credits available from the Turkish Bank of Agriculture have been reduced to 19.5 percent from 24 percent. In addition credits pertaining to livestock have been expanded by 100 percent and the volume of credits on agricultural products, machinery and tools, including tractors have been increased by 50 percent.

Our government is determined to render infrastructural services to our rural inhabitants who constitute the majority and most important portion of our population within most (?rational) and objective principles.

Hence, we have planned the construction of 9,500 km of stabilized and 8,500 km of smooth surfaced road in 1981. Apart from this, 1,792 km of asphalt covering 118,000 km of maintenance services for the village roads is planned in this year.

This year's programme also encompasses the supply of drinking water to 4,040 units, such as districts, villages and towns. For this purpose, 33 billion 681 million Turkish liras has been allocated from the national budget.

With the TOPRAKSU (soil and water) budget which has increased to 19 billion dollars by 134 percent of increase in 1981, works for small scale irrigaton, development of farming areas, drainage and soil improvement, soil preservation services and pools will be carried out.

For arrangement for settlement in rural areas, renovation of villages on earthquake belts, domestic housing problems, 489 projects have been planned for this purpose amounting to 4.8 billion Turkish liras in the 1981 program period.

In brief, the total investments to the rural areas, with [word indistinct] purpose will be 48 billion Turkish liras in 1981. We are resolved to take all the necessary steps in order to enable our villagers to fully enjoy the benefits of the 20th Century and to make our citizens, who live in rural areas, more prosperous and contented.

National Education

Distinguished members of the press, all the necessary measures are taken in order to make our schools and universities "educational institutions" in the real sense, to where the parents can send their children without any fear and anxiety. The campaign against illiteracy which is programmed within the celebration activities of Ataturk centennial by our government is implemented with great care.

By 15 May 1981, the number of courses opened for this purpose and the number of those who attended these courses have reached to 44,019 and 1,045,737 respectively. Within this context we have programmed to teach how to read and write to 3 million people in 1981.

Economic Situation and Economic Policy

Distingiushed members of the press, the essence of the economic policy currently implemented is to bring the economy to its normal conditions by keeping the inflationary pressure under control, compensating the gap arising from shortage of foreign resources, eliminating the scarcities which hinder the production and the bottlenecks in the commodity supplies. Consequently, great attention is paid to make the resource allocations in conformity with the economic criteria, and to bring public financing under control.

Since the beginning of 1981, the rate of price increases has decreased, even receded, and in some months has begun acquiring its normal course. Within a short period of time, the inflation increase rate has fallen from three digit figures to 30 percent. According to the current indicators, it is quite probable that the inflation rate would be below 40 percent, already envisaged for the year 1981.

Parallel to this positive situation in prices, the increase in exports is still continuing since September 1980. Total exports have increased by 56 percent in the recent 6 months (November 1980-March 1981) as compared to the same period of the previous year. As far as the rate of increase in non-agricultural exports is concerned, an increase of 87 percent has been achieved.

The industrial exports in March 1981 show a 50 percent increase as compared to the corresponding month of the last year. On the other hand, the volume of business committed by the Turkish contractors in Middle East countries also shows a continuous increase. Presently, the sum of the tenders already contracted is about 5 billion dollars.

The long-awaited export boom campaign in Turkey had really started with the measures taken. Today, a great interest for export business is prevalent among our enterpreneurs of all sizes. Looking at the outcome of the first quarter in 1981 it seems that the total imports this year would be in the vicinity of 9 billion dollars.

Transfers for imports are being made as scheduled. The value of imports for the first quarter is 2 billion 298 million dollars. In our foreign exchange policy, flexible currency rates are being applied by fixing the parities and cross-exchange rates on a daily basis.

Reformative laws on tax system and its organization are put into force in order to sustain the economic development within stability and social justice. As a result of these arrangements substantial increase in public revenues is expected in the fiscal year of 1981.

These increases in revenues will result in an important decrease in the demand for the funds of the Central Bank.

Although, estimates concerning the rate of realization of the budget revenues should be made only after obtaining the May 1981 revenue figures, nevertheless, first estimates based on March and April 1981 revenue figures indicate that sufficient revenues would be raised to meet the total of the 1981 budget expenditures and the 1981 budget would be balanced.

The increasing trend of production of 100 sampled items which started in the last few months of 1980 is still continuing in the first quarter of 1981. In the first three months of 1981 the production levels of lignite, filtered cigarettes, ordinary cigarettes and fertilizer have risen by 12 percent, 150 percent, 85 percent and 80 percent respectively. Increase in energy production is about 8 percent as of 31st April, 1981. On the other hand substantial production increases could be viewed in the textile, garment, food, cement and petroleum product industries.

In this connection, I would like to give an example. The increase achieved in chemical fertilizer production had resulted in foreign currency savings amounting to 316 million dollars, in 1981.

Distinguished members of the press, our government closely follows the position which the economy is in, and makes efforts to overcome the problems faced during this transitional period, without making any concessions from the main targets. The arrangements on expenditure-tax and installment sales and in particular the new export promotion tax and credit facilities are among these measures. With the implementation of the legislation on mass housing, it will be possible to reactivate the construction sector and the production related to this sector.

Our economic program is designed to introduce and promote the power of enterprise. If we adhere ourselves to this program with faith and trust then there will be no return to a condition where there was blackmarket, shortages and insecurity, and it will be possible to achieve our economic development with stability.

While formulating the economic measures, we put serious emphasis on the measures which will decrease the burden and the deprivations which our citizens with low and fixed incomes, government officials and the retired in particular had faced during the past years.

We never (?regarded) the present financial opportunities that the government officials and the retired enjoy as a result of the amendments made in the income tax law and in the regulations concerning the retired government officials, workers and artisans as sufficient. The work on measures to improve the living standards of the government officials and the retired are continuously carried on.

Tourism

Distinguished members of the press, restoration of peace and security in the country since 12th September, has created new opportunities for tourism. In our government programme, it is decided that the government would lay down the infrastructure in the tourism sector and the superstructure would be realized by the private sector and it is envisaged that this should be encouraged.

Draft laws on the preservation of touristic resources and the balanced development of this potential have been placed in the agenda of the Council of Ministers.

In order to meet the credit requirements of private sector for their investment financing, necessary measures are being taken to increase the funds of tourism Bank of Turkey. Furthermore, measures are taken to encourage the foreign investment in the tourism sector of our country.

Foreign Policy

Distinguished members of the press, it is certain that the NATO alliance bears a great importance for the balance of security which is the indispensible element of the world peace. Our cooperation with our NATO allies and in this context with the United States of America continues. We appreciate the efforts made in the way to contribute to Turkey's defense capability and economic development. We hope that these contributions will be accelerated and increased in conformity with the special palce of Turkey within the alliance.

The developments observed in our region have once again exhibited Turkey's importance for insuring the security and stability in the area. The importance of a powerful Turkey to secure the stability in the region is becoming more evident every passing day.

Our relations with the European Economic Community is developing positively. The preparations for the full membership of Turkey to the European Economic Community have seriously been initiated in accordance with the decision taken at the meeting of the National Security Council on the 25th of March 1981.

The programme which is agreed upon for the development of our membership relations with the European Economic Community is being applied with due attention.

The customs regime applied to our agricultural products export to the member countries of the EEC has been ameliorated (?from) the beginning of this year and the duty free importation of all our agricultural products by the Community within a period of six years has been realized.

We attach due importance to the developments of our political and economic relations with the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries including those which are our neighbours, based on mutual respect and interest.

While the armed clash still continues between our neighbours in the Middle East, Iran and Iraq, the increased tension in Lebanon and the emergence of the confrontation possibility between Syria and Israel are causes of deep concern. Turkey is of the opinion that a new confrontation in the area will yield (?grave) consequences for the countries of the region. We wish that the efforts spent to eliminate the existing tension in the region will produce positive results.

Our efforts towards the betterment of our relations with Greece continue. Our minister of foreign affairs has met the Greek foreign minister in Rome, during the NATO ministerial council meeting. At this meeting it has been agreed that the dialogue between the two countries will be continued between the Foreign Ministry secretaries-general and the foreign ministers. We regard this decision for the continuation of this dialogue as a positive development. It is our sincere wish that all the existing problems between Turkey and Greece would be solved through negotiations.

The positive statement as regards our bilateral relations made by Mr Rallis, prime minister of Greece, at the press meeting on May 30 is regarded with appreciation and it is a source of satisfaction for us to observe that our view as to all existing problems can be solved through constructive dialogue is also shared by the Greek prime minister.

Since 12 September 1980, [number indistinct] of the draft laws submitted by our government (?were) approved by the National Security Council and were put into force. Among them there are laws on financial issues and internal security which could not have been passed for many years. Since my last press meeting, there have been important laws put into force on various dates, among which there are the law on the revenues of the municipalities, law on the supreme council of judges and prosecutors, law on training and education indemnity payment for the teachers, law amending some articles of the law on penal (?proceedings), law amending tax proceedings law.

Activities of commemoration of the centennial of Ataturk, founder of the Turkish Republic, have been intensified last May. Turkish culture days organized at the UNESCO headquarters have accorded once again the opportunity to exhibit the Turkish art and culture. The programs arranged for this purpose at UNESCO headquarters in Paris between 7 to 9 May 1981, were met with great interest. Similar activities will continue to take place through "cultural weeks" in Bonn, Rome, London and Washington.

The ceremony held in Thessalonica at "Ataturk House" had a special meaning.

The government activities in the last 8.5 months have been directed towards two aims. One of these aims was to save the country's economy from the impasse it was dragged into and to provide a healthy structure, and the other was to establish peace and security in Turkey which had come to the brink of a civil war.

In these two fields very important progress has been achieved. The economic life has been stabilized and in the country peace and security have been established.

Unfortunately it is not yet possible to say that our problems have been completely solved. The members of the anarchy and terror centers, who have not yet been caught still continue their inhuman activities and wreckless murders in the country and abroad.

As a matter of fact, on 24 May 1981 a Turkish Airlines plane had been hijacked by terrorists to Bulgaria. It is certainly gratifying that this adventure has been positively concluded without harming anybody and that the passengers safely returned to Turkey. The vigilance and courage of the crew and the passengers of the plane, (?which will) set an example, played a very important role in the happy ending of the incident. I would once again like to express my thanks to those who have contributed to this conclusion.

One of the subjects to which our government attaches emphasis is the struggle against bribery, abuses and impropriety. It is essential for our citizens to have the opportunity to easily seek for their rights in the government offices and for the government officials to extend every possible effort and sacrifice for the full realization of security, happiness and prosperity in our beautiful country.

The biggest encouragement in this regard will be the support and the confidence of the great Turkish nation.

I thank you all for your attention.

[Text] Ankara, 5 Jun (AA)--Turkish Foreign Minister spokesman Oktay Iscen said the ministry had no information about the existence of a "Turkish Islamic Revolutionary Army" which allegedly claimed responsibility for a bomb attack in Paris against an Armenian church which did not injure anyone, the third such attack in the past eight days. The incidents in Paris could have been staged by Armenian terrorists to incite Armenians, sources involved predicted.

KREISKY CALLS ISRAELI RAID 'INEXCUSABLE ACT'

AU091245 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1029 GMT 9 Jun 81

[Chancellor Bruno Kreisky comment on Israeli air raid on Iraqi nuclear reactor, at a Vienna news conference following the weekly cabinet meeting on 9 June--recorded]

[Text] Well, I would like to make a remark here for which I alone am responsible. I regard the whole thing as an inexcusable act which in fact under normal circumstances must be called almost herostratic [allusion to ancient Greek, Herostratos, who set fire to the Temple of Diana at Ephesos 356 BC in order to become famous]. And as far as the Middle East is concerned, it must be said that certainly the election situation enters into this, but that actually makes the matter even more intolerable and incomprehensible. [Words indistinct] without regard for the consequences it will entail for peace altogether and for.... [voice trails off] The situation seems to me so irresponsible that I cannot qualify it, regardless of how you view the matter. Here they build a powerplant, a nuclear powerplant, and just before it is completed it is simply destroyed by bombs. That is simply the law of the jungle, and it really cannot be tolerated by the Western world. But to me it is unfortunately not surprising.

I see some of you here who 2 or 3 years ago most bitterly reproached me when I characterized this unscrupulosness, this irresponsibility vis-a-vis developments--indeed this also involves Israel's own development. I don't want to prejudge the policy of the West, but I cannot imagine that the United States, Great Britain, France; that is, the three most reliable friends of Israel, can tolerate such a policy. I just cannot imagine it.

ETHIOPIAN MINISTERS ARRIVE FOR COOPERATION TALKS

LD081407 Brussels LE SOIR in French 2 Jun 81 p 3

[Excerpt] An important Ethiopian delegation including several ministers and headed by Fisha Desta, deputy secretary general of the Dergue (provisional military administrative council), arrived Saturday in Brussels.

We met with several of the 14 members of the delegation, whose mission is to present to the Belgian authorities and Common Market leaders the record of reforms achieved in Ethiopia since the revolutionary regime which succeeded the empire came to power. These bilateral and multilateral talks should lead to the finalization of several cooperation projects in the economic, trade and technological fields.

It was stressed that Belgian-Ethiopian relations stem from a long-standing friendship. Relations with the EC are also proceeding well." Contacts will also be established with the European Parliament.

We were told that there should be no misunderstanding about this visit. It is in no way a turning point in Ethiopian policy: Addis Ababa has always wished to maintain good relations both with Eastern bloc countries and with the others, but some have refused to accept the change of regime which took place 7 years ago.

LAWYERS TO BREAK TIES WITH CZECHOSLOVAK GROUP

LD051541 Brussels LE SOIR in French 27 May 81 p 3

[Text] The Belgian Association of Democratic Lawyers has been seriously concerned for some years about the way democratic freedoms are treated in Czechoslovakia. In particular, it has taken the view that the proceedings instituted against the intellectuals who signed Charter 77 and against members of the Committee for the Defense of Unjustly Prosecuted People [VONS] clearly show that the idea of the crime of opinion has been accepted in Czechoslovakia, in violation both of the Helsinki accords and of socialist legality itself, for which the accused wanted to ensure respect.

Two observers--Pierre Mertens and Viviane Brouckers--were able to verify on the spot (the former in June 1979 and the latter in the fall of 1979) the extent of violations of fundamental freedoms by the regime in power, and set forth the facts on behalf of their association.

Since then the Belgian Association of Democratic Lawyers has corresponded with its counterpart, the Czech Association of Democratic Lawyers, on visiting Prague officially at the latter's invitation to assess the situation. It had to contend with delays and refusals which have not, however, discouraged it.

Last November, an agreement was concluded in Malta during the latest general assembly of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers (of which both the national sections concerned are members). Under this agreement, a four-man delegation consisting of Jean Salmon (professor of international public law at the Free University of Brussels and former president of that university's faculty of law), Marcel Trousse (president of the Liege County court), Jules Raskin (a Liege lawyer) and Pierre Mertens (writer and secretary of the international law center at the Free University of Brussels), was to visit Czechoslovakia from 25 through 31 May. The delegation was to acquaint itself, among other things, with the authorities' official view on the nature of the current proceedings and to form its own opinion on how democratic freedoms, including the right to defense, are recognized.

Just a few days ago, the Czech association again postponed by telegram the delegation's visit, mentioning some "serious and unexpected reasons." Furthermore, Mertens, who had obtained a Czechoslovak visa, was called to the Czechoslovak Embassy on the same day and his visa was cancelled. Obviously, you may well wonder whether this further change of attitude is not connected with news about further recent arrests. Could it be that the Czechoslovak authorities and the Czech Association of Democratic Lawyers are afraid that progressive lawyers from our country might observe the scale of repression from too close a vantage point?

In view of all this, the Belgian association intends to suspend all relations with its Czech counterpart--an unprecedented development within the international association--and has denounced an attitude and made public a disagreement which are a further indication, as if this were necessary, of the impairment of democratic freedoms in Czechoslovakia. This is yet another reason for feeling concerned about the situation.

THE NETHERLANDS

PARTY LEADERS OPEN NEGOTIATIONS ON NEW CABINET

LD041307 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 2 Jun 81 p 1

[Excerpt] The Hague--The work of negotiation leaders Lubbers and De Koning will this week chiefly concentrate on investigating the possibility of a new cabinet comprising the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA), the Labor Party (PVDA) and the Democrats '66 (D '66). This does not exclude other possibilities, it was immediately added. In the next few days the bilateral talks between the negotiation leaders and the parliamentary leaders of these three parties (Van Agt, Den Uyl and Terlouw) will primarily look at whether the policy differences between these parties are insurmountable.

Thus there is no question of real negotiations between the PVDA, CDA and D'66 over the main features of a government agreement. The three leaders and the leader of the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy (VVD), Hans Wiegel, used their first talks with the negotiation leaders yesterday to draw up an inventory. These will be used in the bilateral talks, which will reveal what main problems each party leader sees in a comparison of the parties' programs.

However, it became clear yesterday that the VVD is still on the sidelines. In the first round of bilateral talks with the negotiation leaders which will also discuss the main policy problems, the VVD will not be taking part. But it is probable that Wiegel received an assurance from the negotiation leaders that the VVD would be first to be brought into the talks if the government formation period enters a second phase ("in whatever form this may take," as Wiegel put it).

During their news conference yesterday morning the two negotiation leaders stressed that their activities would not merely concentrate on exploring the willingness of the political parties to work together in a new cabinet. They would also be going into the question of what policy obstacles the party leaders saw facing as broadly based a cabinet as possible, which is one of the possibilities they must look into under the terms of the assignement they have been given.

The negotiation leaders would not primarily be investigating the political parties' willingness to work together, which had been stressed by the PVDA in particular. They also made it clear that they would not be drawing up a "national recovery plan" to put to the party leaders as a sort of package or direction-giving document, which Wiegel and Van Agt in particular wanted immediately after the elections.

BAHR DEPARTS FOR TALKS, MEETING IN MOSCOW

LD091222 Hamburg DPA in German 1047 GMT 9 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 9 Jun (DPA)--Egon Bahr, the SPD Parliamentary Group's disarmament expert, flew to Moscow today for a visit of several days. After talks with Soviet leaders, he will take part in a meeting of the Independent Commission for Disarmament and Security Questions. The meeting will be held Friday through Sunday and will be chaired by Swedish socialist leader Olof Palme.

JAPANESE PRIME MINISTER ARRIVES IN HAMBURG

[Text] Hamburg, 9 Jun (KYODO)--Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki arrived here Tuesday night on the first leg of a six-nation West European tour.

He and his party were greeted at the airport by a West German honor guard, officials of the West German Foreign Ministry, Japanese Ambassador Bunroku Yoshino and Japanese residents in Hamburg. They proceeded immediately to their hotel where they held consultations to prepare for Wednesday's meeting here between Suzuki and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

Suzuki and Schmidt are scheduled to meet alone for some three hours on Wednesday morning. They will continue their talks in the afternoon which will be participated in by Foreign Ministers Sunao Sonoda and Hans-Dietrich Genscher. They will cover international developments, particularly the situation in Poland and the North-South problem, as well as the trade problem.

Suzuki is also visiting Italy, Belgium, Britain, the Netherlands and France during his 13-day tour of Europe which is described as an unofficial tour.

OFFICIALS, NEWSPAPERS REACT TO ISRAELI ACTION

FDP Spokesman

LD091211 Hamburg DPA in German 1116 GMT 9 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 9 Jun (DPA)--The FDP's foreign and security policy spokesman, Juergen Moellemann, today described the Israeli attack on the Iraqi nuclear reactor plant as an "act of aggression contrary to international law and dangerous to peace, the consequences of whose execution and justification must at first dumbfound everyone." In a statement published in Bonn today, Moellemann said that it is quite incredible that Israeli Prime Minister Begin is not only putting a strain on Israel's good relations with its friends but is also contributing to an increasingly dangerous aggravation of the Middle East situation.

SPD Deputy Chairman

[Text] Bonn, 9 Jun (DPA)--SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski has condemned the Israeli air force strike against the Iraqi reactor plant as an "extremely grave attack," for which there is no basis in international law. He said in Bonn today that he finds it incomprehensible that the Israeli Government could have issued such an order, which must lead to an aggravation of the already dangerous Middle East situation.

Wischnewski said that the Israeli action has dealt a heavy blow to the Middle East peace efforts. Under Prime Minister Menahem Begin, Israel is exposed to the danger of worldwide isolation. He said that according to his information the Iraqi reactor center was a research plant under the supervision of the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna.

[Commentary signed R.H.: "Daredevil Reckoning"]

[Text] The latest "direct action" by the state of Israel not only elicits objections but also alarms an international public which justly dreads any new crisis report. The nuclear powers' nonproliferation policy is imperfect. It has loopholes which were utilized. And it is certain to grow even more imperfect in the future. Yet, it is a justified attempt to maintain peace with peaceful means at the cost of some injustice (export controls and surveillance). Iraq was suspected of being a potential threshold power. Suddenly attacking it in a warlike air raid for that reason isn't the proper way to pursue a nonproliferation policy. The Israelis must have had serious reasons for destroying Iraq's trial reactor while it was still under construction, a reactor which was delivered by France and which, after temporary vacancy, again was under the control of the Vienna nuclear authority.

What had so far caused the concern of international institutions dealing with nonproliferation was not the experimental reactor itself but a French-delivered first batch of 12 kg of uranium that had been highly enriched for research purposes and thus presumably could be used in weapons. In this connection, different opinions prevailed about smaller quantities of nuclear fuels usable for weaponry. One opinion says that nowadays nobody can be prevented from acquiring such material. What is decisive is whether the state involved also has the corresponding "delivery system," meaning the sophisticated vehicle (missiles) and knows how to operate it. A wide technological gap exists between the two stages, it says.

But others, and among them also Reagan's advisers, insist that such possession of bomb material in any case represents a threat. The Israelis probably were only too happy to adopt this view. The question is how much this serves the stabilization of the Middle East. Iraq, which just extricated itself from Soviet sponsorship, in its hurt pride may well be driven back into it. Granted Iraq, which insisted on continuous bloody threats against Israel, would not really have become a partner to the West despite good trade relations. Some daredevil reckonings of Israel have panned out before. Will this one too?

DIE WELT

[Friedhelm Kemna commentary: "Shock Signals"]

[Text] Israel isn't afraid of a shock effect. Being feared or even hated is an acdeptable price for its security. It is one of the historic conditions of the Jewish state that this security, threatened by the tangible will of destruction, doesn't exhaust itself in its political and diplomatic dimension. The foundation of the state was achieved by fighting with arms, and it must be defended with arms up to this day. The destruction of the Iraqi nuclear reactor is a new beat of the drums in the old and new Mideast conflict. The shock wave of the Osirak explosion is hard to predict.

But the chance that Osirak would have soon become a predictable, mortally dangerous bastion at the hostile flank of the Jewish state, has been considered the greater danger in Jerusalem. One fact that may have been involved is that Iraq is engaged in a long war of attrition on the Iranian front and cannot play the role of Israel's enemy.

But the noise of this bombing is loud enough to be heard wherever one is tinkering with strategies for the political and strategic isolation of Israel. Peace missions will not be facilitated that way, but their sense is questionable anyway as long as sworn enmity is so clearly hidden behind diplomacy playing for time.

The fighter bombers brought two "messages" to the Osirak target which are basically identical with the air and commando raids on Lebanese terrority: Israel feels militarily strong enough to safeguard itself and its borders at any time. It demonstrates its determination to implement the only lifesaving strategy of this defense, namely, control over and safeguarding of the borders, even under difficult international conditions and without concern for some "peaceful" reputation. This state which cannot rely on treaties involving the respect of its neighbors--with the exception of the Camp David partner--lives in a permanent state of emergency. This state is inconvenient, but that isn't its problem today--and not just because of the forthcoming elections.

[Fritz Ullrich Fack editorial: "How Long With Schmidt?"]

[Text] It is most honorable that Schmidt and Genscher have linked their political fates with the implementation of NATO's counterarmament decision. That applies to their steadfastness as well as to their motives, because it would have been easier for both of them to yield to strong and influential minorities in their parties--which in the case of the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD have become majorities--and to dissociate themselves from the counterarmament decision.

Genscher, who doesn't have a Willy Brandt at his side, may be able to live somehow with his party congress vote. It is doubtful, however, if Schmidt has gained more than a breathing spell in his party with his threat to resign. It's just a surface matter in the SPD, namely, the 572 missiles and cruise missiles which are supposed to be stationed in West Europe in 2 or 3 years. The party has been beset by a deeper evil--it is involved in a self-made "identity crisis."

There are several reasons. They stem mainly from the successes of the government policy, which are meager by Social Democratic standards and which have been characterized by concern for the coalition. The party is suffering from the fact that is must live with 1.2 million unemployed, with complete absence of reforms, with a steel crisis, with empty state cashboxes and with more and more burdens for the man in the street. The thorn sits even deeper, particularly in the dominating minorities, as soon as there is talk of detente and peace policies. They hold the chancellor almost personally responsible for the rapid deterioration of the climate between East and West in past years. Pursuing detente policy is certainly a moral commitment for the SPD, but it has never forgotten the political calculation that this policy was its recipe for success vis-a-vis the voter in the 1970's.

Now, however, the wind has turned. A Soviet invasion took place in Afghanistan, Poland is burdened by the latent threat of Soviet "fraternal help." Nobody can contest today that the Soviet Union has used the detente facade for unparallelled armament and the last 4 years additionally for setting up a powerful arsenal of medium-range missiles threatening Europe. It's not some incurable conservative who wants to draw arms technology consequences from this, but the federal chancellor who was nominated by the SPD.

Large sections of his party, however, vehemently resist this request. All those in the SPD who have a religious-like belief in detente rebel against it, mixing ideologically with the newly awakened pacifism in the church, in youth organizations and ecological movements. Anticapitalist emotions, supposedly suppressed successfully since Godesberg, are awakening again and turning against the new U.S. administration. One wants to have as little as possible to do with it. The fact that Schmidt thinks differently about it also estranges him vis-a-vis his party.

The dissension list is rounded out by the energy crisis, which in the chancellor's opinion forces the construction of nuclear powerplants whereas his party's majority would prefer to slow down economic growth and force people to restrict energy use. Eppler won at the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD congress in Aalen so triumphantly over Schmidt's followers (with an 80 to 20 margin) not just because he was against counterarmament, but because he represents for large parts of the party the ideological counterposition regarding nuclear energy, ecology and peace advocacy.

On the pedestal containing the monuments to leftist saints, who fight against everything Schmidt has approved and who decorate their noble political attitude with dramatic gestures of resignation, stand two more: Matthiesen and Klose. And every time one of them withdraws into himself, Willy Brandt shows them understanding and respect from Bonn. He said recently regarding "German policy"--which one?--when he was irritated for some other reason, that it was "backward and that there is even more backwardness when it comes to being intelligent in political as well as economic respects." This was, so to speak, an original recording of the tone used at the SPD leadership level.

It has indeed become a question of whether this party will tolerate its chancellor much longer. The rejecting minorities are turning slowly into majorities. Influential party members sign communist-inspired disarmament appeals despite (only lukewarm) warnings from party headquarters, take part in corresponding demonstrations, or hold unctious speeches there--as recently did the Reverend Albertz. The fraternization which once led to the ousting of Benneter, the Young Socialists chairman, no longer concerns anybody today.

The SPD is deteriorating more and more to the left, becoming more and more a searcher for the political blue flower. It wants to get out of the involvements, responsibilities and burdens of the government harness. If the Federal Government should fall over the counterarmament decision, then it would just fall, said Eppler's successor in Aalen, with a dash of salt. Large segments of the SPD would probably even consider it a relief.

NEWSPAPERS CRITICIZE BUNDESTAG BUDGET DEBATE

DW041020 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 4 Jun 81

[From the press review]

[Text] The Duesseldorf WESTDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG writes: The so-called general debate of the Bundestag on the 1981 budget had been anticipated with suspense, though it turned out to be disappointing as a whole. It didn't produce much more than an exchange of the well-known arguments. The representatives of the government parties showed a poor defense, and the attacks by the opposition were weak. All told, it was a series of many colorful mosaic pieces which as a whole, however, don't provide a finished picture. The worried citizen who listened attentively doesn't quite know even after this debate where we will go from here. He may be sure of one thing though: Times will become harder, but then, this was everybody's secret even beforehand.

SCHWARZWELDER BOTE warns against empty formulas and excessive polemics. The Bundestag budget debate will probably catch the special interest of many citizens now that all sides announce that painful cuts in laws on benefits will be inevitable. But it was impossible to derive either clarity or optimism from yesterday's debate. The chancellor's protestation that the preconditions exist for the Federal Republic to weather the worldwide difficulties better than any other state was intended to convey reassurance, yet the nervousness which Schmidt himself showed gives rise to doubts about his own courage. His arrogant rejection of any cooperation with the opposition doesn't contribute toward the solution of the menacing problems, but neither does the malicious mannerisms of the CDU/CSU which seeks to blame the worldwide crisis on the social-liberal coalition alone. Mutual mudslinging is but a waste of time and strength. The government must now act, provided it still can do so. Constructive suggestions should be forthcoming from the opposition. Simply waiting maliciously for the collapse of the coalition isn't in harmony with political necessities.

STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN notes: Yesterday's Bundestag debate on the policy of the government was in keeping with the present political situation in the Federal Republic: It was miserable. What was performed was not a struggle for the best way toward solving the difficult budget, finance, social and security policy problems, but a ritual in which oft-heard arguments were repeated as by prayer wheel. Both the government and the opposition confined themselves to polemics and trivialities. What makes all this so awkward is that they are aware of the problems yet pretend that they don't exist for the 1981 budget but only for the next budget which must be adopted a few months from now.

HANNOVERSCHE ALLGEMEINE asseses the budget debate as an affirmation of the social-liberal coalition in Bonn: Anyone who watched the chancellor and the federal foreign minister on Wednesday in the Bundestag during the general debate on the federal budget for this year cannot have gotten the impression that Schmidt and Genscher personify an unsettled or deteriorating coalition. They demonstrate without any change that they propose to endeavor jointly to overcome domestic and foreign policy difficulties. Yet the dimensions of this task became evident only in the descriptions provided by the leading politicians of the CDU/CSU opposition such as Kohl, Zimmermann, Woerner or Bluem. Even if it is necessary to concede that the Federal Government alone cannot be held responsible for a miserable budget situation because of economic influences from outside, the picture for this year and the prospects for the next nevertheless remain gloomy. So far, no side has as yet advanced to the crux of the matter in the parliamentary debates. Inevitably, this will happen once the 1982 budget is submitted because then each Bundestag faction will have to declare what sacrifices it demands, and of whom. This may well lead to dangerous differences within the coalition.

The HESSISCH/NIEDERSAECHSISCH ALLGEMEINE paints a different picture of the state of the coalition: Kohl, Kiep and Woerner not only charged the government with failure in finance policy, they also simply declared it incapable of action. This criticism, which was so massively leveled, hit the government parties particularly hard because in essence it is true. Schmidt and Genscher did not deny their internal difficulties and spoke of the great efforts which the coalition will yet have to make.

KOELNISCHE RUNDSCHAU criticizes Chancellor Schmidt for having placed the opposition at the center of his observations. The editorial states: Self-criticism or at least a changed self-assessment would have been good for Schmidt. After all, he was the one who, against better judgment, belittled the problems prior to the last Bundestag elections in the fall of 1980. It will simply no longer do for the head of government to put the old, cheap philosophy of our being better off than any other industrial state into the foreground as an argument in the present situation. In times of minor crises, faith healing might perhaps be a legitimate democratic instrument. Yet, at the moment, the signs are different. Diligent citizens are gratified indeed, when the chancellor reassures them that they haven't lived beyond their means at all in the past several years. However, such a compliment doesn't particularly promote the readiness of FRG citizens to be satisfied with a reduced standard of living.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG comments on Helmut Schmidt's attacks against the opposition: It may turn out very soon that the head of government has tripped himself up with the contemptuous remark that he doesn't need the help of the union in solving the difficulties. After all, the Bundesrat has an essential say when it comes to the announced, substantial cuts in the laws on social benefits. After the tactically unwise provocation, the chancellor cannot complain in the future when the opposition in the laender representation remains stubborn.

PAPER ON U.S. RELUCTANCE TO NEGOTIATE ON MISSILES

[Hans-Herbert Gaebel editorial: "Unpleasant Facts"]

[Text] Is it anti-American to take the key U.S. politicians at their word and thus seriously? During the debate on the nuclear medium-range missiles for West Europe during the past several weeks, not only representatives of the FRG opposition parties but also some leaders of the coalition, including the chancellor and the foreign minister, came out with remarks which justify the suspicion that an attempt is being made here to not only strangle a ticklish discussion but even to obliterate facts.

It is a fact, after all, that the U.S. Government indeed compliantly confirmed that the NATO decision of December 1979 on the medium-range missiles is valid in both parts, armament and negotiations. Yet President Reagan and his two most important secretaries, Haig and Weinberger, not to mention lower ranking personnel, continuously hint-- the former more diplomatically, the latter more directly, but both of them unmistakably--that they can muster but little enthusiasm for this NATO decision and probably also don't give it much of a chance. What else could it mean if the President, like any other statesman, doesn't want to give up the search for peace, of course not, yet adds that if there is any discussing to be done, then it should involve the choice of weapons systems and not a potential renunciation of armaments for the sake of agreements. Well, it probably was this ideal case which formed the basis of the NATO decision.

It cannot be denied that the United States wants to mix a cocktail of arms control and new strength, preferring to add more potent ingredients than Europe. The United States feels militarily inferior and also believes that it has profited less from the last decade of detente than did the Europeans at large and the Germans in particular. Is it anti-American to point out this fact and to draw obvious conclusions?

Actually, it ought to be possible to talk about this obvious and clearly audible difference, unless evil premonitions and fear of the truth have once again driven people in Europe, and not just conservatives, back to the great simplification in which everybody is thrown into the same pot in line with the tested method: naive people, the neutralists, the friends of peace with particular leanings and those hostile to the United States on principle, who see every evil as coming from the New World--all these lumped together with attentive contemporaries who show understanding for quite a lot but aren't prepared to simply ignore obvious facts.

One needn't imply that the U.S. Government negotiators will conduct only sham negotiations on purpose so as to mollify the European allies, while simultaneously leading them on a wild goose chase. Such a blunt way of doing things is not permissible, if alone by virtue of the prestige of the world power. But is it really an insinuation if we presuppose that a government which actually doesn't wish to conduct negotiations, not at this time, not under the existing military-political preconditions and, therefore, a government which can hardly be convinced of their expendiency at least at this time, will presumably not be a particularly engaged negotiator, especially not in negotiations which for technical reasons alone will be more difficult than all negotiations on arms control conducted to this day? Thus, one need not even premeditatedly delay the negotiations to exceed the short periods of time available.

It seems as though the debate on "counterarmament" in the Federal Republic has really only started and presumably will grow even more vehement. The two coalition leadership figures, Schmidt and Genscher, linked their political fate with much pathos to the decision. In that case, their readiness cannot be all too great to talk openly about the chances of success of this very fascinating NATO decision, not to mention its expendiency. Once the matter has become a decision of conscience, as it has for Foreign Minister Genscher, one will probably have to cease differentiating between wishful thinking and reality, at least before the public. [sentence as published]

This will include a more generous regard for the facts, the fact that the United States lately has been assessing the East-West relationship in an entirely different way. Experience teaches that such facts sooner or later suddenly become evident to everybody. It is easy to figure out what this foreseeable collapse of illusions can mean in a state in which many a politician has to toil not only with finance deficits but also with credibility deficits.

CHEYSSON 'INSISTENT' IN TALKS WITH ISRAELI ENVOY

[Text] External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson received for 30 minutes this morning at the Quai d'Orsay the Israeli ambassador to France, following the Israeli raid on the Tammuz nuclear center in Iraq. Cheysson was insistent on a number of points, including the strong feelings of the French Government over the death of a French technician who was working at Tammuz. Cheysson stressed that this bombing raid was a violation of international practice and he added that, thanks to the regular inspections carried out by the international agency for nuclear energy, the Iraqi installations could only be for civil use.

Arab ambassadors accredited in Paris are at this moment in conference at the Tunisian Embassy for discussions on the Israeli raid on Tammuz.

COMMENTS ON SOCIALIST-COMMUNIST ELECTION AGREEMENT

Marchais, Fiterman Explanation

LD091157 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 5 Jun 81 pp 1, 3

[Report on 4 June French television interview by Pierre Juquin with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais and Politburo member Charles Fiterman: "Responding to the Country's Hopes"]

[Text] [Juquin] "The event of the day is the joint statement adopted by the PCF and PS. Georges Marchais and Charles Fiterman, you are in the best position on the Communist side to explain and comment on this agreement."

Pierre Juquin then summarized the main outlines of the agreement and read out the series of points of agreement between the two parties, which are mentioned in it. He then recalled the conclusion of the joint statement: "Thus, a great victory will be made possible in the National Assembly election to be held on 14 and 21 June. Thus, the conditions will be created which will allow the constitution of a coherent and lasting majority, determined to do its utmost to participate in applying the new policy which French men and women chose by electing Francois Mitterrand president. At that point, a new meeting will be necessary."

[Juquin] Georges Marchais, how do you assess this agreement?

[Marchais] I believe that this is a positive political agreement capable of rallying all the necessary forces to facilitate the change desired by the majority of French men and women.

[Juquin] Why this assessment, Charles Fiterman?

[Fiterman] We Communists came to these talks with a clear goal--to reach an agreement and to assume all our responsibilities, including, of course, our responsibilities in the Government of France. And this is because with Francois Mitterrand's election--to which, I remind you, we contributed--great hopes have been born. Well, we must respond to these hopes. I believe that it is a real duty for the parties of the left to rally their forces and face up to all the problems, difficulties and obstacles which will certainly arise. This is what dictates our behavior. We continued to reaffirm this desire throughout the talks.

Our Place in the Government

[Juquin] And what agreement did you reach?

[Fiterman] At the end of the discussion, we reached the agreement from which you have cited extracts and which--and this is important--I would like to say isn't just an election agreement on withdrawal, which matters, of course, but a real political agreement. It is not without importance that the two parties together assert their wish to respond to the country's hopes; that they note alongside their differences of opinion their points of agreement on all the stances you have just recalled; that they decide to develop their cooperation, to do their utmost to ensure the victory of the left in the legislative election, to constitute a coherent and lasting majority of the left and, finally, to meet again afterward to go further and pass to the third stage. All that constitutes a good political agreement.

[Juquin] So it isn't a simple election agreement but a political one. But what about ministers?

[Fiterman] It must be said that that question isn't settled by this agreement. That is true. Well, I would very simply like to recall, and with a lot of conviction, because things must be perfectly clear, that we Communists are obviously going to make our contribution to everything that is to be done and apply this political agreement with determination. And then we will go to the new meeting which will take place after the victory--because I have no doubt about the election victory over the right in the legislative elections--with the desire to settle the problems of our participation in the government, in which quite simply we want our place because we believe that it is in the interest of the country. I believe that it will be necessary for this to happen. It will be necessary. The country expects it. We will do everything to achieve it.

[Juquin] So, the same state of mind will continue!

[Fiterman] Absolutely. With the same momentum.

[Juquin] Agreement, new meeting, joint government. We are, however, two different parties--it says so in the text--and we even have differences of opinions. Is it really possible?

[Marchais] But of course! Differences? The text reminds us of this. How could it be otherwise? The Socialists adhere to their party just as the Communists adhere to theirs.

[Juquin] Is this what the expression "different personality" means?

[Marchais] Absolutely. There is no question of reappraising the personality of either party. Differences of opinion? Yes, we do have some. And we aren't avoiding this question since we have already discussed it and we have agreed to continue the discussion to deepen it.

[Juquin] Would it be possible for you to cite an example so that everyone can understand clearly what we are talking about: the differences of opinion and the possibility of governing together.

A Serious Understanding

[Marchais] I prefer to reply to the question: "Is there a possibility of a serious understanding?"

[Juquin] Of course, it is the fundamental question that everyone is asking. People want things to work and to last.

[Marchais] I will reply to it on the basis of two ideas which seem fundamental to me.

First, when we look at the PS program, the pledges made by Francois Mitterrand during his election campaign and those which I myself made before my voters, we note that there are numerous points of agreement. You recalled them just now. There is therefore the possibility of an understanding on the basis of joint stances on important questions affecting the present and future interests of French men and women. But I say, there is a possibility, even on the basis of differences of opinion, of finding a solution to the problems which face us if we are together in the government. I will cite an example: the problem of missiles, that is, the Soviet SS-20's and the deployment of the so-called U.S. Pershing and cruise missiles.

[Juquin] It is a question of missiles which carry very powerful nuclear devices.

[Marchais] Our two parties assess the problem of the balance of forces in Europe differently. But at the same time, what do we note? A common desire: we want peace. We don't want war. We want security for our own country and for the other countries in Europe. Consequently, we can find common ground here. That is what we propose.

[Juquin] Common ground for governing? For government action...?

[Marchais] That is to say that France contributes to initiatives with a view to bringing together different states concerned, drawing up a balance sheet of the situation and taking the measures necessary to ensure equilibrium in terms of indispensable forces, and from that point to progressing along the path of disarmament. Consequently, this agreement doesn't rest on precise concessions. No. But on a lucid examination of everyone's stances.

Not a Circumstantial Attitude

[Fiterman] On this question of agreement and union, I would like to add that it isn't a question for us of a circumstantial attitude--a contingency attitude, tactical and momentary.

[Marchais] I will even go further. There are some journalists who wrote that Georges Marchais would "eat his hat...."

[Juquin] That is agree to concessions?

[Marchais] Yes, exactly.

[Fiterman] But not all. We have a clear policy which has been defined by our congresses. Everyone knows it. We want to extricate France from the crisis. We want a socialism which is adapted to our conditions, to our traditions, "a la Francaise," as they say. And for that, we uphold our ideas, our solutions. We wage a political struggle. This is perfectly normal.

[Juquin] Is that what you mean by "remaining ourselves?"

[Fiterman] Exactly. And we adhere to these ideas. There is no question of renouncing them. Having said that, how are we to make progress? Well, you progress by struggling--that is normal: the workers must struggle--and, at the same time, by means of universal suffrage. In other words, it is the people who decide on the rhythm of the progress, who decide on the stages--this is the notorious democratic path which we defined at our 22d and 23d congresses--and who naturally decide within the framework of a majority grouping, because otherwise you cannot progress.

Well, the fact is that we fought, we upheld our ideas, we had the vote. And now on this basis we must progress. We are ready. We have just said so and repeated it right here. We are ready to progress and to go as far as possible, to unify and to rally the forces to progress. On this road, we will never be lagging. We will be found wherever it is a matter of responding to people's needs, of unifying and rallying forces. It is a fundamental policy from which we will never change.

[Juquin] So our behavior corresponds to our general policy line, to our perspective. There is still the question on the agenda concerning the here and now, which moreover, links up well with our general line. What is the meaning of the vote for the Communist candidates?

Effectiveness

[Fiterman] I believe that that stems quite simply from what we have just said. French men and women who are in favor of fighting the right; of electing a majority of the left, with the Communists in their place in that majority; French men and women who are in favor of a left union government with the Communists in their place in that government; more generally, French men and women who are in favor of the Communists' having their place in this great task which must be accomplished: Well! I believe that these people must support us. They must give us their votes because it is obvious that we need this support to have the strength and the authority necessary to participate effectively in this work. I believe that this is democratic. Since we contributed to the victory, we must be able to contribute to the responsibilities. And it is effective because everyone knows the communists. They have their faults, but they have great qualities. So, they must have their place, and things will go forward.

[Juquin] That is loyal and logical, Georges Marchais, is this how you are going to respond to these great hopes given by the text....?

[Marchais] Yes, that is why in conclusion I address myself inevitably to Communist voters but more generally to French men and women: those who want to PCF to have its place.

LE FIGARO Article

LD091521 Paris LE FIGARO in French 5 Jun 81 p 1

[Jacques Jacquet-Francillon article: "Suspicion"]

[Text] The Socialists and the Communists have concluded an agreement. This hasn't been a surprise. What kind of agreement? An electoral agreement certainly. But is that all?

Is there no hidden part of the iceberg which would be tantamount to a secret government agreement which Francois Mitterrand's friends would have to tolerate, perhaps willy-nilly? Despite the dynamics of success in which they have put their faith, what chance would they have to achieve in the second round of parliamentary elections a sufficiently substantial score to prevent the outgoing majority from returning in force. Doubt is permissible.

As we know, Georges Marchais isn't a man who "does something for nothing." Nor is Charles Fiterman, even though he uses different words to say the same thing.

The wording of the joint statement published by the two main left parties following 3 days of secret negotiations is very vague. Seldom have the peaks of the art of woolliness been so nearly scaled. Both convergences and divergences have been mentioned, but neither has been clearly defined.

However, here and there, drowned in subtle dialectics, some parts of sentences make you prick up yur ears. For haven't "cooperation in jointly managing public affairs..." and "doing everything possible to participate in the implementation of a new policy" been mentioned?

"Managing..." "participating"--doesn't this in fact, imply direct Communist participation in government? In plain language, have the Socialists been forced to promise a certain number of portfolios to their partners? If they have done this, let them say so! And if they have not...well and good. But let them say so! At present, their ambiguous attitude, whose motives it is only too easy to understand, justify suspicion.

The problem of "Communist ministers" isn't merely a question of rhetorics. It is a fundamental problem. It is an elementary question of confidence.

For all French people, to start with. Obviously, for those who didn't vote for Francois Mitterrand on 10 May but also for those who have sent him to the Elysee. And also for France's allies. At a time when our new foreign minister is engaging in dialogue in Washington, can it be imagined, for instance, that an American administration led by Ronald Reagan could tomorrow envisage for one moment the possibility of divulging to the French Government even the least important confidential item of information concerning the Soviet Union, which might then be mentioned during a cabinet meeting at which Communists would be present?

Uncertainty must be removed. And immediately. By hiding behind a smokescreen any longer, the Socialists will justify this suspicion. There is only one way in which they can clear themselves of this accusation--by dropping their mask and speaking up.

Not doing so is tantamount to setting a trap for the French people. It is tantamount to asking them to go to the ballot box on 14 and 21 June blindfolded. The electorate has the right to know before voting. Later, it will be too late. It will be a long time before another opportunity for calling anyone to account will be given to them.

L'HUMANITE Editorial

[Michel Naudy editorial: "A Step"]

[Text] The 10 May defeat inflicted on Giscard d'Estaing, which should be confirmed by the defeat of the right on 21 June, is throwing reactionary leaders and commentators into deep confusion, hence, their assessments, contradictory, to say the least, of yesterday's signing of the political agreement reached between our party and the PS.

Though L'AURORE and LE FIGARO aren't the only ones to produce divergent analyses, the fact that they are owned by the same person adds piquancy to the situation.

According to the former, "this summit meeting," amicably described as a "masquerade," is no more than "an electioneering maneuver," a "bad joke," since, as is well known, Communists and Socialists are not "agreed on anything."

Reading the latter, on the other hand, one is seized by fright at having failed to perceive in the joint document "a hidden part of the iceberg corresponding to a secret government agreement, which Francois Mitterrand's friends would have had to accept, unwillingly perhaps." Which is to be believed? Neither.

If indeed, as Georges Marchais stressed at Thursday's impressive rally at Parc des Princes, "it is a positive political agreement," there is no reason to believe that the declaration adopted is simply an electioneering pact any more than it constitutes a secret rehash of a joint program that has risen from the ashes.

The joint statement is a political agreement in many respects. It is enough to read it to realize this.

Indeed, it states that both groups contibuted to the birth of the joint will which made Giscard d'Estaing's defeat possible. It stresses the agreement on the benefits arising from cooperation in all forums in which they are represented and states that a mutual withdrawal in favor of the best-placed leftwing candidate after 14 June will make possible "the establishment of a consistent and durable majority determined to do its utmost to participate in implementing the new policy..."

These statements are anything but gratuitous. On the contrary, they rest on several convergences. The text of the agreement lists not only the social measures that absolutely must be halted but also points of agreement affecting such important matters as the extension of freedoms, effective decentraliztion and action for peace and disarmament within observance of alliances.

Therefore, it is difficult to understand the conclusions drawn here and there on the emptiness of the document. Similarly, those who decided, somewhat prematurely, to expound on the Communists' capitulation will have to think again.

Far from concealing the existence of disagreements for electioneering reasons, the joint statement records the fact, while pointing out that each party is legitimately attached to its own characteristics.

Does this mean that the document erases the past and automatically leads to the imminent formation of a government of the entire left ready to implement a policy in line with the workers' expectations? Of course not.

Automatism is outside the realm of politics and the joint statement itself envisages a new stage following the general elections, during which these problems will be broached.

These plans aren't accidental. Much will depend in this connection on the number of votes received by the Communist candidates as a whole, irrespective of the balance of forces in their individual constituencies.

The phenomenon of the so-called useful vote which, in the particular context of the presidential elections, had a negative effect on the Communist candidate's result, must this time act in the opposite direction.

The right's probable defeat, in fact, enables the Communist voters as a whole and also many other democrats to contribute all their votes to the PCF candidates from the first round. Indeed, what better way is there to contribute to the formation of a new leftwing majority and to see it fully represented in France's Government?

This was the very message expressed by the crowd of 35,000 at Parc des Princes Thursday evening as they took up the watchword of "Communist Ministers for Change!"

BERLINGEUR CALLS FOR 'STRONG PCI REPRESENTATION'

LD080935 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 28 May 81 p 1

[Text] Rome--Following his meeting with the president of the republic (which was also attended by Lower House and Senate floor leaders di Giulio and Perna), the PCI secretary general released the following statement to journalists:

"The need for the moralization of public life and for state reform, which we have been indicating as the prime condition for safeguarding the future of the republic ever since the oil scandal, has been dramatically confirmed by the P-2 affair, which brought about the government crisis.

"It is clear therefore that the crisis cannot be resolved by reproducing the plans, formulas and methods which led to the present situation. The problem is how to extricate the democratic institutions, the state apparatus and the economy from the DC power system. This is why we have reasserted our proposal of a democratic alternative government within which the basic new element providing the major guarantee is strong PCI representation."

Next Comrade Berlinguer answered some questions from journalists.

[Question] Do you believe that a government of renewal, such as you are asking for, could be headed by a Christian Democrat?
[Answer] No.

[Question] How do you consider the hypothesis of a socialist-led government at present?
[Answer] We believe that the premiership must not go to the DC. We are therefore considering the hypothesis of the government being led by men from parties other than the DC.

[Question] What kind of support would your party grant? Direct entry into the government, or representation in the parliamentary majority?
[Answer] I have just said that the basic element providing a guarantee for a government must be constituted by the PCI's representation within it.

COLOMBO CRITICIZES HIGH U.S. INTEREST RATES

AU091550 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 9 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 9 Jun (ANSA)--A stern warning that the United States' policy of high interest-rates risks placing Western Europe in particular before the prospect of a "growing and, at the limit, intolerable" level of foreign indebtedness was advanced here today by Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

Speaking at a seminar on "Europe, Japan, the United States; Competition Without Conflict," Colombo said that order could only be brought back to the international monetary markets by activating "a high level of international cooperation."

Noting that the scope of the seminar was "other economic areas" as well as the United States, Colombo pointed out that it was unthinkable to imagine that this objective can be achieved by "continual re-adjustment of parity relations" between the countries of the three areas under discussion.

The evil must be cured at the roots, said Colombo, explaining that the "ultimate causes" of the present situation are to be sought primarily in the "trade deficits of the balance-of-payments of the industrialized countries." Forecasts for 1982 give an overall deficit for these countries of the order of 120 billion dollars.

Europe, the United States, and Japan, which account for 58.4 percent of world trade, must urgently review the objectives of their respective economic policies, Colombo added.

AUTHORITIES SEIZE MASONIC LODGE RECORDS, DOSSIERS

AU092010 Rome ANSA in English 1920 GMT 9 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 9 Jun (ANSA)--Rome magistrates investigating the P-2 secret Masonic lodge scandal today ordered the seizure of all membership records and dossiers of all the lodges making up Italian Freemasonry. Italian Masonry is estimated to have about 20,000 members with 526 recognised lodges. In response to the move, General Ennio Battelli, venerable master of the Grand Orient of Italy, said an attempt was being made to "involve all Freemasonry because of 10 or so persons."

The P-2 lodge, which forms part of the Grand Orient of Italy, is suspected of being the scene of clandestine political plotting and a whole range of misdeeds and illicit trafficking.

Among Italian Freemasons, there has apparently been a rising wave of criticism against Battelli in recent days for letting [Venerable Master Licio Gelli] run the P-2, a secret lodge, without any check or control.

The records were seized at the Grand Orient of Italy's headquarters at Palazzo Giustiniani in Rome in an operation that started yesterday evening and ended this morning. Because of the massive amount of material involved, the archives were left where they were, but the magistrates sealed the various cupboards in which the records were kept and also made up a list of Freemasons, lodge by lodge and region by region.

This is the second time that magistrates have made a search at the headquarters of Italian Masonry. They went there on May 5 when the P-2 investigations started. At the same time, they searched the "study and documentation center for European cooperation," apparently a Gelli front, and a villa on the Janiculum Hill owned by the Masons, with the seizure of various lists of names.

Masonic Leader's Interview

[Text] Rome, 6 Jun (ANSA)--More than fifteen thousand Italian Freemasons grouped in 526 lodges are currently living a "moment of great suffering" as a result of the scandals connected with the P-2 secret Masonic lodge, according to the Grand Secretary of the Grand Orient of Italy Spartaco Mennini.

In an interview with the weekly, EPOCA, this spokesman for official Italian Masonry, claiming to "lift the mask" off the organization, said that "many Christian Democrats and many Communists" are signed on in one lodge or another. All the Italian Masons feel in crisis as a result of the P-2 scandal, Mennini said, adding, "it is a moment from which we will never manage to lift ourselves up".

The crisis in Italian Masonry was also clear from a communique which Grand Master Ennio Battelli sent the news agencies today. This step is the first of its kind in the history of Italian Masonry. "Never, not even in the periods of the crudest obscurantism, has Masonry had to [word indistinct] such violent and indiscriminate persecution", Battelli, seen by some as linked to Licio Gelli, the head of P-2, said.

"The Mason is a man of honor", Battelli claimed, also referring to what he said was a "generalized aggression" against the organization. In other points, Battelli made a direct appeal to Italian public opinion, claiming that Masonry is "totally extraneous to business, political or adventurist maneuvers in conflict with the Masonic laws and with its own tradition of loyalty to the nation".

Concluding his appeal, Battelli distinguished "Masons of honor" and those who are not, adding a darkly worded warning:

"When the shadows of slavery advance, the first torch to be extinguished is the torch of Freemasonry".

PORTUGUESE-SOVIET TRADE PROTOCOL SIGNED IN LISBON

LD071006 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 0815 GMT 7 Jun 81

[Text] The USSR will continue to supply oil to Portugal. That was one of the conclusions of the third meeting of the Joint Portuguese-Soviet Commission in Lisbon, which resulted in the signing of a trade protocol.

Portuguese Secretary of State for Trade Walter Marques said in this connection that trade relations between the two countries are expected to further develop in the near future, with Portugal exporting textiles, cork and port wine and providing know-how in the spheres of shipbuilding and ship repairs.

EUROPEAN INTEGRATION MINISTER ON EEC MEMBERSHIP

LD081347 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Jun 81 p 4

[Excerpt] "The EEC membership process is basically a political issue and this is the only way in which it can be regarded, conducted and brought to completion," European Integration Minister Alvaro Barreto said yesterday in Oporto at the opening session of the first National Exporters Conference, organized by the Portuguese Industry Confederation.

In his speech, Alvaro Barreto drew attention to the principles that the present government has adopted as guidelines for Portugal's EEC membership. "It is a national blueprint and constitutes one of the government's main priorities, which must act as a driving force for the country's development and modernization" and "be expedited as quickly as possible, but not just in any way and at any price," he said.

Having stressed the exporters' importance in the membership process, the minister emphasized the fact that process affects "all economic operators through its results and consequences." He also said that "the government will guarantee private organizations access to information about the state of negotiations and will establish negotiating stances to be adopted following the respective consultations."

Alvaro Barreto also stressed that "there can definitely be no successful policy other than one based on economic reality." Because, he added, "if the political objectives conflict with the economic reality, experience clearly shows that it is always the political aims which change."

He said that "EEC membership will take place in the belief that it will bring overall benefits to our economy, though obviously not immediately." He added that "both in Portugal and in Europe the belief that the Portuguese economy will be strengthened by membership is, fortunately, predominant."

Alvaro Barreto also added that, as far as the present government is concerned, there are come "closed issues" in the membership process. Thus, "under no circumstances will Portugal pour cash into the Community" and it will not allow "membership to cause even a temporary increase in the balance of trade deficit." He stressed that "it will make a major contribution to animating production investments in new areas directed toward exports to EEC markets." It will also be necessary to "increase the openings for Mediterranean-type agricultural products such as fruit, vegetables and tomato paste."

"This effort, complemented by the opening of the Portuguese economy," he stressed, will lead to an "inevitable increase in our foreign expenditure, which must be counterbalanced by a significant increase in our exports so that we don't exceed certain limits in our indebtedness to other countries."

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON NEW ARMS COMPANY

[Text] Defense Minister Azavedo Coutinho yesterday inaugurated the management board of the National Defense Industries Public Company, a merger of the Braco de Prata military factory and the National Munitions and Light Weapons factory.

Speaking at the opening ceremony, Azevedo Coutinho said that the establishment of this new enterprise is designed "to make the military industry economically viable," stressing that this is the first transfer of responsibility to the civilian sector in the military field, "with a view to the armed forces' peaceful integration with the democratically constituted government."

Azevedo Coutinho then mentioned the "good cooperation and coordination that has taken place" between the army, which was responsible for the now extinct military factories, and the Defense Ministry and expressed "the public's recognition" to Army Chief of Staff Gen Garcia Dos Santos for "the spirit of cooperation that he has shown."

The defense minister said that the main objective of the new public enterprise is to make the military industry economically viable, "bearing in mind the threefold aim of facilitating the updating of the armed forces' equipment, increasing employment and expanding exports." "It is important," Azevedo Coutinho added, "to make an effort and to take a qualitative leap forward in several quite decisive aspects of our competitive capacity, for instance, in acquiring know-how, encouraging research and development and creating a dynamic and aggressive economic policy." This is needed, he stressed, so that "we can as soon as possible achieve a greater capacity for dialogue with our Atlantic alliance partners."

Azevedo Coutinho also pointed to the need to update the armed forces' equipment "at lower cost," so as to impart "greater efficiency to our participation in the shared NATO effort." He also said that the new public enterprise must direct its activity "with a view to a possible future extension to other fields of activity and production that may be identified as of special interest to the armed forces."

For his part, Col Thermundo Barata, chairman of the newly-inaugurated management board, said that it is clear that an industry of this kind "will not be economically, still less technologically, viable for the domestic market alone, since the armed forces' requirements account for only a small percentage of its output." He also said that unless the country has its own defense industry, it would be subjecting itself to greater dependence on and economic exploitation by the "major powers" which export 95 percent of the weapons sold worldwide.

The public enterprise, which merges the two military factories employs almost 3,000 workers and realizes total sales of about 3 million contos, 90 percent of them as exports.

The inaugural ceremony was attended by Army Chief of Staff Gen Garcia Dos Santos and Secretary of State for Defense Anacoreta Correia.

MINISTER DISCUSSES AID WITH ETHIOPIAN VISITORS

LD090857 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 26 May 81 p 7

[Text] Finland is ready in principle to discuss an increase in its aid to Ethiopia, provided that its resources can stretch to this. However, for the current year Finland's aid budget has been committed to other countries. Finland has know-how to offer, but its financing represents a problem.

Finnish Foreign Minister Paavo Vaeyrynen made this clear to a delegation led by Ethiopian Deputy Prime Minister Fisseha Desta in Helsinki on Monday [25 May]. The delegation, visiting Finland from 23 to 27 May, also includes Industry Minister Tesfaye Dinka, Labor and Social Affairs Minister Kassa Kebede and Agriculture Minister Geremew Debele.

During the visit the Ethiopian authorities want to make known the most important requirements for the country's economic development. Finland's ability to give economic aid is limited to certain projects which have already been planned, and no promises were possible that Ethiopia would be included among the recipient nations.

The Ethiopian delegation visited the Red Cross blood transfusion service and Imatravan Voima's [major Finnish power company]--head office on Monday. The delegation also met Prime Minister Mauno Kovisto. On Tuesday the Ethiopian delegation will meet the Eduskunta speaker and representatives of the Foreign Affairs Committee and will visit the nuclear power station at Loviisa.

FOREIGN MINISTER CONDEMNS ISRAELI ATTACK ON IRAQ

LD091130 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1030 GMT 9 Jun 81

MINISTER, PARLIAMENT BACK NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

Defense Minister Comments

LD081003 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 3 Jun 81 p 6

[Text] "The Conservative Party has isolated itself over the question of nuclear-free zones," Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg said in a speech in Hoenefoss yesterday. He pointed out that the Young Conservatives, the Center Party and the Christian People's Party were all in favor of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area, whereas the Conservative Party proper had not made any proposal.

"I predict that we are approaching the last phase in the Conservative Party's reaction to nuclear-free zones. First it ridiculed them, then it opposed them, and now it sees them as a matter of course," Stoltenberg said at the meeting, which had been arranged by the Ringerike Labor Party.

Stoltenberg said that good advice and kind words to the superpowers were not enough. Without the involvement of the United States and the Soviet Union in particular, there would be no reduction in the number of nuclear arms, Stoltenberg said.

He stressed that the proposal for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area is a contribution on the part of small nations to the mutual reduction of nuclear arms in Europe.

"Despite the fact that it is perfectly obvious that the aim of the Labor Party's proposal is to make a contribution to mutual disarmament, the Conservative Party represents the policy resolution as a unilateral measure," Stoltenberg said.

Parliament Debates Question

LD081413 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 4 Jun 81 p 7

[Elisabeth Krona report]

[Text] On Wednesday the Riksdag unanimously declared that the government must keep the question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries alive. Together with the other Nordic governments it must investigate whether the possibilities exist for the establishment of such a zone.

The Riksdag Disarmament Committee has concentrated on the question to a large extent. The Foreign Affairs Committee succeeded in reaching agreement on a statement. Like Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten (Liberal Party), the committee stressed that a Nordic zone would be a step toward a nuclear-free Europe.

However, Ola Ullsten rejected Left Party-Communist demands, already made at the Nordic Council session in Copenhagen, for a conference on a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries.

Ullsten made some clear statements in the debate:

"The question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries cannot be seen in isolation from the nuclear arms trend in our immediate area and in the rest of Europe."

"The Baltic should form part of a zone fixed in a treaty. In addition to the zone itself there should be a restricted zone from which nuclear arms primarily intended for use against targets in the Nordic countries should be withdrawn."

Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Allan Hernelius (Moderate Coalition Party) stressed that the Nordic countries are already a de facto nuclear-free zone. He said that the notion of a "peaceful oasis" in the Nordic countries has great weaknesses from the security viewpoint.

Sture Ericson (Social Democrat) welcomed the committee's unanimous statement, "even though we Social Democrats had to cut down some of our demands. However," he said, "We have pushed the nonsocialists a little." Gunnel Jonaeng (Center Party), who is very active in her support for a nuclear-free zone, stressed that the government must refer back to the Riksdag and tell it what Nordic consultations have led to.

The main debate was between Ola Ullsten and Left Party-Communist leader Lars Werner: "NATO has increased the pressure on its allies in the Nordic countries," Werner said. "Ullsten is too late. The security and defense pattern in the Nordic countries has collapsed."

"The question of a nuclear-free zone does not stand or fall merely on the good will of the Nordic countries," the foreign minister replied. "A necessary requirement is that the superpowers be able to give us guarantees. Since the Soviet Government has absolutely no desire to discuss this matter, one of the most important requirements for a zone is missing."

"We have nothing against a larger nuclear-free zone," Lars Werner replied, "but it is not a realistic proposal with which to begin. If we made demands like this, work would remain at a standstill."

GOVERNMENT CONDEMNS ISRAELI RAID ON IRAQ

NC091024 Nicosia PUBLIC INFORMATION OFFICE in English 9 Jun 81 p 1

PAPER REPORTS NICOSIA WATER CURTAILED BY TURKS

NC060800 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 6 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] For the past 10 days the Turks have cut the water supply from Morphou sources to the free areas by 6,000 tons daily, and despite strong representations by the Cyprus Government to the UN, they refuse to explain the reasons for their new action. Water supply from Morphou amounted to 10,000 tons per day and, after their restrictive measures, the Turks now only supply 3,000 tons, thus creating a very difficult situation in Nicosia to the degree that it cannot be solved.

The government is concerned over the new situation and over the eventuality that the Turks will refuse to supply a satisfactory amount of water. It is considering special measures to cope with it. The problem at this time of the year is even more acute due to the summer months, particularly June and July, when Nicosia requires double the amount of water needed during the rest of the year.

Some high areas are not supplied with adequate quantities of water, and they are protesting to the water board which, however, due to the situation created, is unable to supply them with satisfactory quantities.

Yesterday, the government undertook new representations to the United Nations over this cut in the water supply. The United Nations has agreed to mediate toward a solution of the problem. The water board in the meantime sees no solution to the problem, because the Turks refuse to specify why they have curtailed the water supply.

PAN-CYPRIAN GROUP CRITICIZES REAGAN REPORT

[Text] Turkey has brought to the north new weapons to strengthen its occupation forces, the Pan-Cyprian Association for the Protection of Human Rights says in a document addressed to the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives Foreign Relations Committee chairmen. The document is in the form of comments on President Reagan's periodic report to Congress on Cyprus and pinpoints certain omissions in the report.

It says that President Reagan refrains from mentioning anything concerning Turkey's attitude towards a solution of the Cyprus problem, or termination of Turkey's continuing aggression or violation of human rights and freedoms. But, the document says, the President also refrained from mentioning that Turkey "has lately brought to the occupied areas of Cyprus new weapons in order to strengthen its occupation forces."

"These weapons (including armoured vehicles, tanks and other heavy weapons) are coming from the arms supplies that the U.S. provides to Turkey after the lifting of the arms embargo), despite the fact that the U.S. Congress stipulates that arms to Greece and Turkey shall be only for defensive purposes. Therefore, it says, the Pan-Cyprian Association for the Protection of Human Rights considers that the Reagan report is "completely inconsistent with the very provisions according to which such a report must be submitted."

REAGAN ADMINISTRATION NOT TO SUBMIT CYPRUS PLAN

NC090828 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 9 Jun 81 p 1

[Special 8 June Washington dispatch]

[Text] The new U.S. Government of President Reagan has reached the conclusion that any initiative on the Cyprus problem outside the good offices of UN Secretary General Dr Waldheim would cause greater complications.

This is included in authoritative reports that say the U.S. Government appears convinced that the submission of a plan for the solution of the Cyprus problem by anyone, outside Dr Waldheim's good offices (this is stressed), would cause more damage than good. Therefore, the same reports say, it would be wrong for the West--this is what Washington now believes--to undertake an initiative not connected with the UN secretary general's role.

Our reports, which appear to be confirmed by various diplomatic circles, say that the U.S. Government has also changed its attitude on the U.S.-Canadian framework for a Cyprus solution. Specifically, it seems that it has been decided that revival of the plan should not be considered.

As is already known, U.S. Ambassador in Nicosia Stone recently told newsmen that his government's stand is that the plan exists and that it is for the two sides to make use of it. It now appears that this stand has been overturned by Washington's new decisions.

Nevertheless, according to the same reports, the U.S. Government is still interested in a solution of the Cyprus problem and particularly in accelerating the process for a solution, because it believes that the fact that the question is pending has unfavorable repercussions on relations between Greece and Turkey.

AKEL STATEMENT ON PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION RESULTS

[1 June statement released in Nicosia by the AKEL Central Committee Political Bureau]

[Text] The 24 May parliamentary elections were a political battle of great importance for Cyprus. This battle was victoriously waged by the people's patriotic democratic forces. This victory has not only local but also broader significance, and goes beyond Cypriot borders. We particularly believe that this victory will positively affect the efforts for a rapprochement of the two communities--the Greek and the Turkish Cypriots--as well as the election struggle that is being waged by the progressive democratic and patriotic forces of the Turkish Cypriots. The international conditions under which the elections were held are characterized from the point of view of the Middle East by the intensification of the aggressive Israeli policy against the Palestinians, Lebanon and Syria, and from the international point of view by an effort of the warmongering U.S. forces to destroy the climate of detente and to push the world into conditions of cold war, anti-Sovietism and anticommunism.

The election campaign was waged under conditions of political tension. The Democratic Rally, having aligned itself with the positions of international reaction, did everything it could to give the elections anticommunist content and to create conditions of polarization.

The conservative rightwing, in alliance and cooperation with the extreme rightwing and the unrepentant coupist elements, attempted to dominate the electorate and the House of Representatives. Thus, they have employed all means of demagogy, chauvinism, anticommunism, intolerance, slander, blackmail, all kinds of pressuring, unlimited funds and dangermongering.

Nevertheless, the patriotic democratic forces of the leftwing, of the center and of the democratic rightwing have successfully faced the attack by the extreme rightwing. The vast majority of the electorate was not misled by the propaganda of the conservative and the extreme rightwing. Almost 70 percent of the people sided against the extreme rightwing and its policy and voted democratically. Almost 33 percent of the people voted for our party, the leftwing and its policy. This is an important victory of the people for the achievement of which our party has played a most decisive role.

From the election results it is most obvious that the vast majority of our people have supported an anti-imperialist political line, that they sided against the line for a NATOization of Cyprus. From the election results it is most obvious that our people want a peaceful, fair, democratic, viable and mutually acceptable solution of our problem. With their vote, our people endorsed the policy outlined in the four guidelines of the Makarios-Denktas agreement, the 10 points of the Kiprianou-Denktas agreement and the UN decisions and resolutions on Cyprus.

The Cypriot people declared their desire for and insistence on an independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus; for a Cyprus without Turkish occupation troops, without foreign troops and bases. The people demonstrated their insistence on the right for the voluntary return of the refugees and for the tracing of missing persons as envisaged by the UN resloutions. This constitutes a second important victory of our people, a victory for which our party's role has been decisive.

The battle for the elections was also waged in another field, the field of economic and social problems of the workers and employees, the refugees, the peasants, the middle class, the artisans and craftsmen, the pensioners, and in the field of the general problems of the Cypriot economy. It is obvious from the election results that the people sided with a progressive, popular facing of these problems, in favor of a policy that would serve the working people and the genuine interests of our national economy.

This is a third and important victory of our people. Our party's contribution to this victory has been decisive. The people are seriously concerned about the election of the EOKA-B candidates who were included in the Democratic Rally slates; their election has been the result of EOKA-B conspiratorial activity at the expense of candidates who represent the moderates within the Democratic Rally. The election to the House of Representatives of EOKA-B representatives, along with some other activities--mainly by the Democratic Rally youths--underline the dangers to our people by the fascist coupist section of the extreme rightwing.

However, in general, the AKEL Political Bureau assessment of the parliamentary election results is that they constitute a brilliant victory of the democratic Cypriot people, a brilliant victory for our party and the leftwing. Our party was the No 1 party in number of votes received and it has increased its seats in the House by three. We now have a democratic House from the point of view of majority, a House which we believe is capable of contributing to the promotion of a sound policy in connection with our problem, as well as capable of opposing and preventing the adoption and implementation of NATO and unpopular and anti-Cypriot solutions.

The AKEL Central Committee Political Bureau warmly thanks and congratulates the patriotic Cypriot people whose vast majority have voted democratically. By thanking and congratulating this majority we have no grudge against that section of the people who voted differently. Objectively, it is also in the interest of the common people who, under certain conditions, have voted for the Democratic Rally, to support the correct line and tactics for a Cyprus solution.

The AKEL Central Committee Political Bureau warmly thanks and congratulates the 96,000 voters who voted for our party. It also warmly thanks and congratulates all the cadres and members of our party, the cadres and members of the mass progressive organizations, all the common people--men, women, supporters and friends of the leftwing--who voluntarily, with enthusiasm, faith, devotion and self-denial gave their valuable contribution to the battle for the elections. Without their well-organized work, without their contribution, the victory of democracy, the victory of our party and of the leftwing would have been impossible.

The Central Committee Political Bureau believes that under the current crucial conditions for our country, the most serious duty after the elections is to work for the unity and cooperation of the patriotic democratic forces, the reconciliation of the people and the isolation of fascist coupist elements. The carrying out of this duty will help our party, the progressive movement and in general the patriotic democratic forces to safeguard and to properly utilize for the benefit of the people and of anti-imperialist struggle--a struggle which is also against occupation--our people's important political victory in the parliamentary elections. Thus, our party calls its cadres and members, all its friends and supporters, to consistently and determinedly struggle for the people's unity and cooperation. Along with this, the AKEL Central Committee Political Bureau considers it its duty to call the people to patriotic vigilance in order to foil any new deviation and the imposition of antidemocratic and anti-Cypriot solutions.

Within the framework of the struggle for the people's unity and cooperation, the AKEL Central Committee Political Bureau calls all its cadres, all its supporters and friends within the broader popular movement to work with the same enthusiasm, the same faith and devotion for the sake of another duty which is equally honorable and serious--the duty to defuse partisan passions, to eradicate tension which have inevitably been created among some layers and groups of people because of the elections campaign. The continuation of tension, of partisan passions and controversies will not help the unoriented conservative part of the people to view in an unbiassed way, to calmly discuss and to understand the sound political line and tactics.

Our party believes that it is possible to put down a minimum program of joint acceptance that would promote as far as possible a broader cooperation among all the patriotic, democratic forces inside and outside the House.

The AKEL Central Committee Political Bureau assures the people that the AKEL-leftwing House members will prove worthy of their confidence and will honor the votes given to them by the people. The party and the AKEL-leftwing House members reassure the people that with their work and struggle, inside and outside the House, will honor the fresh contract of honor with the people.

[Text] A CPSU Central Committee delegation left Greece yesterday at the end of their visit at the invitation of the KKE Central Committee. The delegation was composed of Comrade Boris Stukalin, Central Committee member and chairman of the State Committee for Publishing Houses, Printing Plants and the Book Trade, Nikolay Tikhomirov, secretary of Kostroma city party committee; and (Boris Pikov), deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee International Relations Department.

The delegation was seen off at Hellinikon Airport by Comrades A. Ambatielos and R. Koukoulou, members of the KKE Political Bureau and Zinon Zorzovilis and Orestis Kolozof, members of the KKE Central Committee. Present at the departure were also Comrade V. Pushchin, Soviet charge d'affaires, and Comrade (V. Piyatikh), Soviet Embassy counsellor.

Prior to his embarkation, Comrade Stukalin made the following statement to RIZOPASTIS:

"As is known, our delegation came to Greece at the invitation of the KKE. Our meetings with the KKE Central Committee delegation, headed by Comrade Kh. Florakis, have been very fruitful. We have established with great satisfaction an identity of views on all the serious current affairs. Our meetings with the Athens and Piraievs guidance organizations as well as with the community heads of a series of municipalities have been of great importance to us. These contacts have manifested to us the active struggle of the Greek Communists for the vital rights of the working people and against armaments. We have also established that the KKE influence is expanding, and this fact is particularly satisfying when it concerns youths. We should also say that we have been particularly moved by the warm and cordial welcome we have been accorded. Our meetings and contacts with representatives of other political forces of the country have been very interesting. On leaving Greece, our delegation is expressing its warmest wishes to all progressive forces for success in their struggle for the rights of the working people, against the threat of a new war, and for the progress and prosperity of the Greek people."

During his stay we will discuss international relations, especially the Middle East problem, and bilateral relations. Here, I would like to express the Turkish Republic's best wishes of health, happiness and tranquillity to the honorable president of Syria, to all its officials and to the neighborly and brotherly Syrian people. PARTIES DISCUSS POSSIBLE CDA PRIME MINISTER

[Own correspondent report: "Negotiation Leaders Aim at CDA Prime Minister"]

[Text] The Hague--The point of departure for negotiation leaders Lubbers and De Koning is that the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) will provide the prime minister in a cabinet comprising the CDA, the Labor Party (PVDA) and the Democrats '66 (D'66). The PVDA sees this point of departure as a view taken by the negotiation leaders, which can be further discussed in the "real negotiations" between the three parties and the two negotiation leaders.

If the negotiation leaders continue to adhere to this point as a nonnegotiable condition, then the PVDA will hold internal discussions after a written correspondence with the negotiation leaders.

The announcement that the negotiation leaders are assuming that the CDA will provide the prime minister for the cabinet, for which they are now investigating formation possibilities, caused some commotion in The Hague. D'66 party leader Terlouw is of the opinion that negotiation leaders are in no position to have such a point of departure. His argument was that the negotiation leaders know that on this point the CDA's possible coalition partners have different ideas.

Terlouw also thinks although the argument that the CDA is the largest party does carry some weight, other matters are at least as important. He was referring to the consideration that a cabinet with a progressive profile could not be led in advance by a prime minister who had ruled together with the CDA and the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy (VVD) for the last 4 years.

From the very beginning, Terlouw placed the question of the prime minister post and of the distribution of seats in a CDA-PVDA-D'66 cabinet to the fore in his talks with the negotiation leaders as a matter which would have to be decided at the same time as the points in the policy program and not afterward.

At the present time, Terlouw does not want to veto the possibility of the post of prime minister being filled by Van Agt, for example, but finds the present first minister not the most suitable candidate for the post of prime minister in a new coalition. But Terlouw wants to negotiate on this point in the "real" government formation talks.

The PVDA is of the opinion that the question is relatively simple. The question of the premiership wasn't the first raised by Den Uyl in his talks with the negotiation leaders in the last few days. Lubbers and De Koning raised it themselves. The PVDA also is assuming that this question along with all the other questions of policy will be on the agenda for the negotiations between the three parties and the negotiation leaders, which will begin the middle of next week.

On Wednesday [3 June] the socialists made it clear that an agenda over which there is a note in capital letters that the negotiation leaders are taking as their point of departure the fact that the CDA will supply the next prime minister, after which the question arises nowhere else on the agenda, would for them be a reason for asking for further explanation in writing.

The CDA has no difficulty in accepting the two negotiation leaders' point of departure. The CDA parliamentary party "broadly takes the line," as a spokesman put it, that it has a good prime minister in the person of Van Agt. The negotiation leaders are speaking of a CDA prime minister without naming names. But at the present stage of the government formation talks, the parliamentary party is assuming that it will have to be Van Agt.

BAHR FAULTS U.S. ON NATO DECISION, NEUTRON WEAPON

DW101258 Bonn VORWAERTS in German 11 Jun 81 p 2

[Article signed Egon Bahr: "News From America"]

[Text] President Reagan, and even more so Haig, has some difficulty getting desired appointments confirmed. So then, when statements are delivered which are in keeping with the "spirit of resurgence," Europeans who prick up their ears are told that such statements should not be given too much weight.

Let us hope that this also holds true for the statements made to a congressional committee by the head of the State Department's European division.

It sounded quite significant: The Reagan government will not be forced by its NATO allies to make decisions on disarmament. Well enough! The allies will not let the Americans force them into armament. Well enough, too!

The new rules of good behavior in dealings between equal allies are: each as rough as he can. This is poison for the alliance, made in the United States.

The modernization of the Eurostrategic nuclear weapons must go forward, independently and viewed separately, Eagleburger reportedly declared. This is at variance with the NATO dual decision.

Even if negotiations with Moscow shouldn't materialize, the United States proposes to go through with the missile decision in any case. This will not work. No deployment without negotiations--this is what NATO agreed. If we are supposed to abide by this, the United States will have to as well, especially since it has so far been the fault of the Americans that the negotiations have not yet started.

Eagleburger has provided the grist which will keep the mills of distrust going in Europe--whoever laments these mills must lament what keeps them going--especially since his statements are at odds with the German-U.S. agreement mapped out by Haig and Genscher and with what Reagan reaffirmed to Schmidt.

The Washington POST reported the other day that the U.S. Government has informed Congress about the start of production on the neutron weapon. This is a purely American affair. Nobody should be surprised if the Soviet Union on its part now starts production. Brezhnev has announced that, in the case of the neutron weapon, Moscow would behave just like the Americans.

The production is an American decision, deployment on our territory is ours. And as uncontested is Washington's right to change its policy, so is Bonn's right uncontested to retain its policy. Didn't we hear that the new U.S. administration intends to make such decisions the subject of consultations? A question for the Federal Government: Is there any neutron consultation?

FRG Spokesman, Kohl Comment

[Excerpts] Bonn, 10 Jun (DPA)--In contrast to the doubts expressed by SPD disarmament expert Egon Bahr, the Federal Government today reaffirmed its conviction about the U.S. willingness to negotiate on medium-range missiles.

Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl stressed in Bonn today that statements by Bundestag deputies are their own. Moreover, Bahr has often enough stated that he stands by the principle of the NATO twin decision. In Moscow, Bahr has again expressed his commitment to the twin decision, prior to which Radio Moscow had taken up his criticism of the U.S. administration's stance.

CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl called upon the Federal Government to dissociate itself from Bahr's statements in VORWAERTS. He told the CDU Federal Executive these statements are anti-American. Alois Mertes, foreign policy spokesman of the CDU/CSU Parliamentary Group; Hans Graf Huin, spokesman of the CSU land group; and Philipp Jenninger, parliamentary manager of the CDU/CSU group, also demanded immediate clarification by the Federal Government of whether "Bahr's statements are in accordance with official government policy."

Kohl said Bahr's criticism is dangerous and harmful. He has fallen into line with the Soviet Union's propaganda against the twin decision and he has weakened the West's negotiating position. Kohl called upon SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, in his talks with the Soviet leaders in Moscow at the end of the month, to stress that the overwhelming majority of the German people adhere to the NATO twin decision because it is a means of restoring the balance of forces between East and West. He said Brandt should stress the concern of the people of the Federal Republic over developments in Poland and the Middle East, which have aggravated the international situation.

Government spokesman Ruehl also said Bonn has no cause to doubt in any way the policy jointly stated and pursued by the NATO allies. There is no need for consultations. Since the Federal Government's talks with U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who some time ago spoke in favor of the production of the neutron bomb, no information has been demanded of the Federal Government with regard to this matter and none has been received.

Pointing to changing considerations and decision processes in the U.S. administration, Ruehl said a cohesive, overall picture in the question of when serious production of the neutron bomb would be possible could not be given.

DIE WELT Criticism

[Bernt Conrad commentary: "Bahr's Bullet"]

[Text] In the next few days SPD Deputy Chairman Egon Bahr will be talking with important Soviet politicians in Moscow. It must be feared that in so doing he will play the role of critic of NATO's counterarmament, U.S. policy and thus also of Federal Government policy. This assumption is substantiated by a rhetorical bullet which he fired just before his departure with the help of the paper VORWAERTS.

Bahr charges the Americans on two counts: They violate the NATO dual decision by intending to push the modernization of the Eurostrategic nuclear weapons independently from negotiations with Moscow. They have begun production on the neutron weapon without anybody having heard anything about consultations with the European allies.

In both instances, the SPD politician, who years ago gave the starting signal for diabolizing the neutron weapon, didn't bother with detailed research, otherwise he would have found out that the U.S. secretary of state as late as last weekend stressed that the Reagan administration hasn't made any decision on the neutron weapon's production.

Remarks by U.S. diplomat Eagleburger as quoted by Bahr, that the United States will not be forced into disarmament by its NATO allies, likewise read essentially differently in context. Notwithstanding all emphasis on the Western need for making up for lost ground in medium-range armament, Eagleburger had in fact unequivocally advocated consultations and emphasized: "The United States and our allies wish to adhere to dialogue with the Soviet Union."

What is "poison for the alliance" isn't what Eagleburger has said, but the sardonic manner in which Bahr reacts to reports from Washington. Should the SPD politician agitate against the U.S. allies in Moscow with the same zeal, he will be backstabbing his own Federal Government and, above all, the chancellor and this at the very moment when the exploratory talks on disarmament have begun between the United States and the Soviet Union.

BRANDT SUPPORTS SOVIET-U.S. TALKS ON MISSILES

[Text] Bonn, 10 Jun (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has, in connection with the NATO twin decision, stressed his party's belief in the priority of negotiations with the aim of a far-reaching limitation of new nuclear medium-range weapons. The SPD supports every possible and practicable effort which will lead not only to negotiations but also to agreements, he said in an interview in KIELER RUNDSCHAU, prereleased today. The SPD chairman also said: "The deployment of U.S. medium-range weapons, as a response to the Soviet SS-20 buildup, will depend on the result of negotiations between the Americans and the Soviets."

Brandt said the SPD sees the NATO twin decision as an aid to the promotion of negotiations. In cooperation with the European friends and in dialogue with the American partners, every emphasis must be brought to bear to ensure that both East and West Europe "be spared, as far as possible, these diabolical new weapons."

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT DISCUSSES DISARMAMENT ISSUES

[Excerpts] Hamburg, 10 Jun (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, in an interview in the latest issue of the Hamburg weekly DIE ZEIT, said he believes that the disputes to be faced in autumn on the economic measures necessary for the coming year were of "much greater political gravity" than the present dispute about disarmament policy.

Schmidt, who stressed the clearly increasing world political dangers, said he is convinced that both Washington and Moscow shared the conviction that arming must be limited although, in the present situation, disarmament negotiations "would be much more difficult" than a few years ago. He again stressed that he links his "political existence" to the U.S. negotiating "with the serious and realistically pursued aim of mutual limitation" of arms. "I didn't do so irresponsibly, but I was only able to do it because I am convinced of Reagan's will to negotiate in this way." Schmidt also said it was "quite natural" that CPSU General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev would visit Bonn sometime in the near future.

On the counterarming debate, the chancellor reaffirmed that he had earlier called for deployment of strategic weapons in remote places, such as Greenland or at sea. He said that this alternative was seriously proposed during NATO twin decision discussions, but "at that time it could not be pushed through." On the one hand, such a deployment is considerably more expensive. And on the other hand, for the United States, it is "conceivable that it could cause the European allies to detach themselves from a nuclear risk that had to be jointly assumed."

SCHMIDT, JAPANESE PRIME MINISTER EXCHANGE VIEWS

Trade Policies

LD101446 Hamburg DPA in German 1334 GMT 10 Jun 81

[Text] Hamburg/Tokyo, 10 Jun (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Schmidt and Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki expressed their support for maintaining free world trade when they met in Hamburg on Wednesday. Meanwhile, Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff received an assurance in Tokyo that Japanese car exports to Germany will not rise more than 10 percent this year compared with 1980.

The central themes of Schmidt's discussion with Suzuki in the guest house of the Hamburg Senat this morning were East-West relations, arms control and German-Japanese relations. According to the Japanese side, both heads of government agreed that Japan and the Federal Republic must contribute to maintaining world peace by a steady deepening of contacts. Above all, free trade should be maintained in the world.

Initially, Schmidt and Suzuki spoke alone. Foreign Ministers Sunao Sonoda and Hans-Dietrich Genscher participated later and also expressed their rejection of protectionism in international trade. According to reports, Genscher explained the internal economic difficulties of the Federal Republic and welcomed in this context the latest decisions by Japan to restrain exports.

Genscher and Sonoda agreed on a meeting of foreign ministers in the fall within the framework of the German-Japanese cooperation agreement. To deepen cooperation, they also decided on a regular exchange of information between the diplomatic missions of the two countries.

Poland, U.S. Interest Rates

[Excerpts] Hamburg, West Germany, 10 Jun (KYODO)--Japan Wednesday pledged to side with the United States and Western Europe should the Soviet Union intervene in Poland.

Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki gave the pledge during the second round of talks with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt here, Japanese officials reported. "Japan, as a member of the Western bloc, will take responsible measures (against the Soviet Union) in close contact with countries concerned should there be an unfortunate (Soviet) intervention (in Poland)," Suzuki said.

Suzuki and Schmidt condemned Israel's attack Sunday on an Iraqi nuclear installation near Baghdad, saying the action is in violation of the international law.

Schmidt said the high interest rate policy of the United States will be a main agenda at a summit meeting of the seven non-communist industrial nations in Ottawa next month. German Government sources quoted Schmidt as saying the U.S. policy is rendering a serious influence on the international economy and adding some solution should come out from the summit.

Japanese officials said Schmidt and Suzuki agreed to join forces to end the Ottawa summit successfully which will also discuss the North-South problems and other international political issues.

Nuclear Disarmament, China

OW110051 Tokyo KYODO in English 0031 GMT 11 Jun 81

[Text] Hamburg, West Germany, 10 Jun (KYODO)--Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki met West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt Wednesday and agreed the two nations should promote nuclear disarmament policies.

Suzuki and Schmidt also agreed to cooperate with China in its modernization programs together with other West European nations and the United States, Japanese sources said.

The Japanese prime minister, who arrived here Tuesday night on the first leg of a trip to six West European nations and the Vatican, held two round of talks with Schmidt Wednesday.

During the talks, the sources said, the two leaders said the United States and the Soviet Union should maintain their military balance at a lower level to defuse tension between East and West. The sources said Schmidt told Suzuki that the United States is scheduled to deploy theater nuclear weapons (TNW) in Western Europe. The German leader was quoted as saying such a deployment is needed because the Soviet Union has been deploying SS-20 medium-range missles and Backfire bombers in Europe. Schmidt said the United States and the Soviet Union at the same time should reduce their military balance to a lower level through disarmament talks, the sources said.

Suzuki agreed and told the chancellor that in view of Japan's defense-only policy, there is a need for negotiations to reduce nuclear weapons, they said. The sources said the two, however, failed to tough [as published] on third Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT III) which West Germany has proposed the United States hold with the Soviet Union.

Japanese Foreign Minister Sunao Sonoda, who was present at the Suzuki-Schmidt talks, said Japan, Western Europe and the United States should cooperate with China in its modernization programs to keep it from siding with the Soviet Union, the sources said. It is necessary to incorporate the Chinese economy into Western economic machinery, Sonoda was quoted as telling the Germans. The sources said Japan and West Germany agreed to maintain close contact on economic assistance to and cooperation with China.

GENSCHER 'CONDEMNS' ISRAELI ATTACK ON IRAQI PLANT

[Text] Bonn, 10 Jun (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, speaking in Bonn this evening to Arab ambassadors "condemned the violation of the principle of nonaggression." Genscher repeated the attitude of the Federal Government which on Tuesday expressed "dismay and concern" following the Israeli air attack on the Iraqi reactor plant.

Speaking to the ambassadors of Iraq, Syria, the UAE and Tunisia, Genscher stressed that the Federal Government "views the principle of nonaggression as a precondition for a peaceful solution to the Middle East conflict."

The ambassadors asked for the meeting with the foreign minister after intensive contacts by Arab heads of missions in the Arab League offices in Bonn. The Arab assessment of the situation following the Israeli air raid was presented to Genscher.

OTRAG FIGURE DENIES NEGOTIATIONS WITH SAUDIS

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 10 Jun (DPA)--Harald Wust, former inspector general of the Bundeswehr, today strongly denied a press report, which he described as "nonsense," that he had negotiated with Saudi Arabia on behalf of a German consortium regarding a missile project worth billions. The Hamburg magazine STERN reports in its latest issue that the Munich company OTRAG [Orbital Transport and Missile Company], with other German companies and with Wust as head of the negotiations, wants to sell almost 2,000 missiles to the Saudis.

STERN also says that OTRAG, which is conducting missile tests in Libya and which launched the first OTRAG missile on 1 March, assured Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi in a secret agreement that it will also supply missiles which, with a range of up to 7,000 km, can be armed with nuclear warheads. STERN says that Wust had negotiations in Riyadh in June 1980 with the Saudi defense minister, and at a subsequent meeting of the consortium of firms in Frankfurt, Wust described the negotiations as positive. According to STERN, 1,903 missiles were to be produced for the [word indistinct] by the companies in underground workshops by the Red Sea. But after the plan became known to the Israeli secret service, the Saudis broke off the negotiations and restated their interest only after the successful OTRAG test launch in Libya.

Wust, presently hospitalized following a car accident, stated in a DPA interview that he had never had anything to do with OTRAG. He said that he had been in Riyadh last summer at the invitation of the Saudis, to give his views on questions of national defense there. But since then, he has had no further contacts. The first press reports on negotiations between Wust and the Saudis were in March. A Munich lawyer has charged Wust with infringement of the laws controlling military weapons. A spokesman of the Bonn State Prosecutor's Office stressed that investigations are not presently being conducted against Wust, as STERN alleged, but checks are being made to see whether preliminary proceedings can be brought against the general for a criminal offense.

PAPER REPORTS ON POLAND'S CREDIT DEFAULT

[Rolf Dietrich Schwartz article: "Poland Cannot Repay Credits"]

[Excerpt] Bonn, 9 Jun--Poland cannot repay the credits it has obtained in the West as planned. This was learned Tuesday from private credit circles which, owing to Poland's insolvency declared by Polish authorities during funding negotiations, will have to accept losses that go into the billions. Poland's inability to pay will also burden the Federal Republic's budget this year and next with new, hitherto unknown, payment obligations amounting to billions because of the state guarantees undertaken in the past several years.

According to the figures available to FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU, the current 1981 federal budget will be saddled with at least DM800 million for guarantee commitments undertaken for credits to Poland now in default, meaning credits that cannot be repaid. The payments will be made via the Hermes export credit insurance to FRG exporters whose Polish consumers have become insolvent. Of this amount, only about DM350 million was envisaged in the 1981 budget adopted by the Bundestag last week, so that at least another DM450 million will become payable and due this year.

In the next two years, at least DM1 billion must be included in the federal budgets for payments resulting from credits to Poland now in default, according to the present state of credit commitments. The banks participating in the funding negotiations also fear that Polish financial needs will increase considerably because the aid funds for the payment of the most urgent imports such as foodstuffs and semifinished products in the amount of $3 - $3.5 billion a year, which Warsaw terms vital, haven't been considered in this sum. For the first time, the banking world considers direct payments to Poland from the federal budget inevitable.

CHEYSSON INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN POLICY ISSUES

LD101151 Paris PARIS MATCH in French 12 Jun 81 p 44-45

[Philippe de Baleine and Liliagne Gallifet interview with French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson; date and place not given]

[Text] PARIS MATCH: It seems that the doctrine of the previous government was that Russia's aggressiveness is merely a reaction stemming from weakness. Do you share this view?

Claude Cheysson: I would not presume to say in any case that the USSR is weak. Nor would I presume to believe that France, which is a great country, is capable of reassuring on its own either of the two superpowers.

PARIS MATCH: You advocate "clarity" with respect to the USSR. How will it be shown?

Claude Cheysson: Like other countries, the Soviet Union should know where we stand. I also have a certain image of France, just as many other people have had. I believe that it counts and that what it thinks should be clearly expressed. Whenever either Soviet decisions or Soviet actions seem--to put it diplomatically--"regrettable," we must say so very clearly. Whenever the Soviet Union invades an Afghanistan, it isn't enough to say that we would react if another invasionwere to occur elsewhere. This was a very grave matter. Our attitude to other problems will be equally clear. Francois Mitterrand recently has discussed problems with Helmut Schmidt which don't concern us directly but which do interest us, including that of the upset to the military balance caused by the fact that the Soviets have acquired more SS-20 missiles. It is not appropriate for us to remain on the sidelines even if we are not to participate in any counteraction.

PARIS MATCH: Poland is facing a resounding economic crash. France has already lent it considerable funds. Will you continue to help it by agreeing to a very big request for additional funds, which Poland will soon have to make? And do we have the means to do so?

Claude Cheysson: I could simply tell you that we haven't acted alone and that we will make the appropriate decisions together with our partners, but I will go further than that. What is happening in Poland is bewildering. The fact that it may be possible for an Eastern socialist country to gain more freedom of expression and reorganize its economic and social forces in a more diversified manner could prove a political fact of major importance. If the Poles were to achieve this, it could be tantamount to opening a completely new chapter in the Eastern countries' history. This development should be considered in a friendly manner and with profound commitment. It is up to the Poles themselves to achieve all this, but if, while they are trying to achieve it, they ask for our help, I cannot imagine that any economic considerations could come first. What could happen in Poland would be one of the major political events since the war.

PARIS MATCH: Wouldn't communist participation in government after the parliamentary election hinder action on your part?

Claude Cheysson: Does this mean that you know that communists will participate in the government? Drop a line to Francois Mitterrand; your self-assurance will interest him.

PARIS MATCH: Don't you believe this? In any event, there will be communists among the majority which will support you.

Claude Cheysson: I have not said that there will be no communists in the government. I think that you anticipate things. It is true that there are communists within our majority and I am proud of the fact because it is only for the third time in the history of the republic that workers as a whole are represented in the majority.

PARIS MATCH: But countries such as Saudi Arabia already have hinted that they would scale down certain agreements if the French Government were to include communists.

Claude Cheysson: This is unacceptable. I feel that it is no concern of mine who is or is not a minister in the United States, China, Saudi Arabia or Algeria, and I deny anyone in the world the right to interfere in these matters in France. Furthermore, what counts more--the policy pursued by a country and any action taken by it, or the fact that any particular minister is called Dupont or Durand? France doesn't only mean a few people in power. France has an industry, engages in economic activities and plays an important role in the world. The only thing that matters is the policy which it pursues, with whom and within the framework of what commitments. I am telling you what I will say in Washington.

PARIS MATCH: What changes do you intend to introduce in France's Arab policy?

Claude Cheysson: Our policy will entail very close connections with Maghreb countries--I will not conceal from you the fact that, when I learned about the accident in which Mr Benyahia was involved and when it was believed for 2 hours that he was dead, I was greatly affected personally. It will also entail very close connections with the Arab League, which is established in black Africa. As far as the Middle East is concerned, we have already stated that any agreement previously concluded will be respected. Our present stance with respect to the Near East is similar to that of the previous government. There will be some changes and some new orientations will be adopted, but there will be no complete break. Obviously, the fact that the feelings of the present leaders differ from those of the previous ones will play a role in this sphere. We are in a position to establish a dialogue with Israel which wasn't possible previously. This could prove useful in the future. The Americans will no longer be the only people in the West to be able to talk with the Israelis. Candidate Francois Mitterrand solemnly emphasized the need to abide by major principles. Among them is the principle that all peoples in the Near East, including the Palestinian people, have a right to self-determination. We enjoy a great advantage--we have arrived on the scene completely fresh, new and young. We can venture to say things which our predecessors could not mention after so many years. It is always the child who says "the emperor is wearing no clothes." It may be necessary to emphasize such fundamental truths both in the Near East and elsewhere.

PARIS MATCH: In the newly formed government, there are some pro-Arab and some pro-Israeli ministers. Will this not create tensions?

Claude Cheysson: France's foreign policy is determined by the president and the government, not by party members. Francois Mitterrand will ensure this, even vehemently. Thepresident, the premier and the three ministers who are here at the Quai d'Orsay can have their say. It doesn't matter what the others say if their statements stray from the general direction.

PARIS MATCH: Will the president visit Israel?

Claude Cheysson: Whenever circumstances allow. A similar reply has recently been conveyed to Saudi Arabia.

PARIS MATCH: Will the importance which you attach to human rights make you treat certain countries differently, according to whether you like or dislike their regime? Even Russia and China trade with Chile and Argentina.

Claude Cheysson: I have never said this. I have merely mentioned respect for major principles. I haven't used the expression "human rights" because, unfortunately, situations may arise where you will have to disregard some error or violation of some individual's rights if you want to maintain relations and have an opportunity to exert influence on society as a whole. We are not Amnesty International.

PARIS MATCH: African states would like to see sanctions imposed on South Africa but don't want to see them implemented because this would bring about the ruin of many of them since their trade is dependent on South Africa. You have certainly come out in favor of sanctions. Are you in favor of their actual implementation?

Claude Cheysson: We would like to see progress in southern Africa under conditions consistent with our ideas--respect for human rights and any country's right to self-determination. This desire must take precedence over any theoretical, academic thesis, however brilliant. First, the question of Namibia should be considered. Zimbabwe's independence has been a case of remarkable, almost unexpected progress which no one has questioned. In Namibia, a change is needed which would respect the white minority. However, I believe--and my approach to this problem is almost like that of Mendes-France--that Namibia must be given priority. And I don't want to discuss anything else. We will see later how effective sanctions can be. I have mentioned Zimbabwe--if you have a son or a nephew who would like to write an interesting thesis, I would advise him to write one on sanctions against Rhodesia. He will be surprised to discover to what extent those sanctions benefited Rhodesia. Let us oversimplify: A policy of extreme budgetary strictness will benefit any country, provided that it accepts all the injustices to which the weakest are subjected. However, as soon as sanctions are imposed on it, such a policy of austerity can be justified. When Rhodesia became Zimbabwe, it was found that the wages paid there were the lowest in all Africa. On achieving independence, Rhodesia had an industrial structure which would never have been developed to such an extent without sanctions. Therefore, once we open a new chapter with respect to South Africa, we will have to ask ourselves how effective economic sanctions are. Obviously, a boycott will be applied to armaments, France will not supply South Africa with one single weapon, bolt or spare part. And it will not be the only country not to supply any.

PARIS MATCH: A conference on Kampuchea is to take place in July, what attitude will France adopt to the various factions which claim to represent the country?

Claude Cheysson: We respect the UN secretary general's decision to hold such a conference, but none of the factions which exist in Kampuchea will participate in it. This means that dialogue will not make much progress.

PARIS MATCH: When he received a PARIS MATCH representative recently, President Houphouet-Boigny complained that his friends, including France, have let the prices of cocoa and sugar fluctuate on the London and Chicago stock exchanges. These fluctuations, he stated, have been causing ruin to the Ivory Coast. How could this world problem be resolved?

Claude Cheysson: President Houphouet-Boigny is quite right. Fluctuations in the price of agricultural products represent a major problem for developing countries. I recall that during the 2 months which followed my appointment to the Brussels Commission, the price of wheat increased 50 percent. It was an intolerable increase for some of those countries which have to purchase wheat. The price of cocoa has decreased 50 percent in 1 year, whereas the production costs haven't decreased. How can any weak developing country plan its future under such conditions? I will be told that the supply and demand law must be left free to operate, but that law has been completely vitiated as a result of the fact that world trade involves only a small proportion of production--less than 20 percent of the sugar produced throughout the world and 5-7 percent of the butter.

PARIS MATCH: That isn't entirely true as far as cocoa is concerned....

Claude Cheysson: It isn't entirely true as far as cocoa is concerned and the fact remains that it is on the basis of small quantities that a few brokers set prices which are often speculative. This is a major problem that must be tackled as a priority by the industrial and developing countries. France will devote all its energies to this. I would add that we are shocked when the oil companies impose a 10-12 percent increase, but we consider it normal for Third World countries to suffer a 50 percent drop in the price of the sugar which they supply to us or a 50 percent increase in the price of the grain which they buy from us.

PARIS MATCH: The Third World's indebtedness exceeds $400 billion. Several very poor countries are going to have to suspend payments. This could lead to worldwide bankruptcy of the international banking system. What should be done? Could a worldwide moratorium be considered?

Claude Cheysson: You have expressed the problem well, but permit me to tell you that your answer is inadequate. Of course, there should be a moratorium for the countries most deeply in debt. This has already been done for Bangladesh, Ghana... But the problem is more general. Presently there are financing requirements extending beyond payment or cancellation of debts. The fact that there is danger of debts not being paid will result in the banks no longer being able to act as intermediaries between the world's considerable floating capital and developing countries' markets, which need these sums. If debts are no longer paid, the banks will go bankrupt, as you said.

In fact, the issue must be approached from a broader angle. Third World countries must be helped in carrying out the necessary internal restructuring to consume less oil and to develop their energy output. Here is an elementary observation: The underdevelopment of many of the Third World countries was caused by the excessive strength of nature--encroaching forests, a sun which burns everything, violent winds. These are forms of renewable energy. Sizable investments must be made to free these countries from oil imports. They must also be allowed to develop.

This is a human duty, a political necessity and a requirement for the world economies. The only fields in which the Western countries have experienced growth since 1973 are exports to the Third World.

This all means stronger budgetary aid, the creation of public machinery to support banking channels, a system to mobilize the considerable sums available in the world and to inject them where there are opportunities for expansion, particularly into certain Third World markets.

PARIS MATCH: Do you mean that we are willing to guarantee minimum returns for floating petrodollars if invested in the Third World?

Claude Cheysson: I would like this to be the conclusion reached by the major industrialized countries' finance ministers. In any case, this system of protecting floating capital, where needed, would not depend entirely on national banks. There is the World Bank, the Monetary Fund, the regional banks.... It is the interplay among all these methods that must ensure sufficient protection for floating capital to enable it to participate in a new world impetus.

LE FIGARO SEES EROSION OF SOCIALIST POSITIONS

[Charles Rebois report]

[Excerpt] In the race against time, in which the new government is engaged, it has been losing some of its advance with every passing day, but because of the advantage which it has secured by calling early parliamentary elections it can nontheless hope for good results.

This is the most important deduction from our second [LE FIGARO-SOFRES] opinion poll on the electorate's voting intentions, which was carried out on 1-2 June.

In fact, a certain erosion of Socialist positions--especially with respect to the French people's hopes--can already be observed in simulated voting. On 4 June, it appeared that 33 percent of the people interviewed would vote for the PS and its Left Radical and other left allies, compared with 34 percent on 1 June.... The extreme left (2 percent) and the extreme right (2 percent) also have lost one point each. Both the PCF (17.5 percent) and the UDF (20.5 percent) have gained one.

If your discount the 2 percent obtained by the ecologists, the entire left has scored 52.5 percent of votes, as compared with 53.5 percent on 1 June, and the outgoing majority has scored 45.5 percent, compared with 44.5 percent.

ARMENIANS OCCUPY TURKISH AIRLINE OFFICE IN PARIS

[Text] Paris, 11 Jun (AFP)--Fifteen militants of an Armenian liberation group took over the Paris offices of the Turkish National Airline today to protest against recent attacks on Armenian centres in France.

Anti-riot police took up positions near the building soon after the peaceful occupation began. The demonstrators, accompanied by French anti-fascists, entered the offices in the Avenue de l'Opera and asked staff and customers to leave. They hung a banner from the building attacking fascism and the role of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in Turkey's Armenian national question.

The occupation was to protest against attacks on Armenian churches and on a cultural centre in Paris in which one person was killed, a demonstrator said.

"These racist (attacks) are the logical sequel to the national oppression of the Armenian people and also the Kurdish people in Turkey," he added.

FORLANI GIVES UP; SPADOLINI DESIGNATED NEW PREMIER

AU101939 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 10 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 10 Jun (ANSA)--Premier-Designate Arnaldo Forlani this evening gave up his bid to form Italy's forty-first postwar government and returned the mandate he had received from head of state Sandro Pertini on May 28, only 2 days after the resignation of Forlani's four-party coalition. Forlani arrived at his decision at the end of a second round of consultations with his own Christian Democrats, the Socialists and the Social Democrat, Republican and Liberal parties, the five parties which had expressed varying degrees of willingness to enter a new Forlani-led coalition.

Pertini has called on the secretary of the small Republican Party, Giovanni Spadolini, to come to the Quirinal presidential palace tomorrow. The head of state is expected to give the mandate for a new attempt to form a government to Spadolini.

Forlani gave up his bid to succeed himself as head of government after a study of the condition laid down by the Republican and Socialist Party delegations yesterday and a hearing of the Liberal Party delegation this morning. The Republicans and Socialists, led by their secretaries, Spadolini and Bettino Craxi, conditioned their entry into a coalition on an urgent measure by the outgoing government to ban the Propaganda Two Masonic lodge, the occult center of economic and political power and an alleged broker for a range of misdeeds.

The 56-year-old head of the Republican Party, expected to be given his first chance to form a government tomorrow, entered politics at a relatively late age. Before accepting the request of the Republican Party secretary of the time, Ugo la Malfa, to run for Parliament on the party slate, in 1972, Spadolini was a professor of contemporary history, writer and a newspaper managing editor. He was the managing editor of the prestigious Milan paper, CORRIERE DELLA SERA, from 1968 until 1972.

Spadolini Agreement

[Excerpt] Rome, 11 Jun (AFP)--Republican Party leader Giovanni Spadolini today agreed to try and form a new Italian Government following an unsuccessful attempt by outgoing Christian Democrat Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani. Mr Spadolini received the call from President Sandro Pertini, and accepted it "with reservations" according to the traditional formula.

MINISTRY REJECTS ISRAELI CRITICISM OVER IRAQI LABS

[Text] Rome, 10 Jun (ANSA)--The Italian Foreign Ministry today rejected Israeli criticism of the Italian role in the construction of nuclear laboratories in Iraq. The note asserted that this criticism was launched in an attempt to justify the Israeli air strike against Iraqi nuclear installations at Tammuz on Sunday. It was pointed out that the Italian part in supplying these laboratories "was not only impeccable in the terms of the nuclear nonproliferation treaty but directly responded to the purposes listed in article 4 of the treaty." This article, the Italian foreign ministry recalled, "aims at facilitating the peaceful use of nuclear energy by seeking to impede proliferation for military purposes."

In another section of the note, the ministry declared that, "Iraq, as opposed to Israel, is a signatory of the nuclear nonproliferation treaty and has opened its territory to international inspection by the International Atomic Energy Agency, inspection which, therefore, also covers the laboratories supplies by Italy." All this, including the nature of the fuel provided by Italy for use in the laboratories, is perfectly known in Israel and elsewhere, the note added.

COMMUNISTS GREET MONGOLIAN PARTY CONGRESS

LD100751 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 4 Jun 81 p 2

[Text] The 18th Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party [MPRP] Congress, which began 26 May, has now been held. The congress was held on an historic date for the Mongolian people: the 60th anniversary of the MPRP and the triumph of the revolution.

Diniz Miranda of the PCP Central Committee was the party's representative at the congress' proceedings. We reproduce in part the greetings message to the MPRP Central Committee:

Dear Comrades, in the year of the 60th anniversary of the MPRP and of the triumph of the revolution, the PCP Central Committee greets on behalf of the Portuguese communists the 18th MPRP Congress and the heroic Mongolian people who, with the victory of the 1921 people's revolution over the feudal oligarchy, committed themselves to building socialism along a path as yet unexplored, effecting profound democratic and socialist transformations, advancing centuries in their historical evolution and proving the vitality of Marxism-Leninism.

Beginning the first year of the new 5-year plan, the Mongolian people, who have fulfilled and even exceeded the targets set at various stages of building socialism, are devoting their political zeal and industrious enthusiasm to implementing the MPRP's program.

From being backward and feudal country, Mongolia has become, through its people's hard work and struggle under their party's revolutionary leadership and enjoying the USSR's internationalist support, a staunch member of the socialist community and an industrialized and agriculturally developed country in which the people's welfare is the state's predominant concern. The Portuguese communists feel that the heroic Mongolian people's deeds are their own and express to them their most steadfast solidarity at this time when they are celebrating 60 years of victorious revolution, which clearly demonstrates socialism's superiority over capitalism.

Dear comrades, socialist Mongolia's achievements form part of mankind's irreversible progress along the path of freedom, independence, progress and socialism.

Attempting at all costs to check the progress of the world revolutionary process and confronted with the profound and widespread crisis in which the capitalist system is struggling, imperialism's most reactionary and aggressive circles have been exacerbating international tension and intensifying the arms race in search of military superiority over the socialist camp.

The new U.S. administration is resorting adventurously to the old policy of threats, aggression and interference in people's internal affairs. The Chinese leaders' constant provocations against the People's Republic of Mongolia, which the PCP firmly condemns, are connected with imperialism's warmongering and aggressive strategy.

However, the PCP views the evolution of the international situation with confidence. The strengthening of the socialist countries' economic and defense capability--and in particular that of the Soviet Union--the development of the struggle of the working class in the capitalist countries and the victories achieved by the national liberation movement are powerful realities which demonstrate that the historical initiative has definitively passed to the revolutionary forces' camp. The dangers to peace and to the people's independence and security are real but can and will be dispelled by united action by all the revolutionary, anti-imperialist and peace-loving forces. The Portuguese communists believe that the unity and cohesion of the international communist and workers movement, on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, are a decisive factor for opposing and finally defeating imperialism's maneuvers.

SOCIALISTS, COMMUNISTS CONFER ON AUTONOMY REPORT

LD100849 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 6 Jun 81 p 11

[EFE report: "PSOE-PCE Agreement on Autonomy Report"]

[Text] The socialists have declared themselves in agreement with the political assessment which the PCE has made concerning the autonomy report of the committee of experts chaired by Professor Garcia de Enterria, on which the communists have drafted a report which they disclosed yesterday to the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] at a meeting attended by the two parties' principal leaders.

Madrid, 5 Jun--The PSOE and the PCE held a meeting today at which they studied the committee of experts' report on the autonomy issue and the document on the report presented by the Communist Party.

At the meeting, the points of disagreement with the document were reviewed, and there was agreement in regarding it as the framework which makes it possible to plan the implementation of autonomy, according to socialist sources.

The same sources stated that the document of the committee chaired by Professor Garcia de Enterria will continue to be studied at subsequent meetings. They also said that the government's starting contacts with the political parties' leaders to learn their opinions is awaited.

The aspects of the report which the PSOE deems to be not quite acceptable will be disclosed following the meeting with the government.

With respect to the report on the Garcia de Enterria document, which was drafted by the PCE and presented to the PSDE at the meeting, the socialists stated that they will study it and that in an initial review there is agreement with the communists on matters of a political nature. The PSOE agrees with the need for harmonizing elections, that they should be held at the same time to avoid constant election periods, and that general elections should be harmonized with local elections. They also agree on the issue of the minimum percentages for securing representation.

The meeting was attended by PSOE and PCE Secretaries General Felipe Gonzalez and Santiago Carrillo, as well as by PSOE Executive Committee members Javier Solana, Enrique Mugica, Raimon Obiols and Maria Izquierdo, and PCE Executive Committee members Simon Sanchez Montero, Enrique Curiel and Carlos Alonso Zaldivar.

PCE SECRETARIAT ISSUES NOTE ON FACTIONALISM

LD091503 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 5-11 Jun 81 p 5

[Apparent text of PCE Central Committee Secretariat 29 May note: "Conditions for Democratic Political Debate"]

[Text] The PCE Central Committee Secretariat has learned that in connection with the congress debate instances have occurred of members' meetings and contacts outside the normal organizational channels, which in certain instances have given rise to the drafting of documents, published or otherwise, in which some groups--and this is a violation of the rules and the beginning of factional activity--adopt stances in relation to the coming 10th congress.

The Central Committee Secretariat believes that a genuine democratic political debate is only possible if the party's procedural rules are respected.

The formation of groups and of group platforms leads to a kind of discussion which doesn't proceed on the basis of the Central Committee's theses, approving, rejecting or amending them, as is the right of each member or organization, but creates the crystallization of and confrontations among groups, the hardening of various stances, in short, the splitting of the party.

The party, which has the responsibility of playing a vanguard role in the development of the democratic change, should always--but even more so in the current situation--guide its debates toward the search for political solutions to the major current problems, which concern our people as a whole and the workers especially. If instead of doing this, the party becomes a field for internal confrontations among groups, it isolates itself from the people and from reality and is in grave danger of disintegration.

In the various bodies in which he takes part, each member has the right and duty to express himself in accordance with his thinking, to defend his opinions and to seek the votes of other members--who are free to give them or not to give them--in favor of them. He also has the right to criticize the leadership bodies at any level. The collective opinion which will culminate in the 10th congress' decisions is formed through these channels.

To ensure that the discussion is democratic and politically enriching, it is necessary for each member of the party to approach it with an open mind, defending his opinions but also listening and taking into account the other comrades' stances and striving to achieve a truly collective formulation.

In the congress forum feature of MUNDO OBRERO and HUESTRA BANDERA, each communist has the right to publish his opinions on the theses and rules, whatever they may be, without limitations other than those imposed by space.

But the Central Committee Secretariat reiterates that no group document or activity is acceptable because this is contrary to the rules. Party discipline is the same for all members, and each of them accepted it voluntarily on joining our ranks. The various party bodies have the duty of enforcing it.

CARRILLO HOLDS TALKS WITH CUBAN DELEGATION

LD091539 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 5-11 Jun 81 p 17

[Text] PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo met with Jesus Montane Oropesa, alternate member of the Politburo and full member of the Secretariat of the Communist Party of Cuba. The talks took place in a fraternal atmosphere. Matters of mutual interest and issues connected with the international situation were broached.

NORWAY

PAPER PRAISES PRESIDENT REAGAN'S 'PRAGMATISM'

LD110849 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 9 Jun 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Toward a U.S.-Soviet dialogue"]

[Text] As tension in and around Poland mounts hour by hour, we were given over the Whitsun weekend a small but important signal that the United States seems to be prepared to resume a cautious dialogue with the other superpower, the Soviet Union. In Washington, Secretary of State Alexander Haig announced that U.S. and Soviet officials will meet as early as this week to prepare for the talks on nuclear arms in Europe. And when Haig meets his Moscow counterpart Andrey Gromyko, in the United States in September, it is expected that the talks will have made sufficient progress for the two of them to be able to fix a date for formal negotiations.

Nor was this an isolated signal. Just before Whitsun, President Reagan--after a long period of hesitation--appointed a new ambassador to Moscow. And his choice fell on a sober and acknowledgedly capable professional diplomat, Arthur Hartman, who most recently has spent 3 years as his country's ambassador in Paris, and who once belonged to the inner circle around former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. Haig himself comes from the same circle, as do his political representative Stoessel, and the leader of the European section of the State Department, Eagleburger. This bears witness to a healthy progmatism in the new U.S. President, and opens up possibilities that day-to-day U.S. diplomacy will not only be characterized by sobriety and realism, but also by an admission of the necessity of entering into a constructive dialogue with the Kremlin. The fact that the Americans are also resuming talks with the Soviet Union on new grain supplies will also help to strengthen contacts; by lifting the grain embargo on the Russians for purely domestic political reasons Reagan acted contrary to the stern rhetoric he is fond of using when Moscow is the target.

One of the most important accusations now being leveled against Reagan in Soviet propaganda--and by the political left in Europe--is that the Americans are insisting that they will only negotiate with the Soviet Union from a "position of strength." But this is a criticism which the United States should take calmly--throughout history no one has been more aware of the importance of a position of strength during negotiations than the Russians themselves. Their only rivals in this respect might be the leftwing trade union leaders in Norway and other Western nations, who have a good idea of what they need behind them when they have to negotiate a wage settlement, but who cannot or will not realize that the same negotiating mechanisms are just as important on the international stage.

West European governments officially--and privately--welcome the U.S. wish for a certain strength buildup. But another requirement must always be that strength is not the only thing to be brought into a dialogue between the United States and the Soviet Union--the Russians must also be offered the prospect of certain advantages--political, economic, diplomatic--if they choose the path of negotiation and of political methods rather than confrontation and the use of military force. Not least at a time when the Polish crisis is becoming ever more acute, it is desirable to encourage the Russians to continue to seek political solutions. For this reason it is important that we attach special importance to the last few days' signals from Washington on its readiness for a dialogue. However, naked confrontation--without a dialogue--is what we would be given if the Russians were still to march into Poland. The choice and the responsibility now lie with the leaders in the Kremlin.

NORTH'S ATAKOL DENOUNCES ISRAELI RAID ON IRAQ

TA101147 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 10 Jun 81

[Text] The Israeli raid on a nuclear plant in Iraq has been denounced by the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. In a statement today, the minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, described it as an unscrupulous attack on Islam, humanity and peace in the region and the world. He called on the United Nations Security Council to take the necessary decisions and measures against the attack.

TURKS RESTORE NICOSIA WATER SUPPLY FROM MORPHOU

[Text] Deputy Interior Minister Stilianou announced that yesterday afternoon the Turks restored the water supply, which amounts to 9,500 tons per day, to Nicosia from the Morphou area. They have not yet restored the water supply from the Sykhari area, however,

Speaking at a news conference, Stilianou referred to the government's efforts to ease the situation in the various refugee housing projects resulting from the recent water shortage. He also referred to measures the government took and continues to take both for the short-term as well as the long-term solution of the Nicosia water supply problem and to that of other towns.

The director of the Nicosia water board, Palantzis, stated the government supplies approximately 9,000 tons per day to meet the needs of the Turkish Cypriots in Nicosia, nearly as much as they supply us. If, however, one bears in mind the quantity supplied to Famagusta, which amounts to 3,000 tons per day, then the supply of water we give the Turkish Cypriots is much greater than that they allow us to have from the Morphou area.

Referring to the Sykhari water supply he said this augments the supply of water to Nicosia during the months of June through August by 3,000 tons per day. This year, however, this supply has not yet been restored despite the appeals of the Greek Cypriot to the Turkish Cypriot side with the result that huge problems were created.

UN SECRETARY GENERAL WALDHEIM TO VISIT IN JULY

NC090736 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 9 Jun 81

[Excerpt] According to reports from the United Nations, UN Secretary General Dr Waldheim intends to visit Cyprus in July, at which time it is believed that the prospects for the development of the Cyprus problem will be evident.

Specifically, it is reported that the UN secretary general, who is aware of the current behind-the-scenes deliberations on the Cyprus problem, is awaiting developments during July before renewing his efforts by visiting Cyprus.

During his New York contacts with the interested parties to the Cyprus problem, he refrained from making any assessment. He simply stressed that he will intensify his mediation efforts when things are clarified and that this will happen during July. Dr Waldheim's presence on the Cyprus stage is important because the UN General Assembly will meet next September and the Cyprus problem is permanently included on the General Assembly agenda.

NC051722 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in English 1550 GMT 5 Jun 81

[Text] The president of the republic, Mr Kiprianou, has said that the moment of truth has come in the efforts to find a solution to the Cyprus problem through the intercommunal talks. He was speaking at the ceremony of the presentation of the credentials of the new Swedish ambassador to Cyprus, Mr (Carl Wilhelm Orn). The foreign minister, Mr Rolandhis, and other officials were present.

President Kiprianou said that so far the intercommunal dialogue has been fruitless because of the refusal of the Turkish side to submit constructive proposals. The dialogue, he added, cannot go on indefinitely without results. So, the moment of truth has come. We shall wait patiently to see what will happen in the next few months. We have to see whether the Turkish side really wants the dialogue to be conducted in a constructive manner and with the purpose of finding a just solution.

In presenting his credentials, the Swedish envoy referred to the growing relations between the two countries in the field of trade, tourism and cultural exchanges. He also said that as neutral and nonaligned states, Sweden and Cyprus have found numerous occasions to work together in a fruitful and productive spirit at the United Nations and in other international forums.

PAPER ON SOVIET DESIRE FOR SHIP REPAIR FACILITIES

[Text] Through the state organization "Sudoimport" the Soviet Union is sounding out Greek shipbuilding and repair yards for an agreement which would permit the repair of Soviet naval auxiliary ships at these yards. This Soviet interest, which according to certain maritime circles already appears to have taken a definite form through an agreement-in-principle with a well-known shipbuilding and repair yard, was expressed after the negative development in the agreement with the Neorion of Siros [shipbuilding yard] last December which the Soviet Union did not renew because the Neorion management decided against repairing Soviet naval auxiliary ships in its facility, accepting only commercial ships.

Acting under the pressure of repair requirements of auxiliary units of its Mediterranean fleet, the Soviet side already appears to have been in direct contact with the management of other large Greek shipbuilding and repair yards for an agreement similar to that signed with the Neorion of Siros in 1979. On the part of the Greek yards there appears to be willingness for cooperation with the Soviets in the repair sector, particularly since Greek yards are not facing a period of "prosperity." According to the same reports, some form of agreement-in-principle has already been reached between the Soviets and the "Khalkis shipbuilding yards," owned by the I. Karras group, for the repair of naval auxiliary ships. There are also indications that regardless of its cooperation with any one specific unit, the Soviet side may not limit itself to such an agreement with only one yard, but that it will seek agreements with others in an effort to get the speediest possible repair of its naval auxiliary units.

These Soviet initiatives reconfirm the conclusion that, as was the case with the Neorion of Siros, the USSR now once again appears to give priority to the repair of its naval auxiliary units and is far less interested in serving its mercantile fleet.

It is, however, underlined that these agreements sought by the Soviets are of a strictly private nature and fall within the framework of similar cooperation they already have with yards in other Western countries. Consequently, any rekindling of concern from allied countries, as was the case in the Neorion of Siros case, will contain a large dose of exaggeration.

It is specifically recalled that from time to time either NATO as a whole or certain of its member states have demonstrated discomfort over this type of Greek-Soviet cooperation. This is totally unjustified, because such pressure upon the Greek side over a purely economic matter could be interpreted as an attempt to convince the Greek authorities to disregard the great economic and foreign exchange benefits of a purely private transaction on which an entire Greek sector relies for its living.

Similar agreements have, in any case, been signed with Italian shipbuilding yards as well as with Canadian yards. The latter even cooperate with the USSR in repairing Soviet fishing boats, the peculiar electronic equipment of which was recently exhaustively dealt with in the international press.

According to diplomatic observers, NATO complaints to date--with the Neorion of Siros--stem from the fact that of necessity the facilities offered to Soviet ships are evaluated by comparison to the geopolitical importance of the area within which the Soviet fleet moves and anchors.

TURKS SUSPECTED OF SPYING ON GREEK ISLANDS

NC061916 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 6 Jun 81 p 1

[By TO VIMA correspondent]

[Excerpt] Rhodes, 5 Jun--It seems that the discovery of a corpse in the coastal area of Psalis on Kos Island, in conjunction with the arrival in our islands of additional Turks who claim to have lost their bearings or who arrived by swimming because they were cast into the sea from ships, has raised problems for the competent authorities who are examining this "phenomenon."

The proliferation of recent incidents concerning the discovery of Turks--mainly young--on Greek shores has raised many questions. Nobody can deny the fact that these incidents are anything but accidential, and that on the contrary they constitute serious indications that the Turks have already begun implementing some plans which basically aim at spying on our islands. Last Wednesday, the corpse of an unknown man, 28-30, with short hair, was found on Kos island. Investigations concluded that the corpse was a Turk (this was confimed by circumcision), who was a military man.

Naturally, nobody knows nor will anyone ever know how he reached the shores of Kos island. In any case, the Turk was found wearing his bathing suit with flippers on his feet.

TURKMEN CALLS FOR PUNISHMENT OF ARMENIAN TERRORIST

TA101035 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 10 Jun 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, in a statement in connection with the martyrdom of Mehmet Savas Yarguz, the secretary at the Turkish Consulate in Geneva, said that the grief felt is profound. Noting that killing an honest person and leaving two orphans behind was an incredibly inhuman act, Turkmen said: It is the right of humanity to expect the world Armenian community not to keep silent in the face of these continuing murders that are being committed in the name of this community. Our prime minister, in his recent news conference, replying to a question put to him by a journalist concerning the attack against an Armenian church in Paris said: As you know, our government is categorically against all forms of terrorism and reacts with hatred to these attacks in France. It comes to mind that these attacks in question directed against Armenian churches might be connected with the different factions of the Armenian terrorists and with a settling of accounts among these factions. Trying to attribute these to an imaginary Turkish organization can only be an attempt to create a reason for new attacks to be organized against Turks and Turkish institutions. This is our evaluation.

The murder that has been committed shows that it was the right evaluation. Turkmen noted that the fact that the murderer has been captured for the first time in such incidents is a consolation for the future. He added: We will closely follow the trial of the criminal who has been captured redhanded. We will see whether those behind this murder can be exposed. As we have always stated, the capture of the culprit and the meting out of severe punishment in accordance with the country's laws are the basic factors in combatting international terrorism. We expect every one to fulfill his duty.

VOTCP URGES GOVERNMENT TO STAND FIRM AGAINST RDF

TA091145 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 9 Jun 81

[Station commentary: "A Reply to the Prime Minister"]

[Text] Dear listeners, as you know, Prime Minister Ulusu held a news conference over the weekend and said that it is categorically out of the question for Turkey to undertake any obligations in the region outside its borders. This statement, which at a first glance might seem positive, does not clarify issues concerning peace and security in the region. Ulusu said that Turkey will not undertake any obligations in the region. However, immediately afterwards he added that Turkey is ready to fulfill its obligations within the NATO framework.

Dear listeners, these two statements are contradictory. A decision to extend every possible aid to the U.S. Rapid Deployment Forces aimed at the Gulf region was made at a recent NATO defense ministers meeting held in Brussels. The request to implement this decision through bilateral talks was also expressed. At brainwashing seminars in Brussels, NATO ringleaders such as Luns and Comer said that they applied to Ankara to secure RDF facilities in Turkey and that they did not receive a negative reaction. In other words, if the U.S. RDF aimed at the region is deployed on our territory through the NATO channel or if our territory is used, there will be no opposition because, as Ulusu stated, we have obligations within the NATO framework.

The United States wants to deploy the RDF in the region for its own interests. The United States made NATO take a decision in this direction. Ulusu said Turkey is loyal to the NATO decision and claimed that Turkey has no obligation in the region. This contradiction is aimed at making a distinction between the United States and NATO. Furthermore, it aims at portraying NATO as a factor of stability and even--in the words of Ulusu--as a guarantor of world peace rather than as an imperialist source of aggression and tension.

As was pointed out in the May issue of ATILIM, the Turkish Communist Party Central Committee organ, the government, through such vague and contradictory statements and attitudes, is building a weak foundation as a result of imperialist impositions. Supporting NATO is tantamount to supporting the hegemonist U.S. interests because the United States is the big boss of NATO. This reality was once more confirmed in the recent Rome and Brussels meetings. The RDF, which is a direct threat to security in the Gulf region, threatens our country's security and is contrary to our national interests whether they are deployed as a result of U.S. impositions or through the NATO channel. Given the situation, the government should express its stand in a clear and definite manner. Either the government will take a determined stand against the RDF, saying that NATO is limiting our national sovereignty and threatening our independence, or it will in practice do as NATO says despite its statements. it will be dragged into the U.S. military adventures in the Middle East and it will allow the RDF to use our soil. This stand is tantamount to disregarding our national sovereignty and independence. However, it is clear that Turkey can not be a truly independent country without withdrawing from NATO. It can not freely decide on its sovereignty and security.

SAUDI KING KHALID, MRS THATCHER HOLD TALKS

[By Tom McMullan]

[Text] King Khalid of Saudi Arabia discussed the Israeli raid on Iraq's nuclear plant when he called on Mrs Thatcher at Downing Street today. The bombing was the starting point in hour-long talks which centered on the prospects for peace in the Middle East, said officials. But they declined to go into details about today's meeting, the second between the prime minister and the king in the state visit.

The Saudis are known to be angry at the Israeli raid at the weekend. This is believed to be part of the reason for the king's decision to fly to Paris at the end of the visit for talks with President Mitterrand. Mrs Thatcher, with Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington and Defense Secretary Mr John Nott, told the Saudi delegation she has already condemned the raid in the Commons.

King Khalid was later the guest of the lord mayor of London, Sir Ronald Gardner Thorpe, at a Guildhall banquet. City officials said alcohol was served to the Western guests, but not to the king or Saudi delegation. They were served with yoghurt and fruit juice.

King Khalid's banquet speech did not touch on major policy issues. He said that Saudi Arabia's friendship with Britain was "traditional and long standing, extending deep into the history of the creation of Saudi Arabia. Fortunately, this friendship is further strengthened as a result of the exchange of fruitful visits at the highest level," he said.

ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY VOTES TO EXPEL ISRAEL

JN121803 Baghdad INA in English 1738 GMT 12 Jun 81

[Text] Vienna, 12 Jun (INA)--Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency, IAEA, Friday decided to expel Israel from this international body for its aggression on Iraqi nuclear installations.

Twenty-nine member states of the IAEA Board of Governors voted for the resolution against the United States of America and Canada while Sweden, Switzerland and Australia abstained.

In a statement issued following a meeting to discuss Sunday's Zionist air raid on the Iraqi nuclear installations, the board stressed on the necessity of halting technical assistance to the Zionist enemy and called on the IAEA's general conference to study the grave consequences resulted from the attack.

The board also recommended the general conference to minimize any technical and technological assistance within the agency's aiding programme to be rendered to the Zionist entity.

It recommended extending emergency aid to Iraq to enable it handling the recent Zionist aggression and asked the IAEA's director-general to immediately inform the UN Security Council of its decisions.

The agency's director-general, Dr Sigvard Eklund at the end of today's meeting refuted the Zionist premier's attack on the agency stressing that the agency's inspection systems were carrying out its duties satisfactorily with the confidence of all the agency's member states.

He added that the agency had carried out its periodical inspections on the Iraqi reactor and did not find anything that violates the principles of the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons treaty signed and approved by Iraq.

Members of the IAEA Board of Directors refused to allow the Israeli delegation to deliver a speech to justify its aggression.

WIENER ZEITUNG REVIEWS 273d MBFR PLENARY SESSION

AU050951 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 5 Jun 81 p 3

[Text] At yesterday's 273d plenary session of the East-West conference on a reduction of forces in Central Europe, Hungarian chief delegate Tomas Lorinc asked the NATO states to discontinue their "obstructive tactics" and to permit progress at the negotiations, underway since 1973, by displaying a greater readiness for concessions. Lornic rejected Western attempts to make the "data question" the crucial problem for the conference, and reproached the West in his speech for straining the climate between the two military bloc by holding "constantly larger maneuvers." In the interest of preserving peace, troop exercises in which more than 40,000 to 50,000 men participated should be objected to in principle, he said.

A Western press spokesman defended the NATO dual decision about complementary missile armament while displaying at the same time readiness for negotiations with the East bloc, referring to the "constant modernization of the Warsaw Pact armed forces" and especially to the introduction into service of the new Soviet SS-20 medium-range missiles.

BULGARIAN MINISTER OF CULTURE VISITS VIENNA

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Text] Vienna--Lyudmila Zhivkova, minister of culture of Bulgaria and only daughter of the state and party chief, arrives for a 4-day visit in Vienna today. She has been invited by Minister of Science Hertha Firnberg. The program includes, among other things, talks with Vice-Chancellor Fred Sinowatz in his function as minister of education. The climax is a festive event in the State Opera on Sunday on the occasion of the 1,300-year jubilee of Bulgaria. Lyudmila Zhivkova will also be received by the Austrian president and will hold talks with Karl Blecha, deputy chairman of the Socialist Party and chairman of the Austrian-Bulgarian Society.

Since concluding the cultural agreement in 1973, cultural relations between Bulgaria and Austria have been systematically intensified and are concretely determined by agreements every 3 years; the most recent agreement for 1981-83 only entered into force a short time ago. The main fields of cooperation are the university, museum and library sectors, but also music, threater and film.

ALBANIAN TRADE DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR VISIT

[Text] An Albanian trade delegation, headed by Foreign Trade Minister Nedin Hoxha, arrived in Vienna on Tuesday afternoon. Today talks are being held in the Ministry of Trade and on Friday a protocol on trade exchange will be signed. In the past year, Austria exported goods valued at 87.4 million schillings to Albania. The main export goods were powdered milk, oil products, paper goods and iron and steel. Goods valued at 86.9 million schillings were imported from Albania; vegetables, fruit and tobacco being the most important import goods.

For some time Albania has given up its isolation and has been interested in expanding economic relations with West European countries, giving priority to a neutral country like Austria, according to information from Albanian politicians.

Some time ago Albania offered power to Austria. However, because of inadequate power transmission capacities in Yugoslavia, it was not possible to implement the offer. So far, there has also been no significant participation by Austrian firms in developing Albanian hydroelectric power stations. Some time ago the Voest Alpine corporation, Voith and Elin had formed a consortium for that purpose.

INDUSTRIAL COOPERATION WITH ROMANIA DISCUSSED

[Text] Within the framework of the state visit of Ceausescu, president of the Socialist Republic of Romania, comprehensive economic talks took place between Minister Josef Staribacher and Ioan Avram, minister of the machine building industry and chairman of the Romanian side of the joint Austrian-Romanian commission. Referring to Austrian exports, which have been declining since 1980, in the talks the need was stressed for apporpriate Romanian measures likely to result in a mutually satisfactory development of the goods exchange.

In the field of industrial cooperation, a number of agreements with various firms were concluded, above all in the field of machinery. There are also good prospects in the metallurgical and chemical industries. In the future, cooperation in third markets will be given special attention.

Another means for expanding economic relations could be the establishing of joint companies, which above all, would deal with setting up a trade network. The results of the negotiations, which took place in a pleasant atmosphere, were laid down in an "aide-memoire" which was signed by the two ministers on 11 June.

Trade Problems

[Special DIE PRESSE Report by "Ho"]

[Summary] In the first 4 months of this year Austria's exports to Romania have declined by 25 percent while imports from Romania have gone up by a similar percentage. Nevertheless, the balance of Austria's trade with Romania is still favorable. "However, Austrian firms are suffering considerably as a result of the Romanian importers' payment arrears. Payments are frequently delayed for as long as 10 months, and no interest is paid on such arrears. The accumulated interest losses have already reached nearly 25 million schillings. Small and medium-sized Austrian firms are particularly severely affected by the payment arrears.

Romania will now seek to promote the sale in Austria of its Dacia cars that are produced under a license agreement with the Renault company, and to expand the servicing organization.

The Romanian side also wants Austrian firms to participate in developing the Romanian smelting industry, and in joint venture projects in third markets.

GENSCHER CALLS FOR SOVIET SIGN OF COOPERATION

LD141150 Hamburg DPA in German 1058 GMT 14 Jun 81

[Text] Hamburg, 14 Jun (DPA)--In an interview on South-West radio today, Genscher showed his concern about certain developments in Soviet politics. Above all, he included the progressive production and deployment of medium-range missiles which today represents a devastating threat to West Europe. He asked the Soviets to finally stop further production and deployment of such missiles and to gradually dismantle those already erected.

The politician also pointed out that Moscow has to some extent retracted state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev's promise to agree to confidence-building measures for the whole of Europe, from the Atlantic to the Urals. This would jeopardize the project of a European disarmament conference so eagerly awaited by Europe. Genscher reminded the Soviet Union that at the recent NATO foreign ministers' meeting in Rome the West had given a signal which Moscow should take seriously. The Soviets ought to state without delay that Brezhnev's promise is still valid.

Furthermore, the USSR ought to overcome the imbalance in its expenditures for arms and development aid. A first effective step would be for the Soviet Union to create the same relationship between arms and development aid as the West. Genscher urged politicians in all states of the world to jointly see to it that the Third World is not crammed with arms. Arms control and disarmament should not be confined to Europe and East-West relations.

REACTION TO DIRECT ELECTION OF E. BERLIN DEPUTIES

Becker: West To Protest

LD121108 Hamburg DPA in Cerman 1023 GMT 12 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 12 Jun (DPA)--Government Spokesman Kurt Becker told newsmen in Bonn today that the ambassadors of the United States, Britian and France are going to protest to the Soviet Government against Sunday's direct election, for the first time, of the East Berlin deputies in the elections to the GDR People's Chamber.

Becker also expressed the Federal Government's critical attitude to this direct election. He said that in the opinion of the Federal Government the preservation of the quadripartite status of Berlin and the strict observance and full application of the quadripartite agreement is the basis for a calm and peaceful development of Berlin. The Federal Government's stance is at one with that of the three Western powers.

Becker said that the direct election of the East Berlin deputies has been the subject of close consultations between the Federal Government and the three Western powers whose ambassadors had lodged a complaint in Moscow in 1979 about the GDR changing the electoral procedure and who would now protest again.

Up to now, the East Berlin representatives were sent to the People's Chamber by the city assembly.

Huonker: Clear Violation

LD141058 Hamburg DPA in German 0205 GMT 14 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 14 Jun (DPA)--Guenter Huonker, minister of state at the Chancellor's Office, has affirmed the Federal Government's view that the direct election of East Berlin deputies to the GDR People's Chamber represents a clear violation of Berlin's legal status.

In a radio interview today, Huonker said that this was by virtue of the agreements made between the four powers during and after World War II and the conditions attached to the four power agreement on Berlin.

Regarding German policy, Huonker said that the overall international situation determines in no small measure the state of intra-German relations and opportunities for their further development. To that extent, there exist no differences of opinion between SED General Secretary Erich Honecker and the Federal Government.

On the question of a meeting between Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Honecker, Huonker stressed that the chancellor repeatedly has stated his readiness for such a meeting. However, the timing will have to be right if constructive talks and good results are to be ensured. The topic of discussion of such a meeting would be overall intra-German relations. However, it could be advantageous only if questions of arms control and disarmament are discussed in order to [words indistinct].

Weizsaecker: Grave Act

[Text] Berlin, 14 Jun (DPA)--Richard von Weizsaecker (COU), governing mayor of Berlin, called the direct election of East Berlin deputies to the GDR People's Chamber a grave act which is irreconcilable with maintaining a calm situation in and around Berlin.

In a press statement, Weizsaecker emphasized on Sunday that his assessment was in agreement with that of the Federal Government. He also recalled the reactions by the Western side on the occasion of the change of the GDR election law, including the formal protests by the three powers to the USSR, the chancellor's statement to the Bundestag and the governing mayor's statement to the Berlin House of Representatives.

GENSCHER, MERTES ASSESS RELATIONS WITH FRANCE

[Text] Bonn, 14 Jun (DPA)--After the change of power in Paris, there is no reason to suppose that the next German-French consultations on 12-13 July in Bonn will be more difficult. Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) and Alois Mertes, foreign policy spokesman of the CDU/CSU group, both agreed with this. In an interview on ZDF television, the two politicians assessed the further development of German-French relations under Socialist President Francois Mitterrand as decidedly positive.

Genscher also referred to the parallel interests of Germany and France on primary questions. He is not worried about a possible participation by Communists in the [French] Government. It is crucial for the Federal Government that Mitterrand clearly stated immediately after his election that the Western alliance has absolute priority for France and its security.

In contrast, Mertes thought Communist participation in the government, although an internal affair for the French, would nevertheless also have great effects on the interests of the alliance and the Federal Republic. However, in view of the deep-seated differences of opinion between Mitterrand and the Communists regarding the attitude toward the East-West conflict and the Middle East, he, personally, could hardly imagine that such a participation would come about. Mertes also said German-French relations were rooted so deeply in the two countries that it had taken on a life of its own, independent of any changes in the government coalition either in Bonn or Paris.

PRESS COMMENTS ON BAHR ARTICLE, MOSCOW VISIT

DW111201 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 11 Jun 81

[From the press review]

[Text] FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE writes: The Moscow trip planned by the SPD Chairman Brandt for late June already has begun. Harbinger Egon Bahr marked his departure for Moscow with an article in the Social Democratic weekly VORWAERTS, which levels at the Americans the unjustified charge that they have procrastinated negotiations on the medium-range weapons. Anyone familiar with the complexity of the matter knows that a new U.S. Government cannot in any case be prepared for negotiations within a few months. Bahr's interpretation of the dual decision also must be contested. It is not its purpose to make the deployment of U.S. medium-range weapons in Europe dependent on negotiations with the Soviet Union, but to test the Soviet readiness to make the Western deployment decision superfluous through renunciations of its own. Were it otherwise, the West would provide Moscow with options for having the NATO decision suspended because it was negotiating without renouncing its massive superiority. Bahr and Brandt either fail to understand this or interpret it differently, thereby helping Moscow. This will aggravate tensions.

Bonn's GENERAL-ANZEIGER notes: As one of the former negotiators of the Moscow treaty and an expert on Kremlin mentality, Bahr knew what effect his article in the SPD organ VORWAERTS would elicit. Moscow radio eagerly took up the criticism and reported via its international service that Bahr had come out sharply against the deployment of medium-range weapons in Europe. This is quite correct, to be sure, but what do the opinion makers in Moscow care? hey had a prominent witness from the Federal Republic whose view on the dual decision doesn't seem to be very far away from the Soviet line, thus it was to no avail that Bahr subsequently reaffirmed the Brussels decision.

Duesseldorf's RHEINISCHE POST declares: The whole thing is not surprising: Willy Brandt's intimate friend, SPD disarmanent expert Bahr, has promptly been exploited by Moscow for its anti-Western campaign when he had barely deposited his baggage at his hotel. What is politically more important than the clarification of Deputy Bahr, who valiently advocated in Moscow the criticized counterarming decision of NATO, is the transparent intention of his hosts. Gleefully recalling the hurried German-Soviet negotiations 11 years ago between Gromyko and Bahr in Moscow, the people at the Kremlinprobably believe that they can stage another grand rehearsal of detente in a changed world with this Bonn politican.

Bremen's WESER-KURIER comments: Why should the chancellor be seriously irritated or made to issue corrective statements because of critical remarks by Egon Bahr, who as a deputy doesn't speak on behalf of the cabinet? Legitimately, the old disarmament and reconciliation team of Brandt and Bahr is endeavoring to introduce Social Democratic concepts into government work. If the chancellor wanted to railroad armament through at any cost, the Moscow exploratory talks would not harm him. But if he would like to get away from his hitherto energetically advanced engagement, then semiofficial contacts such as those between Bahr and high-ranking Soviet officials and increasing pressure from the grassroots can only be useful to him. If the talks materialize in which Schmidt, Brant and Bahr are equally interested, their greatest success might be the renunciation of medium-range missiles by both sides.

DIE WELT Commentary

[Enno von Loewenstern commentary: "The Rebuttal"]

[Text] Genscher has repudiated Moscow-visiting Bahr as drastically as is permissible in the cultured manner of speech of a lawyer in diplomatic service.

He talks of "mutual confidence" between Europe and the United States. He quotes himself and the chancellor as witnesses to Washington's will for cooperation. He confirms that the Federal Government is convinced of the "sincerity of U.S. policy toward our country," including its receptiveness to intensive consultations.

And all this is addressed to the amateur diplomat who, prior to his visit to the opposite side, accused our allies--"poison for the alliance, made in the United States,"--suspected them of failing to consult Bonn adequately and held them responsible for "the negotiations not yet having begun."

Bahr, being the chairman of the Disarmament Subcommittee, ought to know better. His determination to agree with the Soviet side is not based on findings of fact but quite discernibly on a feeling that the Soviets simply must be trusted because any other political attitude is inconceivable to him.

Thus, he makes himself the advocate of the Soviet arguments without any regard for the facts. For a politician in his position, this is objectionable enough. The damage would be bound to increase if Bahr would return from Moscow, for instance, with the eloquently described impression that he talked there with absolutely credible people who convinced him of the Soviet Union's good will.

Granted, the personal impression of Bahr--and possibly Brandt--is no counterweight to the sober findings about the excessive Soviet armament. Yet, in his capacity as a self-appointed witness, he could well disseminate a lot of distrust at home and abroad and also burden his party. This would, of course, apply all the more for his superior should the latter decide to travel the same road. What Bonn is up against is no longer just the Krefeld outsiders. As meritorious as some individual clarifications might be, the duty of the Federal Government to launch a comprehensive intellectual counter-offensive becomes more urgent.

LAMBSDORFF ON U.S. HIGH INTEREST RATE POLICY

DW101134 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1500 GMT 9 Jun 81

[Excerpts from correspondent Anger interview with Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff in Tokyo--live or recorded]

[Text] [Question] With a view to the forthcoming world economic summit in Ottawa, did you discuss other matters with the Japanese as well, for example, the general world situation, the cyclic situation, and here, especially, the high interest rate policy which also negatively affects the Japanese?

[Answer] The question concerning the U.S. high interest rate policy was brought up here with considerable emphasis. The Japanese economy and its development are burdened by this policy just like ours, but here too doubts are voiced quite loudly about whether the United States will, and can, change its policy in the foreseeable future. The Japanese, just like the French and us, are interested in discussing the consequences of this policy for the rest of the world with the U.S. President and his aides at the economic summit in Ottawa.

[Answer] I don't think that anybody wants to talk about a front against the U.S. high interest rate policy. After all, we were the ones who urged the Americans long enough to counteract inflation. Ultimately all of us are interested in seeing the world's greatest and most important currency and the world's most important reserve currency, the dollar, as stable as possible and as free from inflation as possible. But surely, we will jointly point out that this entails very serious consequences for our economies in general and our labor markets in particular. We will have to ask the Americans to make allowances for this at least to a degree that will be compatible with the objectives of their policy.

Twenty former Communist deputies who have come behind the Socialists will withdraw. They include Roland Leroy, Pierre Juquin, Madame Moreau--who was beaten by Madame Questiaux--and M. Gremetz. Madame Constans came second to a Socialist, and the second round will presumably be fought between them.

Among those elected are Raymond Barre, Jacques Chirac, Pierre Messmer, Jacques Chaban-Delmas and Maurice Couve de Murville, Christian Bonnet, Pierre Mehaignerie, Marcel Dassault, Jacques Blanc, Jean Foyer, General Bigeard, Jacques Medecin and Bernard Pons.

The Interior Ministry reports that 152 candidates have been elected outright in the 450 constituencies counted. They are 48 Socialists, 48 members of the Rally for the Republic, 46 members of the Union for French Democracy, 6 Communists and 4 various rightwing candidates. This is close to the 1968 record of 154 candidates elected in the first round.

Mauroy Statement

NC141935 Paris AFP in English 1926 GMT 14 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 14 Jun (AFP)--Socialist Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy was re-elected to parliament today on the first round of voting and hailed the stunning showing by his party as a victory for hope and change.

Mr Mauroy, 52, elected to the National Assembly from the northern city of Lille where he serves as mayor, said in a television interview:

"My joy is shared by the members of government and the ensemble of Frenchmen who put their faith in (President) Francois Mitterrand and his government. The French people have confirmed their choice and their orientation," he said. "Better than that, they have bolstered the movement for change. Everything is clear. Hope has the force of law."

Barre Comments

NC142132 Paris AFP in English 2126 GMT 14 Jun 81

[Text] Lyons, 14 Jun (AFP)--Former Prime Minister Raymond Barre, 57, who was re-elected to the National Assembly today, said that the new majority should respect others and "not abuse its victory."

Mr Barre, who resigned last month as prime minister after the victory of Socialist President Francois Mitterrand, also said that the new opposition's duty was firmness and vigilance.

The former prime minister said he would continue "to follow the fundamental problems of his country and serve it impartially."

Chirac Remarks

NC142111 Paris AFP in English 2056 GMT 14 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 14 Jun (AFP)--Mr Chirac, who declared himself champion of the French right after the defeat of Valery Giscard d'Estaing in the 10 May presidential election, urged conservative voters to mobilize for the second round of voting next Sunday.

He said that the results of today's balloting represented a clear victory for the Socialists that could mean an absolute parliamentary majority after the second round.

Mr Chirac urged conservative voters to go to the polls to "defend the ideas of liberty and progress" and noted that the rate of abstentions today was the highest in nearly two decades.

"It is not a time for resignation, but for determination and courage," he said.

Meanwhile, the leader of the other conservative political formation, the Union for French Democracy, said the election was surrounded by demagoguery. "It is not enough to say that one will be generous," Mr Lecanuet said. "The means for it must be provided." He said socialism would increase taxes and inflation, which resulted in unemployment. "Socialism is an archaic ideology which has been rejected by all countries that have experienced it for a time," he said.

Marchais Interview

[Interview with PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais by unidentified questioner during special election program--live]

[Text] [Marchais] The result of the first ballot in the general elections shows that the electorate has confirmed and amplified the choice made in the presidential election. The right has undergone a new and decisive defeat. The left is very much in the majority. The Socialist Party has registered a considerable advance. The phenomenon of the polarization around the president's party has been verified.

It is in these conditions that our party maintains, even slightly improves, its percentage in the score it obtained in the presidential election. However, this overall result brings out large disparities. In certain constituencies, the outgoing Communist deputies have again obtained, and in some cases improved by several points, the percentage they obtained in 1978. In several others, as a result of the Socialist thrust under the current form of voting, some of our outgoing deputies, although they have made advances, are not in a position to go through to the second ballot.

We must now complete the defeat of the right: We must elect a leftwing majority. With this in mind, the French Communist Party will apply the political agreement it concluded with the Socialist Party, which makes provision for reciprocal standing down. It will call for a vote in all constituencies concerned for the new presidential majority. This is the statement I wanted to make. Are there any questions?

[Question] I will be very quick, but I have a very important question to ask you. Do the results of the first round in this general election this evening make you confirm your proposal to support and to actively participate in the government?

[Answer] As far as we are concerned, the result does not imply any modification of what we have said, of our proposals of last week, that is to say, that the French Communist Party, which is part of the new presidential majority, is ready to take on all its responsibilities, including in France's Government.

[Question] It is said that the Communist Party is going into a decline. How do you reject this observation?

[Answer] The idea that the Communist Party is in decline is one which has often been heard in the past. I must say that, naturally, it is a difficult period for the Communist Party. And I think that, after the second ballot, when things will be in order, it will be necessary to have a second look, to say our piece on the form of voting for president and all its consequences. But that is something else. But with regard to the future of the French Communist Party, I am confident of our policy. Moreover, I am certain--of course, the thing is very weak according to the results which we have now--but there is already a slight increase over the presidential election. I am certain that the French Communist Party will recover the influence which it deserves, which its policy and its action in the service of the workers and the people of the nation deserve.

Defferre on PS-PCF Coalition

[Text] Paris, 14 Jun (AFP)--Interior Minister Gaston Defferre said tonight that he did not exclude the possibility that the Socialists might eventually form a coalition government with the Communists.

"That will depend on the decision of the French people and on the possibility of reaching a policy agreement," said Mr Defferre, 70, who is still the Socialist mayor of Marseilles and who was commenting for the government on today's thumping Socialist vote in the first-round legislative elections.

He said the Socialist achievement would not become a victory till the second and final round next Sunday, and he called on those voters who abstained today "to consolidate and amplify today's success."

Mr Defferre credited the achievements of President Francois Mitterrand and Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy's 3-week-old government with producing the big Socialist vote.

But Mr Defferre warned of problems ahead, pointing out that the budget deficit, which had been put at 29,000 million francs (about 5,100 million dollars), was actually more than 51,000 million francs (9,100 million dollars).

PREMIER COMMENTS ON PS-PCF ELECTION AGREEMENT

LD121551 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Jun 81 p 14

[Report on Premier Mauroy 8 June statement in Lille on Radio Europe One: "Mr Mauroy: It Will Be for the PCF To Say Which Path It Intends To Take, Depending on the Poll Results"]

[Excerpt] Mentioning the withdrawal agreement concluded between the PS and the PCF, the premier stated: "The Communists have for a little over 2 years taken great care to show us the differences which could exist between themselves and the Socialists. These differences have been such that it is impossible to lessen them overnight, even when a political formation takes into account the results of 10 May.... Taking into account what the French people decide (in the legislative elections), it will be for the PCF to know exactly which path it intends to follow. I believe that it is for the party to reply. It is for the French people to speak and for the PCF to give a reply. And in one respect, it is for us to sanction it.... The government's options and directions are known. We do not need to negotiate them since Francois Mitterrand...was elected on their basis. In one way, those who voted for him are well aware that this was a second reading for these options and directions. The problem which will arise in the legislative election is what the French people will either invalidate or, as I believe and hope, confirm. Things are therefore clear.... The big question for the PCF is to know exactly where it will stand on the day after the poll."

Asked about the possibility of centrists' taking part in the government after legislative election, Mauroy replied.

"All those who came together to approve the president's options want to be in the government; all those who fought them lack that inclination.... It is hard to have wanted another president, to have wanted a different policy, and then to be in the government."

LE MONDE CITES STATEMENTS ON ISRAELI RAID

[Text] Questioned on Monday, 8 June, in the Europe 1 Press Club on the bombing of the Iraqi nuclear power station, Premier Mauroy said:

"I should like to stress that this concerns a research center subject to the control of the International Atomic Energy Agency, which is headquartered in Vienna. This agency had indeed recently made a control visit. As an attack carried out on foreign territory, the Israeli Government's undertaking is an unacceptable and very serious act which the French Government condemns. Such a raid can only increase the tension in that part of the world.

"The French Government's position is known. It wants the restoration of peace in the Middle East through the guaranteeing of Israel's security within safe and recognized frontiers, through the right of the Palestinian people to a homeland, through the unity of Lebanon. The situation there has been very difficult for many years and has been markedly aggravated for many months now. This unacceptable and very serious act can only complicate an already explosive situation. That is why we denounce this act."

When he was asked if France would take sanctions against Israel and replace the material destroyed, Mauroy added: "We have just learned about this raid. It is perfectly clear that we condemn it. This is our condemnation of a raid which is totally unacceptable. As for the request Iraq may make, it will be studied. Problems had indeed already been raised by this nuclear power station. We are determined not only not to pursue an armament policy but to reinforce control of nuclear power stations. This case therefore obviously deserves to be studied, not only in terms of this unacceptable raid by the Israelis, but equally in terms of the policy we intend to pursue on this plane--a policy of honoring France's word with respect to contracts concluded in the arms sphere. This policy also consists of not locking us in a situation which would prolong this sort of race in a region which is already most difficult and explosive."

Having stressed the government's desire to "improve the moral standard" of arms sales, when asked if the Iraqi reactors could "build a nuclear weapon", Mauroy refused to comment. Asked if this raid "raised doubts" as to Mitterrand's planned trip to Jerusalem, he replied:

"We have not reached that point. I am simply saying that we condemn this raid. You know that there are serious difficulties and serious tensions in that part of the world. It is clear that a raid of this magnitude and this nature can only give rise to events with unpredictable sequels and consequences. We have gone as far as condemning the raid. For the moment, there is no question of taking any steps other than firm condemnation."

Quai d'Orsay: One of the Reactors "Apparently Unharmed"

On Monday night, the External Relations Ministry issued the following communique:

"As the premier said on Monday evening after the bombing of the Iraqi nuclear research center at Tammuz, any attack on the territory of a foreign state is a violation of law and is therefore to be condemned. The Israeli Government's undertaking is a serious act which the French Government deems unacceptable. Moreover, the bombing increases the tension affecting the region as a whole.

"The French technician Mr Chaussepied died during the bomb attack. The president and the government express their grief at the death of their fellow countryman and send their heart-felt condolences to his family and fellow employees.

"Necessary steps were taken immediately to ensure the repatriation of technicians whose presence is not essential for maintaining the security of the installations.

"The first information we possess indicates that of the two reactors one is seemingly unharmed while the second, which contained no nuclear fuel and was therefore 'nuclear free' has been seriously damaged. These are irradiation reactors of which there are some 50 others scattered throughout the world, and are designed for physics research with a view to utilizing nuclear energy.

"These installations are under the control of the International Atomic Energy Agency which made its last trip at the beginning of the year. You recall that Iraq has signed the non-proliferation treaty and has thus accepted the control of the International Atomic Energy Agency. As soon as he took office, the president himself insisted on the need to take the necessary steps to guarantee that these installations are used for peaceful purposes and to prevent any misappropriation.

"The External Relations Ministry immediately got in touch with the Israeli ambassador to express to him the government's shock at the death of a French citizen and asked him to visit the Quai d'Orsay on Tuesday to give the necessary explanations."

MITTERRAND HOLDS TALKS WITH SAUDI KING KHALID

NC131851 Paris AFP in English 1847 GMT 13 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 13 Jun (AFP)--A six-hour visit here today by King Khalid of Saudi Arabia established a basic identity of views on major international issues between the monarch and France's President Francois Mitterand, according to spokesmen for both countries.

The issues, according to these sources, included the Lebanese crisis, the future status of the Palestinians and Jerusalem.

King Khalid arrived around noon aboard his private Boeing 747 and conferred with President Mitterrand before and during an official luncheon at the Elysee Palace.

Among officials participating in the talks were Prince Sultan Ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz al Sa'ud, the King's brother and his country's defense minister, and the French ministers for external relations, foreign trade and defense Claude Cheysson, Michel Jobert and Charles Hernu.

Prince Sultan and Foreign Minister Cheysson later acted as spokesmen for the two sides.

Mr Cheysson stressed that the first foreign chief of state to visit the newly elected French president was "the king of Saudi Arabia, guardian of the holy places."

He added that today's exchange of views had revealed "a very large convergence of views on the great principles inspiring Saudi Arabia as well as France."

The French foreign minister, who reported that Mr Mitterrand had repeated his condemnation of the Israeli raid on Iraq's nuclear center last Sunday, specified that there was a convergence of views on the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), the situation in Lebanon and the status of Jerusalem's holy places.

"We consider that the right of the Palestinian people to live in peace is a sacred right," he said, adding that "no peace is possible in the Middle East if that right is not respected."

On Jerusalem, Mr Cheysson declared that the status of the holy city could not be "modified by any unilateral decision" but should be the object of an international settlement.

On Lebanon, the French official said that "complete agreement" had been reached by Saudi Arabia and France on the need to find an honorable solution acceptable to both the Lebanese themselves and the Arab world.

The foreign minister added that the Camp David accord between Egypt and Israel was "a reality" that should inspire the search for a Middle East solution.

King Khalid's spokesman, Prince Sultan, expressed "complete satisfaction" with policies outlined by the French president in various fields. The prince praised the "clarity" of French policy with regard to the PLO and said that it had the objective of obtaining "justice" and "basic rights" for the Palestinians.

On Lebanon, Prince Sultan reported that Mr Mitterrand had expressed appreciation of Saudi efforts to find an honorable solution.

Turning to bilateral relations, the prince voiced Saudi satisfaction with the cooperation between the two countries, notably in the field of defense. Riyadh, he said, would continue buying from France "conventional as well as sophisticated weapons."

Last October, the two countries signed an agreement covering 14,000 million francs (more than 2,500 million dollars) worth of materiel, including four frigates for the Saudi Navy.

France imports 53 per cent of its oil supplies from Saudi Arabia.

Saudi sources said that as a consequence of the good atmosphere of today's talks--Prince Sultan spoke of the "excellent" impression made by President Mitterrand on his visitors--Arab investors would feel reassured with regard to the future of their investments in a country now led by a Socialist head of state.

Prince Sultan disclosed that President Mitterrand had been invited to visit Saudi Arabia and had accepted the invitation. King Khalid and his party later left Paris for Geneva where the monarch is to undergo a medical checkup.

Cheysson Comments

[Text] Francois Mitterrand has reassured King Khalid. A luncheon and a working session at the Elysee proved sufficient yesterday for the Socialist president to convince the leader of the conservative Arab countries that France will remain faithful to its undertakings in that region. This visit, or course, is extremely important as it follows the Israeli raid on the Tammuz nuclear powerplant in Iraq. They also discussed the problem of the Palestinians, but there was not a word, on the other hand, about arms sales. Claude Cheysson, minister of external relations, confirmed this in an interview on Radio France International:

[Begin recording] There was a very wide review of the situation, making it possible to note that there is a close convergence of views--on the great principles that inspire Saudi Arabia and countries such as France. We consider that the right of the Palestinian people to live in peace, to express themselves like any other people in the world, to have a country of their own, is a sacred right and that without total respect of this right no peace is possible in the Middle East.

With regard to armaments contracts, allow me to say it would have been indecent, indecent, while receiving a head of state--the king of Saudi Arabia--to discuss business with him, to discuss contracts. At no time during this session did we discuss sales contracts. This is not France as we see it. [end recording]

SPADOLINI BEGINS CONSULTATIONS WITH OTHER PARTIES

[Excerpts] Rome, 12 Jun (ANSA)--The Italian premier-designate, Giovanni Spadolini, opens a two-day round of consultations with all the political parties represented in Parliament by meeting today with delegations from the nation's three largest alignments, the Christian Democrats, the Communists and the Socialist Party. Spadolini's prospects for success apparently hinge on the attitude of the Christian Democrats, whose leaders meet today to formulate a position for the party heading into consultations with the premier-designate. The response of the nation's largest party to Spadolini has been extremely guarded thus far.

In the evening, at the end of a full day of consultations in DC party headquarters, one of the few cautious statements made on the new premier-designate came from Giovanni Galloni, who said that Spadolini's bid might be viewed positively because "he has shown that he is not moving with the logic so dear to Bettino Craxi", the Socialist Party secretary. Galloni's remark was an apparent reference to Craxi's insistence on the need for an alternative to Christian Democrat government leadership.

A document approved by Christian Democrat MP's announced that they could back the premier-designate's attempt at government formation on condition that he "moves in a direction not opposed" to their party.

The prudence of the DC at this point, according to the reading of political observers, is more of a wait-and-see stance to determine whether the backing of the left parties for Spadolini might represent a first step toward the creation of an alternative to DC leadership.

The Communist Party, beyond a statement of "appreciation" for the fact that the head of state tapped a non-Christian Democrat, have not yet shown their hand. Communist leaders are saying that their position toward Spadolini will be determined by the government platform he produces.

The Socialists, who appeared to be stalling during the first two week of the crisis and expecting a strong showing at the polls for the June 21 administrative elections to bolster their bargaining position, have said that they will back Spadolini's attempt to form a cabinet "loyally and to its conclusion". They also let it be known that their position going into consultations with the premier-designate would depend largely on his attitude toward the same six points they presented to Forlani.

The issues the Socialists want as planks in a new government program include the clarification of the status of the Propaganda-two Masonic lodge, the alleged "state within a state" which precipitated the resignation of Forlani's cabinet at the end of May, institutional reform, economic policy and foreign policy.

JUDGES DECLARE MASONIC LODGE VIOLATES CONSTITUTION

[Excerpts] Rome, 15 Jun (ANSA)--Italy's Propaganda-two Masonic lodge, under investigation as an occult power center and a key link in a range of criminal activity, has been declared a secret association and, as such, in violation of the Italian Constitution. The advice on the nature of the lodge was handed down at the weekend by the ad hoc commission of three constitutional jurists, Aldo Sandulli, Vezio Crisafulli and Leonello Levi Sandri, named by outgoing Premier Arnaldo Forlani to determine the status of the organization.

A communique from the outgoing premier's office released at the weekend reported that: "The commission feels that the so-called P-Two Lodge manifests the objective characteristics of secrecy." Forlani, who was given a mandate to succeed himself as head-of-government but gave up the bid last Wednesday, has turned over a copy of the commission's findings to the new premier-designate named by President Sandro Pertini, Republican Party Secretary Giovanni Spadolini.

Lodges Suspends Activities

[Excerpt] Rome, 12 Jun (ANSA)--Italy's 526 Masonic lodges grouped into the Grand Orient of Italy will suspend all activities in protest against the "persecution" and "defamation" the Freemasons are subjected to as a result of the scandal surrounding the Propaganda-Two Lodge. A communique issued by Italy's venerable master, Ennio Battelli, in the evening at the end of a meeting of the board of the Grand Orient reported that the suspension will remain in effect "until the climate of indiscriminate persecution and defamation now underway has been dissipated and disolved."

On Tuesday, Rome magistrates investigating the P-Two scandal ordered the seizure of all membership records and dossiers of all the lodges. Italian Masonry is estimated to have about twenty thousand members in the 526 recognized lodges. In response to that move, the venerable master said an attempt was being made to "involve all Freemasonry because of ten or so persons".

In the interim, it was learned that Italian Freemasons have launched a series of appeals containing "denunciations and protests" to a number of international organizations, including the Secretariat of the United Nations, the head of the UN Education, Scientific and Cultural Organization, Amnesty International and other international human rights organizations. They have also appealed to the Italian head of state voicing their concern that the "freedom of association" guaranteed by the constitution is in danger.

VISITING JAPANESE OFFICIALS MEET GOVERNMENT LEADERS

Meeting With Pertini

AU121533 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 12 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 12 Jun (ANSA)--Japanese Premier Zenko Suzuki met here today with Italian Head-of-State Sandro Pertini on the second lap of his thirteen-day tour of six EEC capitals. Suzuki and Japanese Foreign Minister Sanao Sonoda flew in here yesterday and started the official part of their schedule this morning.

With Pertini, the Japanese leaders examined various aspects of the international situation and relations between Italy and Japan, reliable sources said later. Also present at the meeting were Sonoda and Italian Diplomatic Chief Emilio Colombo. Suzuki's visit falls at a time when the Italian Government has only a caretaker capacity due to the government crisis which broke on May 26.

Talks With Forlani, Colombo

[Text] Rome, June 12 KYODO--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo told his Japanese counterpart Sunao Sonoda here Friday that Japan should curtail its exports to the European Community (EC) market as a whole. Meeting with Sonoda, who is accompanying Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki on his current West European tour, Colombo said Italy understands the importance of maintaining the free trade system.

But Italian industries cannot stand aside and let their own products be wiped out by competitive Japanese products in their own markets, Colombo said. He said Italy is imposing controls on imports of Japanese goods but that such a measure is still not strong enough.

Responding to Colombo's remarks, Sonoda said, however, that he did not see sufficient grounds for controlling Japan's exports to EC markets as a whole as the members of the Common Market have import policies differing from one another. Without maintaining the free trade system, the current difficult international economic conditions cannot be revamped, Sonoda said.

Italian caretaker Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani did not touch on the bilateral economic issue when he met with Suzuki before the Sonoda-Colombo meeting. Forlani indirectly expressed his hope during a luncheon later that Japan take measures to solve the trade problems.

Taking up current international developments, Colombo said during his meeting with Sonoda that "double care must be taken" against possible Soviet intervention in Polish affairs. The Italian foreign minister said that the Soviet Union, if it destroys the existing Polish situation, presents a threat to detente. He said that detente and the East-West balance would be also threatened unless the Soviet Union solves the Afghan problem.

The Italian Government thinks that the West must make efforts to balance its military power with the East before opening negotiations with the Soviet Union.

The closed-door discussion between the prime minister and Msgr Casaroli lasted one hour. There was no communique on the issues touched on during the talk released at the end of the meeting. Suzuki turned over to the secretary of state two pieces of modern Japanese ceramics as gifts for Pope John Paul II and received, in return, a volume of lithographs.

BALSEMAO CONFIRMED AS SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC LEADER

[Text] Lisbon, 14 Jun (AFP)--Premier Francisco Pinto Balsemao was confirmed today as leader of Portugal's Social Democratic Party after a 12-hour overnight debate, allowing his to maintain the premiership in the coalition government it leads.

A large majority of the party's 74-member National Council voted at dawn to retain its confidence in the premier, who has faced sharp party and government opposition for weeks from partisans of the late Premier Francisco Sa Carneiro, killed in an air accident last December.

The Sa Carneiro group--led by former Finance Minister Anibal Cavaco e Silva and influential party member Helena Roseta--considered he had been too soft in dealings with leftist-backed President Antonio Ramalho Eanes and the Democratic and Social Center Party, his main coalition partner.

Mr Pinto Balsemao had been elected unanimously to succeed Mr Sa Carneiro as party chief. But the new leader's authority was quickly challenged, and the challenge spread from the party to the government, where in recent weeks he had to handle two delicate interministerial quarrels.

The first concerned a jurisdictional dispute between the Foreign and the European Integration Ministries over negotiations for Portugal's entry into the European Common Market. In the second, the Interior and Justice Ministries both claimed the right to coordinate the various national police services.

DEFENSE MINISTER DESCRIBES U.S. VISIT, TALKS

LD141024 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 0815 GMT 14 Jun 81

[Text] Defense Minister Luis de Azevedo Coutinho this morning returned to Lisbon from an official visit to the United States at the invitation of his U.S. counterpart, Caspar Weinberger. Talking to journalists upon his arrival at Portella airport, Azevedo Coutinho said:

[Begin recording] We had a chance to discuss at the highest level the problem of re-equiping the Portuguese Armed Forces. We had talks in this connection with U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and with Deputy Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci, as well as with the entire U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff. We also visited U.S. command centers [words indistinct] where we had a broad exchange of views for several days, during which we had an opportunity to explain our problems, which were perfectly understood by (?the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff). I return from this trip to the United States full of optimism. [passage indistinct]

[Question] Are there any concrete results regarding U.S. military aid to Portugal?

[Answer] While there, we presented a whole program in this sphere and it was duly examined. (?We shall now have to enter a stage of detailed study and define priorities which will also obviously depend on the financial resources of our country and on the development of the Portuguese Armed Forces. However, the program we presented was very well accepted by the United States, which is fully aware of our requirements and willing to help us. [end recording]

PORTUGAL, SOVIET UNION SIGN NEW TRADE PROTOCOL

LD120909 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Protuguese 7 Jun 81 p 3

[Text] On Friday Portugal and the Soviet Union signed a trade protocol with which the third meeting of the Portuguese-Soviet joint commission culminated.

Secretary of State for Trade Walter Marques said that he expects Portuguese exports to the USSR, which last year totaled 3 billion escudos ($50 million), to increase to $75 million this year.

Walter Marques signed the protocol for the Portuguese side. It was signed for the Soviet side by Deputy Minister of Foreign Trade Aleksey Manzhulo, who declared himself convinced that bilateral trade will experience an acceleration over the next few years.

Shipbuilding and repairs, textiles, cork and port wine were the exports mentioned by Walter Marques as capable of considerable expansion for the Soviet market. The secretary of state also revealed that the protocol envisages the promotion of Portuguese products in the USSR through holding exhibitions and conferences in 1981 and 1982.

Portuguese imports from the USSR totaled $140 million (about 8.4 billion escudos) in 1980, forecasts for 1981 are that that they will reach $200 million, Walter Marques disclosed. These imports--which, it is envisaged, will be diversified--comprise mainly oil, Soviet supplies of which to Portugal are to continue over the next few years, the secretary of state added.

Aleksey Manzhulo, who is visiting Portuguese enterprises, stated that he was greatly impressed by the production units and declared himself in favor of Portuguese-Soviet enterprise cooperation.

MEXICO TO BEGIN OIL SHIPMENTS IN AUGUST

LD120917 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 7 Jun 81 p 3

[Text] Mexico will supply oil to our country and the first shipments will begin to arrive in August.

The Mexican state oil enterprise Pemex yesterday announced that it has reached a preliminary agreement with Portugal to supply oil, at an initial stage, this year. According to Pemex, the supplies will total 10,000 barrels per day from August until the end of the year.

Again according to the same source, Mexico will sign a further, long-term agreement with our country for supplying crude from the beginning of 1982.

So everything indicates that our country is making up any oil supply shortfalls resulting from the war in the Persian Gulf--our traditional supplier region.

LD111646 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 11 Jun 81

[Text] FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher arrived in Madrid this afternoon for a 2-day working visit. He was welcomed by Spanish Foreign Minister Perez Llorca inside the military compound of Barajas Airport where the two men talked for a few minutes in the VIP lounge. They then went on to the Santa Cruz Palace where they began their first working meeting.

Herr Genscher did not make a statement to the press, but he did tell a German journalist that this trip to Madrid is an expression of the FRG's desire to cooperate with Spain and its firm desire to do everything possible to ensure that the negotiations on Spanish entry into the EEC progress rapidly. A more extensive statement is expected from the federal foreign minister at a news conference which he will give at the airport tomorrow before returning to Bonn.

Genscher Supports Spanish Democracy

[Excerpts] Madrid, 12 Jun (DPA)--In Madrid today Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher expressed the Federal Republic's full support for Spanish democracy, which is threatened by rightwing and leftwing extremists. He was received by King Juan Carlos and Prime Minister Leopold Calvo-Sotelo.

The leader of the Socialist opposition, Felipe Gonzales, whom Genscher received this morning for an exchange of views, said afterwards that his aim in the talks has been to quell "disquiet" in Europe over the internal political situation in Spain. He said that the assessment by the European press was now too negative, whereas at first it had been too optimistic. However, the situation following the attempted coup was still very difficult.

Visit Concludes

LD122200 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 12 Jun 81

[Excerpt] At the conclusion of his official 2-day visit to Spain, the West German foreign minister, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, said at a news conference held at Madrid's Barajas Airport that one of the main aims of his visit had been to reaffirm German support for Spanish democracy. Hans-Dietrich Genscher said that he had been able to observe the vitality of Spanish democracy and the forces supporting it, which, he added, deserve the trust of the European states. Genscher then added: I was impressed by the positive outcome of the social and economic pact between trade unions, employers and the government. This is encouraging. Shortly afterwards, the Spanish minister for Foreign Affairs, Perez Llorca, said goodbye to his German counterpart before the latter boarded a military jet which is flying back to Bonn at the moment.

FRENCH FOREIGN MINISTER CHEYSSON PAYS BRIEF VISIT

Arrival at Airport

LD121934 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 12 Jun 81

[Summary] French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson has arrived in Madrid's Barajas Airport. He was courteously welcomed at the airport by his Spanish counterpart, Jose Pedro Perez Llorca. Asked by reporters as he was walking to his car whether there would be a statement, Mr Cheysson said none was planned for the moment.

Agreement on 'Dialogue'

NC131336 Paris AFP in English 1328 GMT 13 Jun 81

[Text] Madrid, 13 Jun (AFP)—France and Spain have agreed to develop a "permanent dialogue" not only on bilateral issues but also on major international questions in an effort to improve current, badly strained relations. The dialogue was instituted yesterday and today during a brief working visit to Spain of French External Affairs Minister Claude Cheysson. Mr Cheysson's visit was preceded by a violent anti-France campaign in the Spanish press, which accused Paris of protecting Basque terrorists. His talks with Spanish Government officials were reported to have been conducted in an atmosphere of "frank cordiality."

The French Minister managed to secure a favorable Spanish response to the idea of close exchanges and "widened contact" between the two governments. However, Mr Cheysson did not attempt to hide the fact that differences remain. While he firmly insisted that France supported Spain in its battle against terrorism, it could not wholly resolve the problem of extradition of Basque terrorists in the way Madrid desires. He cited the case of Tomas Linaza, a suspected militant of the separatist organization ETA-Military whose return to Spain has been demanded. Mr Cheysson told a press conference that "the French Government needed time to examine his (Mr Linaza's) file." But he also noted "France's vocation as the fatherland of human rights.

"It would be a grave error to betray the message of liberty that history has transmitted to us," Mr Cheysson said, adding that such concern "takes nothing from our desire to fight against terrorism." The external affairs minister was also cautious in responding to questions about Spain's entry into the European Economic Community (EEC).

He rejected Spain's expressed wish that it should participate in negotiations on reform of the EEC's budgetary and agricultural policies, since he said such talks should be held entirely within the framework of the Community. Mr Cheysson added that if Spain decided to join the Atlantic alliance it could count on French support.

Spanish liberals were pleased when Mr Cheysson told the press conference that France supported Spanish democracy, which, he added, "is close to us in our concerns and our hearts." Madrid Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez Llorca expressed satisfaction today that relations between Spain and France would now enter a "stage of normalization."

Mr Cheysson's frankness and warmth pleased Spanish authorities, a member of the French minister's entourage reported. The source added that the visit had served to "break the ice" between the two countries. The new bilateral effort to improve relations will move ahead at the end of this month when Spanish Premier Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo visits Paris for three days at the invitation of French President Francois Mitterrand.

Visit Ends 13 Jun

[Summary] French Minister of Foreign Affairs Claude Cheysson has left for Paris after a 15-hour visit to Spain. "At the end of the visit the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs, Perez Llorca, said that in general, the visit had been positive and that without doubt there would be a permanent dialogue which would continue during prime minister Calvo-Sotelo's visit to Paris."

"On the matter of the activities of Spanish terrorists who have fled to France, Minister Cheysson has offered the Spanish Government concrete action within 3-6 months. On the specific and direct question of the Linaza extradition [Tomas Linaza Echeverria, an alleged ETA terrorist, is awaiting a French Government decision on his extradition] he said that Linaza would probably be tried and sentenced in France for the charges against him."

COMMUNIST PARTY OFFICIAL SPEAKS ON POLAND

LD121121 London MORNING STAR in English 12 Jun 81 p 1

[Report by MORNING STAR reporter: "Poles Must Resolve Crisis Themselves," Says Communist Party of Great Britain]

[Text] The crisis in Poland must be resolved by the Polish people without outside interference, the Communist Party's national industrial organizer said in London last night.

Mr Costello, who is a member of the party's Political Committee, was speaking on behalf of its Executive Committee.

"It is understandable that Poland's socialist allies should be concerned, as we are, at the seriousness of the problems there," he said.

"But virtually the entire emphasis of the letter sent to the Central Committee of the Polish United Workers Party by the Soviet leaders is placed on counter revolutionaries as the cause of crisis in Poland. We cannot agree with this emphasis.

"That counter revolutionaries exist who seek to take advantage of the gross errors and the mistakes of the Polish communist party in the past period is not in question.

"But the main problem is to carry forward the process of renewal, to win back the confidence of millions of Poles, to end undemocratic practices and develop socialist democracy to the full.

"This is the only way to establish the leadership of the communist party and win the cooperation of the overwhelming majority of Poles in overcoming the immense political and economic difficulties which confront the country."

The big differences which existed in the Polish communist party including in its leadership, were not between revolutionaries and counter-revolutionaries, but between communists. They were differences on how to strengthen socialism and correct the disastrous errors of the past.

Unfortunately the entire weight of the argument in the Soviet letter was placed behind those who were resisting the process of renewal. The claims it made were similar to those put forward by the "Katowice forum" whose views were so widely attacked and repudiated throughout the Polish party.

"It is for the members of the Polish communist party, and no one else, to elect their delegates to their party congress, and interference from outside in this process can only do harm," said Mr Costello.

"It is not the process of democraticisation which weakens socialism and helps imperialism, but the putting of obstacles in its way.

"The errors made in relation to Czechoslovakia in 1968 must not be repeated. The agreed position of the international communist movement that there should be no interference in the internal affairs of other communist parties or socialist states must be adhered to.

"The international climate in which the events in Poland are taking place is one in which the danger to peace in Europe stems from the war plan of NATO and the proposals to site cruise and Pershing missiles in countries of Western Europe, including Britain.

"It is imperative that the developing powerful mass movements embracing wide and diverse sections of the populations of several West European states are vastly extended. This movement has the full backing of communists. It is scoring important victories.

"Interference from outside in the affairs of Poland can only play into the hands of those who want to stoke up the war drive and who strive ceaselessly to undermine the peace movement."

RIZOSPASTIS REPORTS ON 11 JUN ATHENS PEACE MARCH

[Excerpts] A sea of people covered Athens yesterday when the huge and vast river that overflowed from Ellinikon joined in the center of the city with the mass demonstrations that started from the northern and western suburbs and from the other areas and other quarters. Yesterday will remain a milestone in the struggle of our people for the defense of our national independence and dignity, because the mass character and extent of the demonstration far surpassed the most optimistic forecasts of its organizers. Greek and foreign newsmen estimated the marchers in the tens of thousands, and they were impressed both with their disciplined marching and their military spirit. When at 2130 the head of the march reached the Chamber of Deputies the end was still at Platia Kaloyiron at Dafni.

The three Japanese buddhist monks, who have attended similar marches nearly throughout the world, told RIZOSPASTIS that this was one of the most impressive and militant anti-nuclear and anti-imperialist demonstrations they have witnessed. Here are some characteristic descriptions:

KKE Deputy Kostas Kappos: "Today's impressive demonstration--a sequel to the predictatorial Marathon peace marches--confirms the unshaken desire of the Greek people for the removal of bases of death from our country and for strengthening security in our area and throughout the world."

EDA [United Democratic Left] Secretary Manolis Glezos: "I am participating in the march as the secretary of the EDA and as a Greek citizen because I want the abolition of the bases, which prevent the fulfillment of our national independence."

S. Papakhristou, priest: "Today's grand presence of the Greek people proves that the entire country, all Greeks, irrespective of their political and religious affiliations, demand the removal of the bases and of the nuclear weapons."

Similar statements were made by mayors, deputies, priests and well-known personalities of the arts and sciences. It is a fact that yesterday, side by side with Athens and Piraevs, the whole of Greece demonstrated in unity, sweeping aside all other differences. This is truly a plebiscite which, naturally, the government cannot ignore. In addition, it is an answer to those few who, although they are positioned within the democratic area, refused to participate or even attempted to diminish the importance of the battle that our people are waging to rid the country of the bases and nuclear calamity.

In his message to yesterday's grand peace march of our people in Athens, the chairman of the WPC, Romesh Chandra, said, among other things:

Dear friends, fighters for peace and national independence: In your grand march today, the march of the Greek people toward peace and life, I send you the warmest greetings of the WPC. With us your great initiative is also saluted by the peace movements of the more than 135 countries that are members of the WPC.

The forces of peace throughout the world are fighting with you to counter the criminal attacks of the NATO imperialists and particularly of the new U.S. administration against world detente and peace and the very survival of humanity. Together with you, the people of the entire world support the peace proposals and initiatives of the Soviet Union and the other peace-loving countries for cessation of the competitive armaments race, for continuation and development of international detente and for general and total disarmament, so that humanity may be spared nuclear war and holocaust. Your own struggle for ridding your country of foreign bases and nuclear weapons is an invaluable contribution to the struggle for peace, security, cooperation and trust among nations.

Resolution Reported

[Excerpts] The first stop of the grand march was the U.S. base at Ellinikon. Thousands of demonstrators of both sexes and every age then overflowed into Vouliaymeni Avenue. The colors of peace, evident at a distance of several kilometers, were interspersed with slogans against the foreign bases and the signing of the new base agreement and for freedom and national independence.

The greetings of the Pan-Athenian Committee for International Detente and Peace, read by Aspa Mandhilara, said: "We came to the march denouncing the bases to manifest our will that with our struggle we are determined to foil the plans of the war hawks. In all the country, from one end to the other the Pan-Hellenic outcry 'out with the bases of death' and 'Out with the Americans' has become more resounding and intense. The Greek people will not agree to sacrifice themselves for the exclusive protection of foreign interests. The Greek people accept one and only one agreement--the one that will guarantee the total and permanent abolition of foreign military bases from our country and will preclude, on any occasion, the installation of nuclear arms in our terrirory."

The resolution of yesterday's grand march, among others, said:

"We, the Athenians that participated at the great march of peace today, Thursday, 11 June 1981, from the Ellinikon commune to the Chamber of Deputies and held at the initiative of the coordination committee of the mayors of Saronikos Kopos and the Pan-Athenian Committee for International Detente and Peace, declare our people's strong national demand:

"Do not sign the new agreement on the U.S. bases.
"In the name of the national interest and the existence of our country, we demand:
"The Greek Government must stop immediately the pertinent negotiations with the Americans.
"Remove the foreign military bases and nuclear arms from our country so that our country will not become the target of nuclear retaliation.
"We object to our country becoming the U.S. springboard against the Arab, socialist and other countries of the area.
"We object to becoming enemies of friendly countries.
"We do not recognize the right of anyone to bargain with our national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.
"All of us, the Greek patriots, know that we have the power to impose our will for a peaceful life, without the danger of a nuclear holocaust."

The resolution was handed over to the Chamber of Deputies Presidium and the parties by a delegation of mayors and personalities. In accepting the resolution, the vice president of the Chamber of Deputies, Lavrendidhis, did not hesitate to declare: "You have 200,000 persons outside and are shouting against the bases. We have 3 million who are in favor of the bases!"....

KKE Deputy Kostas Kappos who was a member of the delegation replied: "Then hold a plebiscite to see the results."

FURTHER OFFICIAL, PRESS COMMENTS ON BASES ISSUE

Mitsotakis News Conference

NC131918 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 13 Jun 81

[Text] In a news conference with foreign press representatives Foreign Minister Mitsotakis said he returns from Poland fully satisfied and that his visit was interesting. Bipartite issues were considerably advanced and means of expanding our relations in the economic sector were examined, he said. Our relations with Poland are excellent, he added.

The Greek foreign minister expressed optimism over Polish problems and said the adopted economic measures will give results. The Poles will be able to face reforms with democratic methods and will themselves determine, without foreign intervention, the course they want to follow.

Speaking about the bases, Mitsotakis said that discussions continue. We are at the last stage of negotiations, he said, and on Tuesday there will be a broad review of the issue by the Greek Government to determine the further course on the negotiations issue.

TO VIMA Views

NC141909 Athens TO VIMA In Greek 14 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] Differences of opinion have recently broken out within the government over whether or not the agreement on the U.S. bases should be signed. Despite the appearance of opposing views, however, this "serial of agony" will apparently end on Tuesday when an official government statement is issued, which (unless there is some spectacular development in the last stage of the negotiations) will announce the postponement of the negotiations for a time after the elections because there is no time for ratification of the agreement prior to the Chamber's summer recess.

The existence of differences of opinion--confirmed by various authoritative sources--is also confirmed by the different "stresses" in various successive and recent government statements, specifically:

--Prime Minister Rallis' statement 3 days ago to the New York TIMES that he doubts it will be possible to sign the agreement before the elections even if the United States accepted Greek conditions.

--The day after Mitsotakis' departure from Warsaw the government spokesman stated, on Thursday, that the "negotiations are ending" and that we are "leaning toward not signing the agreement."

--Yesterday, however, immediately after his return from Warsaw, Mitsotakis told the press that "the outcome of the negotiations cannot be foretold in advance because they are continuing in an intensive manner over the basic content, but they are absolutely in their final phase." He added that on Tuesday "there will be a global government review in order to define our further course." It is obvious that neither Mitsotakis' "intensive manner" nor his "basic content" proves that the negotiations "are ending" as stated by the government spokesman.

It has also been noted with great interest that during this last phase of the negotiations, Minister of National Defense Averof preferred to go to Metsovon, from where he is not scheduled to return until Tuesday in order to sit in at the government's meeting. Certain observers relate his (demonstrative...) absence with the indisputable fact that military experts on the Greek delegation are emphatic in their opinion that U.S. conditions--both in respect to the use of electronic surveillance systems on the bases as well as to the amounts and type of military aid--in no way meet Greek interests.

The most important disagreement between the two sides is over the amount to be paid in a lump sum to Greece for the use of the bases. The United States is refusing to satisfy the Greek request for $350 million, limiting itself to offering a weapons system worth barely $35 million.

Irrespective of the official statements, the sideline differences of opinion and the continued contacts at experts level, the government leadership appears to have already decided that the final U.S. proposals do not allow for the signing of an agreement that might be considered a "national success" (particularly on the eve of an election).

Contacts at the experts level, in the meantime, continued yesterday, and they are expected to continue today and tomorrow.

U.S. Ambassador McCloskey has also had a new meeting with Secretary General of the Foreign Ministry St. Roussos. it is, however, considered absolutely unlikely that these last-minute contacts and consultations will have a positive effect, unless there is a spectacular change in the U.S. position.

NEWS Statement

NC121540 Athens NEWS in English 12 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] Negotiations on the future of U.S. military bases in Greece have reached an impasse, and a breakdown in the ongoing Greek-U.S. talks now appears imminent, reliable sources reported yesterday.

Talks between the Greek and American delegations, led by Foreign Ministry Secretary General Stavros Roussos and U.S. Ambassador Robert McCloskey, meanwhile, continued all day yesterday, in a last-ditch effort to save the talks from collapse. Messrs Roussos and McCloskey met in private in the morning, for a long session lasting until early afternoon. In the evening, the two delegations met in full composition. Sources, however, said no breakthrough was achieved, and the two sides remained far apart on major issues.

Diplomatic circles in Athens last night were "very guarded" about the possibility of saving the talks. They said announcement that the talks had broken down could come at any minute. Government sources, meanwhile, said that, whatever the outcome, the talks must end by next Monday or Tuesday, at which time a joint communique will be issued. The sources also made pessimistic forecasts on the talks' result, adding, however, that there is still some "faint hope," as the two sides are making a last-ditch effort to bridge their differences, and that "nothing definitive can be predicted at this point."

An American official told reporters last night he is not longer optimistic about the negotiations reaching their goal. He confirmed the Greek sources' view that, in the case of either success or failure, a final communique should be expected by 17-18 June.

OPPOSITION DEPUTY REITERATES CLAIM OF COUP ATTEMPT

[Excerpt] The issue over the allegations about activities by "unrepentant retired" officers planning to overthrow our government took a new turn yesterday when Democratic Center Union [EDIK] Deputy Bandouvas released the names of about 330 retired and active duty officers who, according to his charges, have been plotting or expressing themselves in favor of a dictatorship. In a statement yesterday, Defense Minister Averof strongly reproached the EDIK deputy, whom he accused of irresponsibly creating sensationalism and disquiet, of distorting reports and of slandering Greek officers. Mr Averof added that all the names released either by Mr Bandouvas or included in the list mentioned by him have been reviewed by the civilian and military leaderships. He also gave the assurance that "the corps of officers on active duty is today healthy and has been carrying out its mission to the democratic government faithly and devotedly and has, thus, been rendering supreme service to the nation."

Mr Bandouvas revealed the 330 names yesterday when he submitted a question to the Chamber of Deputies. The EDIK deputy protested that his first interpellation on the "attempted coup" on 1 June [as published] was not debated the day before yesterday and accused the chamber, the government and the main opposition party of colluding to gag him, an elected representative of the people. Mr Bandouvas also accused the government of condoning all those who are yearning for the 7-year period [the period of military rule in Greece from 1967 to 1974]. He maintained that this policy has resulted, with the collaboration of retired officers and of officers on active duty, in the organization and growth of 10 subversive movements against the democratic regime.

PASOK ADOPTS INDEPENDENT STAND ON NEW PEACE GROUP

NC141956 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 14 Jun 81 p 3

[Text] Along with the KKE-Interior, PASOK too has declared a stand independent from that of the KKE within the movement of international peace and disarmament. With the establishment of the Movement of National Independence, International Peace and Disarmament [KEADEA], the official opposition party has now balanced its position before the two superpowers on the disarmament issue.

In a statement issued yesterday, PASOK Chairman Papandreou stressed that "PASOK is in agreement with the declaration on the establishment of the KEADEA as well as with the contents of the declaration." Papandreou further pointed out:

"We have repeatedly stated that the uncontrolled arms race is leading the world into a new and especially dangerous cold war crisis. The installation of 'Pershing-2' and 'Cruise' missiles in Europe will create a new, dangerous increase in the prevailing tense situation. We have also stressed that the various interventions by the great powers in the domestic affairs of other countries do not help in the efforts for detente and peace, and that these must be denounced wherever they come from and for whatever reason they are being made.

"For the Greek people, the issue of peace is of special importance. With the right-wing's consent, we host U.S. military bases and nuclear arms. Simultaneously, we face Attila in Cyprus and the chauvinistic claims of Turkey in the Aegean."

The prosecutor demanded several prison terms for the rest of the 32 suspects.

In the trial against the 36 militants of the Turkish People's Liberation Party Front Revolutionary Strugglers, the prosecutor demanded death sentences for 19 of them on charges of wounding, shooting, robbery, attempted murder and throwing of explosives.

Twenty-four members of this organization are already on trial at the Istanbul Martial Law Command 2d Military Court and the prosecutor is asking death sentences for all of them. In other words, 43 members of this organization are facing death sentences.

JAPAN'S SUZUKI MEETS EC LEADERS IN BRUSSELS

OW160051 Tokyo KYODO in English 0032 GMT 16 Jun 81

[Text] Brussels, 15 Jun (KYODO)--Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki Monday met leaders of the European Community (EC) and agreed to strengthen Japan-EC economic relations for the development of the Free World. Japanese officials said Suzuki and EC Commission President Gaston Thorn also agreed to cooperate in their fight against trade protectionism sweeping some EC member nations.

Suzuki, here on the third leg of a six-nation West European tour, met Thorn and other EC Commission officials at the EC headquarters for more than two hours. The EC nations have become increasingly upset about the Community's soaring trade deficit with Japan, which totaled 11 billion dollars last year.

They, in particular, are being embarrassed by Japan's aggressive export drives in sensitive areas like cars and electronics.

Suzuki's trip is aimed at meeting EC leaders prior to next month's summit in Ottawa of seven major non-Communist industrial nations but his mission is also designed to calm EC's dissatisfaction, according to Japanese sources. Japanese officials, in briefing on the meeting, said Suzuki and EC leaders agreed they wanted to encourage the triangular relationship between Japan, Europe and the United States.

They quoted Thorn as telling Suzuki that it is very difficult to maintain the free trade system as each EC nation is plagued by recession. Thorn called for a worldwide strategy to fight protectionism, suggesting that the problem be taken up for discussion at the Ottawa summit, the officials said.

During the talks EC Industry Commissioner Etienne Davignon called for joint ventures between EC firms and Japanese industry, particularly in high technology sectors such as space, aeronautics and nuclear energy. The Japanese officials said Davignon also called on Suzuki to try to redress EC's trade deficit and open the Japanese market still wider to EC products.

EC Commission officials complain that Japan maintains unfair import restrictions on some EC goods, including footwear. Suzuki said his government will instruct Japanese industries not to flood the EC market with sensitive export commodities, the officials said.

The Japanese prime minister also agreed to send a powerful governmental economic mission to Europe this autumn for talks with EC officials and business leaders on trade and industrial cooperation. The mission is to be led by Yoshihiro Inayama, president of the Federation of the Economic Organizations (Keidanren), a major economic club, the officials said.

They said Suzuki and EC leaders expressed a willingness to undertake joint aid projects for developing nations. The question will be explored further at the Ottawa summit, the officials said.

Japan, under pressure to increase its aid to developing nations, has doubled such assistance over the past three years.

On the political front, Suzuki and EC leaders agreed to cooperate with each other, including strategies against the Soviet Union.

CHANCELLOR, PRESIDENT KIRCHSCHLAEGER HOSPITALIZED

Kreisky 'Improves'

AU160817 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0800 GMT 16 Jun 81

[Text] Chancellor Kreisky's condition clearly has improved this morning, according to clinic head Professor Neumayr of the Vienna Rudolfs Hospital. The chancellor, taken to the hospital last night because of acute difficulties in breathing, will have to stay another few days under the care of his physicians. He has cancelled all his scheduled activities until the weekend. According to his physicians, Kreisky's difficulties in breathing and the overstraining of the heart resulting fror high blood pressure were due to the sultry weather and his heavy workload during the past 2 weeks. Professor Neumayr told the Austrian Radio and Television Service that the chancellor is doing quite well, but that he will have to relax for a while.

KREISKY BELIEVED THREATENED BY PALESTINIAN GROUP

["AZ" report]

[Text] Vienna--Asked on Sunday by ARBEITER-ZEITUNG about rumors that a killer squad of Abu Nidal ("al-Asifa"), a group which is very likely to have assassinated City Councilman Nittel, is on its way to Europe, Interior Minister Lanc declared: "The reports come from a sound and credible source." It's not only Chancellor Kreisky who is threatened. In PLO quarters a "death list" of the terrorist organization is circulating that also contains the names of the leading PLO figure in West Europe, (Sartawi), and the PLO representative in Vienna, Husayn.

Lanc refused to give any detailed information about special security precautions already taken "regarding particularly endangered persons, including the chancellor personally, and the protection of the borders." Regarding Syria's attitude toward the killer squad, Lanc told ARBEITER-ZEITUNG that he was certain that "it is bound to entail some consequences."

The crux of the matter, Lanc declared, is the existance of a group, which declared in writing and orally that it organized the assassination of City Councilman Nittel and which has specifically named Kreisky and 'Arafat as targets, which continues to have an operational base in Syria. "And indeed it is one that must be known to the Syrian Government," the interior minister added.

As ARBEITER-ZEITUNG has already reported, the Syrian Government earlier promised the Austrian ambassador in Damascus to close the office of the ("al-Asifa") terrorist group. Lanc told ARBEITER-ZEITUNG: "However, the office continues to be open." He added that he did not want to anticipate the foreign ministers actions, but that he did assume that Pahr would take some action this week.

On Sunday afternoon, Chancellor Kreisky's return from the [socialist] women's meeting in Salzburg led to special security measures at Vienna's Schwechat Airport, which at times was hermetically sealed off by state security police.

EYSKENS TALKS WITH VISITING JAPANESE PRIME MINISTER

[Excerpts] Brussels, 15 Jun (KYODO)--Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki Monday pledged to his Belgian counterpart Marc Eyskens that Japan's car exports to Belgium in 1981 would never surpass last year's figure, officials said. Suzuki, now on a tour of six European Community nations, made this pledge in an hour-long talk with the Belgian prime minister at the latter's official residence here.

At Monday's meeting, Suzuki and Eyskens discussed how to maintain the free trade system and exchanged views on bilateral economic cooperation, according to officials.

Belgium is now in grave economic straits, suffering an 11.8 percent unemployment rate last year, the worst in the EC countries, while the share of Japanese cars in the Belgian market had sharply increased to 24.7 percent in 1980 from 18 percent in the preceding year.

The Belgian Government was ready to introduce protectionist measures to curb Japanese car shipments, which might trigger a wholesale protectionist move in the Common Market.

Suzuki Visits King

[Excerpt] Brussels, 16 Jun (KYODO)--Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki Tuesday paid a courtesy call on King Baudouin to wind up his two-day official schedule in Belgium.

Suzuki, now on a tour of six European Community countries, will leave for London aboard a special airplane at 4 pm (11 pm Japan time). The Japanese prime minister is to meet with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher Wednesday to discuss international and bilateral affairs.

BELGIUM, JAPAN CONCLUDE AUTO TRADE TALKS

[Text] Paris, 15 Jun (KYODO)--Japan and Belgium concluded their auto trade talks here Monday with a Japanese pledge to hold down its automobile exports to Belgium in 1981 below the 1980 level.

The agreement came in a meeting at a Paris hotel between Rokusuke Tanaka, Japan's international trade and industry minister, and Belgian Economic Affairs Minister Willy Claes.

Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, in his meeting with Belgian Prime Minister Marc Eyskens in Brussels, pledged to hold down Japan's car exports to Belgium in 1981.

Tanaka withheld announcing Japan's concrete auto trade figure vis-a-vis Belgium but Japanese Government sources said he explained in the talks that Japan would limit its auto shipments to Belgium and Luxembourg in 1981 to 104,000 units, a drop of 7 percent from the 1980 level.

They also agreed to hold discussions late this year to decide the scale of Japan's 1982 shipments to Belgium, depending on the market condition that year, the sources added.

U.S, UK, FRANCE PROTEST EAST BERLIN ELECTION

LD151954 Hamburg DPA in German 1719 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Berlin, 15 Jun (DPA)--The American, British and French ambassadors and the West Berlin Senat today protested against the direct election of East Berlin representatives to the GDR People's Chamber. The Berlin Senat regarded the direct election as a "grave act which is irreconcilable with the general interest in maintaining a calm situation in and around Berlin," according to a statement by West Berlin Mayor Richard von Weizsaecker. The strict observance and full application of the quadripartite agreement together with the undiminished rights and responsibilities of the three powers remains the basis for the calm and peaceful development of Berlin.

The statement also said that the Senat welcomed the renewed statements by the three powers. In a formal diplomatic protest to the Soviet Government, the United States, Britain and France noted, among other things, that holding direct elections on Sunday for the first time both violated the Berlin quadripartite agreement of September 1971 and also contradicted the wartime and postwar agreements defining the status of the special area of Berlin.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON GERMAN-GERMAN POLICY

[Text] Bonn, 15 Jun (DPA)--In the view of the Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FDP chairman and foreign minister, remembering the popular uprising in the GDR on 17 June 1963 obliges the Federal Republic to pursue an active policy on Germany and a policy of peace. Genscher today stated to the FDP Presidium that the aim of this policy toward the GDR has to be to safeguard the interests of the German nation, to expand contacts between the people in both states and to secure peace.

The basic treaty with the GDR offers many opportunities for this policy and far from all of them have been used. Since the basic treaty has been concluded, there have been progress and setbacks, but there is no doubt that progress predominated by far. "Although we are fully aware that the German-German relationship cannot be a sunny isle in the East-West relationship, it is however necessary in the present difficult East-West phase that the Federal Republic of Germany and the GDR strive for cooperation actively, constructively and aware of their joint responsibility for peace," said Genscher, according to party spokesman Herbert Schmuelling.

In an eight-point program, Genscher advocated continuing the German-German dialogue "on all questions"--as formulated during the consultations on disarmament policy--"and at best at all levels." What has been achieved between the two German states must not be risked by either of the two states. No side should impede or place a strain on more extensive progress and developments by making maximum claims. The German-German relationship must not be the source of any additional strains for the East-West relationship.

GENSCHER DISCUSSES SPAIN, ADDRESSES USSR

DW151424 Baden Baden Suedwestfunk Network in German 1045 GMT 14 Jun 81

[Reporter Ernst-Alfred Raiss interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Minister Genscher, you want your quick visit to Spain this weekend to be considered a demonstrative gesture for Spanish democracy.

The Spaniards have certainly welcomed it, but were you able to tell them something concrete about the path toward membership in the European Community and maybe NATO? The Spaniards complain that too many beautiful speeches are being given, but that they get too little concrete help.

[Answer] This criticism isn't addressed to the Federal Republic of Germany. Spain knows that we are the one European Community country which particularly emphasizes continuous and timely progress in membership negotiations with Spain, because we know that the Spanish democrats have been putting their stakes on Europe and that we cannot disappoint this confidence placed in democratic Europe. On the other hand, Spain is worthy of our confidence. I think we have been able to see in past months how strong the democratic forces in Spain are. Spanish democracy has passed a big test and the Spanish Government achieved a great victory recently through the economic and social pact, in cooperation with the social forces, which has laid the groundwork for sound economic development. This demonstrates the great maturity of the Spanish people and the awareness of responsibility of all political and social forces.

I can only appeal with great emphasis to the European Community partners to make up their minds to give the necessary attention and energy to the membership negotiations which Spanish democracy deserves.

[Question] Mr Minister, the Middle East situation has become even more dangerous through the air raid on the Iraqi nuclear reactor near Baghdad. I myself have a certain understanding for the Israeli motives. The thinking of the Israelis is mainly concentrated on security, their existence and their survival. Where do you see the dangers of a security policy which includes the preventive strike? How much of a chance has a Mideast peace offensive at present, whether it follows the Camp David pattern or the ideas of the Europeans?

[Answer] The policy of the Federal Government is characterized by the renunciation of force. I think it is correct that we consider this principle to be significant not only for our action, but for the action of all states and governments of the world. That means not only for Europe. It has been shown over and over again that only a policy aimed at the renunciation of force permits the eventual creation of political prerequisites facilitating political solutions.

The efforts of the European Community are based on the principle of achieving political solutions through the renunciation of force. The decisions made at the European council session in Venice and Luxembourg produced realistic suggestions for a comprehensive, lasting and just peace solution in the Middle East. Recent developments have changed nothing about the correctness of these suggestions, on the contrary. Developments in past weeks and days--I mean developments in Lebanon as well as the military action against Iraq which you mentioned--demonstrate how urgent it is to initiate a peace process in the Middle East with chances of being considered acceptable by all parties. The suggestions of the European Community are a realistic basis.

[Question] There is a crisis in the Middle East and a crisis in Poland--older people among us may remember the year 1956 with concern when the revolt in Hungary and the Egyptian invasion coincided. How do you assess the danger of the Polish situation, following the session of the Polish Central Committee and the letter from Moscow, with a view to the forthcoming party congress of the Polish communists from which the Soviets obviously fear that a change of the system could emanate?

[Answer] It has become clear that the Polish leadership wants to persistently continue the renovation process. This is a sovereign Polish decision? It isn't for us to tell them what to do. And others should not tell them what to do either. The Federal Government was, from the very beginning, of the opinion that three principles must be adhered to:

1. The principle of persistent and strict noninterference in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of Poland. We stand very firmly by this principle and we expect all other signatory states of the Helsinki Final Act to behave in the same way.

2. We all know that the People's Republic of Poland has to master considerable economic problems. The mastering of economic problems will certainly be a contribution to the political stabilization of the country. It is, therefore, in the interest of stable developments in Poland for the requests of the Polish leadership for economic and financial assistance--and this is all that can be involved--to be fulfilled as much as possible. We have done so not only with words but with actions.

3. The East-West dialogue, efforts aimed at detente, efforts aimed at disarmament and arms control can certainly improve the outer framework conditions for developments in Poland. With a view to Poland, we act with great energy for the continuation of the dialogue between East and West.

Naturally, this is not merely a matter for the Western side. It is also a matter for the Eastern side. I expect all states of the world to be aware that persistent adherence to the final document of Helsinki, that is, the persistent practicing of the noninterference principle, is really indispensable. That pertains in this case also to the People's Republic of Poland.

[Question] Soviet party boss Brezhnev, Mr Genscher, just recently, and the last time in talks with former Swedish Prime Minister Palme and Mr Egon Bahr, charged the West at large and the Americans in particular once again with being not at all interested in disarmament, arms control and arms limitation negotiations. He said they are not doing anything. Conversely, the Soviet Union at the Madrid CSCE followup conference has retracted, or at least relativized the readiness once pronounced by Brezhnev concerning the extension of the confidence-building measures up to the Ural Mountains. Does this means a hardening of the fronts or what do you think it means?

[Answer] It is with serious concern that we see certain developments in Soviet statements and policies. Part of this is, foremost, the continuous production and deployment of Soviet medium-range missiles threatening West Europe, even though a number of Soviet medium-range missiles already is targeted on West Europe, which is large enough to represent a destructive threat to the peoples of West Europe. We likewise are concerned that the Soviet Union has partially retracted the promise of General Secretary Brezhnev that confidence-building measures be agreed for all of Europe, meaning from the Atlantic to the Ural Mountains, recently in Madrid where the signatory states to the Helsinki Final Act are trying to reach a mandate for a European disarmament conference. This tends to jeopardize the project of a European disarmament conference, for which the people's of Europe are so eagerly waiting. What finally concerns us is the increasing harshness and the polemics of the Soviet Union against the Western states. This is not the language of understanding which we need so urgently if we wish to vitalize detente and push arms control and disarmament. I think it is necessary in this difficult international situation that all sides give signs of good will.

At the Rome NATO foreign ministers conference, the Western alliance gave the signal of Rome. The signal of Rome means that we have said: What we want is a European disarmament conference with confidence-building measures for all of Europe, because the building of confidence is particularly important at this time and constitutes the precondition for effective arms control measures. We said that we urgently desire the opening of negotiations on medium-range weapons between the United States and the Soviet Union. We said that what we want is headway in the troop reduction negotiations for Central Europe, held in Vienna and what we want is a realistic detente policy. I call on the Soviet Union to take this signal of Rome seriously. I call on the Soviet Union to give signs on its part as well and to undertake some steps which will contribute toward making stabilization in the world possible and toward the emergence of confidence.

To begin with, this makes it necessary for the Soviet Union to make up its mind at long last to immediately halt the further production and deployment of medium-range missiles and to gradually reduce the medium-range missiles threatening West Europe, which already have been deployed. If the Soviet Union would respond to this appeal, and no negotiations are needed for this as it can do so by its own decision, it would not aggravate the negotiations by additional missile deployment but would, on the contrary, facilitate these negotiations. And should it decide to gradually reduce the medium-range missiles already deployed, it would put the West into a position of reviewing the need for any counterarming in accordance with the NATO decision of December 1979 on the basis of concrete results of negotiations.

Secondly, I call on the Soviet Union to declare without delay that the promises by General Secretary Brezhnev are valid, namely, that the confidence-building measures will be agreed on for all of Europe, from the Atlantic to the Ural Mountains. The project of a European disarmament conference must not be impaired. The peoples of Europe are waiting for this disarmament conference.

Thirdly, I appeal to the Soviet Union to do away with the disproportion between its expenditures for armament and its expenditures for development aid. It could be an initial effective step if the Soviet Union would establish the same proportion between arms spending and development aid expenditures which already exists in the West. Since this simply would be catching up with the West--namely catching "down" in the case of armaments and catching "up" in the case of development aid--this would not jeopardize the security interests of the Soviet Union. What matters to us is that the spiral of development aid start. Instead of the arms spiral, a race between East and West should be staged in this respect.

I call on all states of the world to ensure, jointly with the Federal Republic of Germany, that the Third World will not be pumped full of arms. What I mean to say is that I call on all states of the world to prevent the militarization of the Third World. Arms control and disarmament must not be restricted to Europe, to East-West relations alone. We need them everywhere in the world.

The Third World needs schools, hospitals and tractors instead of guns. We must be aware that this is not just a humanitarian task, but a task of actively safeguarding peace to see the problems of the Third World overcome. The great difference in the development level of the South and the industrialized North has the same explosive force for world peace as the social question at the end of the last century had for the internal stability of the industrial states of the North.

Thus, what matters is that the signal of Rome in this decisive phase receives a positive response from the East. Once this happens, the peoples of the world which look toward the future with concern can heave a sigh of relief because then, the preconditions would exist for real, and not just propagandistic, headway in the fields of arms control and disarmament.

[Question] Is it safe to assume, Mr Genscher, that these quite concrete wishes which you have just addressed to the Soviet Union will form part of the talks when Brezhnev comes to Bonn?

[Answer] We will not set aside any topic that might bring us closer to a revitalization of detente, headway in arms control, improvement in the assistance to the Third World, because the Federal Republic has always advocated the view that dialogue is necessary, that it is in fact necessary especially if and when objective differences of opinion exist and if and when we go through a troubled phase of international development. This is also why we attribute considerable significance to that visit.

SCHMIDT, PORTUGUESE PRIME MINISTER HOLD TALKS

[Text] Bonn, 15 Jun (DPA)--Portuguese Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemao has said that his country intends to play a more active role in NATO. At the close of his political talks in Bonn, the Portuguese head of government today stressed that his country also needs military aid from the Federal Republic and other alliance partners to modernize its forces' outdated equipment.

Following an exchange of views with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Balsemao did not exclude the possibility of the deployment of nuclear weapons. Although at the moment, this is not strategically necessary. "If such a need arose, Portugal would consult its allies and be prepared to take on the necessary responsibility."

Schmidt referred to the German military aid to Portugal between 1978 and 1980, amounting to DM79 million in addition to the delivery of surplus goods from Bundeswehr stocks. Further support is planned. Details were not, however, discussed as this falls within the responsibility of the appropriate minister.

The federal chancellor underlined German support for Portugal's entry into the European Community, expected for 1 January 1984. Schmidt also stressed his confidence in the internal stability of the young democracy. Schmidt and Balsemao emphasized the new opportunities for German investment in Portugal after, as a result of the conclusion of the compensation negotiations, the introduction of the ratification of a protection agreement became possible. Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff will go to Lisbon in November with a delegation of industrialists.

In this connection, Balsemao regretted that there has only been DM13 million worth of investment in Portugal. With reference to European Community problems, the prime minister said that the free movement of Portuguese labor, including their relatives, already working in European Community countries had high priority in the entry negotiations.

The federal chancellor expressed his satisfaction at the exchange of views on foreign policy "at which we profited from the powers of judgment" of the Portuguese Government guests, especially on the situation in southern Africa. Schmidt thanked Balsemao for an invitation to visit Portugal, which could be "private or official, as desired" and which the federal chancellor will make "soon".

In the Foreign Ministry, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Portuguese counterpart Andre Goncalves Pereira signed an agreement on cooperation in research and technological development. The federal foreign minister described the agreement as a further step in the ever closer cooperation. On this occasion, Genscher underlined that Portugal's wish to enter the European Community continues to have the full support of the Federal Government. The overriding political aim of European unity must be observed when solving the tasks set by Portugal's and Spain's desire to enter the European Community and overcoming internal Community problems.

GOVERNMENT URGES UN CONDEMNATION OF ISRAEL

LD151948 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Text] Israel is in the dock a week after bombing and destroying the Iraqi nuclear reactor in Tammuz. France has taken a very strong initiative and has formally asked the UN Security Council to condemn the Israeli aggression.

The Socialist government, led by Pierre Mauroy, was very quick to protest against the Israeli raid, but this diplomatic initiative gives the French protest a much more spectacular tone.

FITERMAN COMMENTS ON COMMUNIST-SOCIALIST AGREEMENT

LD151446 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Statement by Charles Fiterman, spokesman of the French Communist Party, on possibility of PCF participation in the government--recorded]

[Text] We are prepared to assume our responsibilities at every level and to contribute positively to the changes that are needed. We are constructive; we are positive. We have always had concern for the interests of the workers and the nation, and these interests mean that changes must come about. We will apply our strength in the service of these changes, including assuming our responsibilities.

As I already said before this first round, agreement between the Socialist Party and ourselves is perfectly possible, to the extent that we have noted points of convergence between the PS and ourselves about numerous priority questions which would allow us to govern together, even if some points of divergence remain. As for solidarity, from the very moment one is in government, then solidarity is self-evident.

REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF EGYPTIAN VICE PRESIDENT

Mubarak TV Interview

NC121351 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1240 GMT 12 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 12 Jun (MENA)--Egyptian Vice President Husni Mubarak has described the recent Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear reactor as a grave action constituting a hurdle on the road to peace. In a 10-minute interview broadcast by French television in its main news bulletin this afternoon, Mubarak denied that President Anwar as-Sadat had any advance knowledge of this action. He said: President Anwar as-Sadat and Menahem Begin met in Sharm ash-Shaykh and the attack against the Iraqi nuclear reactor took place some time after this meeting. This led to rumors that the Egyptian president might have had advance knowledge of this attack. This is untrue.

Mubarak added: Egypt denounced this irresponsible action and condemned it like most states, including those most friendly to Israel. The Egyptian Foreign Ministry and the Presidency issued two statements condemning this irresponsible action, which international society has unanimously condemned. Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin has admitted that President as-Sadat had no advance knowledge of this action. In reality, this action is a hurdle in the road to peace.

Asked whether Egypt intends to participate in any retaliatory measure, particularly now that the Arab states' foreign ministers were meeting to discuss this matter, Mubarak said: Egypt has not hesitated to condemn this action. We make our decisions on the basis of the independence of the Egyptian national will. We discuss every action by Israel separately and decide our stance corresponding with our assessment of the situation. Nobody will impel us to make a step regarding which we have not made the necessary accurate calculations.

Questioned on what Egypt expects from the new French administration, Mubarak said: The relations between Egypt and France are old and closed. These are economic, political, military and cultural relations. We expect the new administration to continue these advanced bilateral relations. He added: By virtue of the fact that the new president, Francois Mitterrand, supported the Camp David agreements even before he assumed the presidency, and is still supporting them, and by virtue of the fact that there are relations of friendship between President Mitterrand and Israel, we expect France to play a more effective role in giving momentum to the peace process. We see no fault in Mitterrand's friendship which, on the contrary, might be a helping factor.

Mitterrand Meeting

NC122012 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1920 GMT 12 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 12 Jun (MENA)--French President Francois Mitterrand today received Egyptian Vice President Husni Mubarak at the Elysee Palace. The meeting lasted 1 hour and 10 minutes.

Afterward, Husni Mubarak said: I was asked by President as-Sadat to meet with his excellency President Mitterrand of France and to convey to him a written message, an oral message and an invitation to his excellency to visit Egypt at a time he finds convenient. At this first meeting with his excellency the president, we naturally discussed bilateral relations. We made a comprehensive survey of various questions, particularly on the Middle East and we exchanged viewpoints. The French president will have the opportunity to conclude his study of other issues. However, there is an agreement to continue the exchange of views between President as-Sadat and President Francois Mitterrand.

Replying to a question on whether Egypt will alter its attitude toward Israel in the wake of the Israeli raid on the Iraqi nuclear reactor, Husni Mubarak said: Concerning the question of peace, we are proceeding forward and I believe that this is what is meant here. However, we have expressed our strong dissatisfaction with this action, which will only help exacerbate the explosive situation, particularly in Lebanon. We have issued two statements on this issue. We believe that the action that was taken against the Iraqi reactor was totally unjustified at the present time and that it is rejected. We denounce and do not approve of it. However, this doesn't mean that we should turn the question of peace upside down, when all questions can be resolved peacefully.

Replying to questions on whether he discussed the question of Lebanon with the French president, Husni Mubarak said: We discussed all questions in general, we didn't go into details.

Replying to a question on whether nuclear cooperation between Egypt and France will continue, Mubarak said that there has been absolutely no change. The new French president appreciates the continuity of what we have agreed upon and the strengthening of relations between the two countries.

To a question on whether there was an identity of Egyptian and French views on the question of Chad, Husni Mubarak said: I believe we must allow the new French president time to study all questions. We have spoken in general on all issues.

Replying to a question on whether there was a feeling of change in French policy on the Middle East, the vice president said: I did not have this impression at all, but I can confirm the continuity of French policy. We know just as you know here in France that President Mitterrand was the first to express support for the Camp David framework. He said that President Francois Mitterrand supported Camp David from the first moment and that we are aware of this. There may have been reservations before, but President Mitterrand supports and backs Camp David.

The vice president was asked about the possibility of President Mitterrand playing a role in achieving progress in the question of peace in the Middle East. He said: President Mitterrand is a friend of Israel. This doesn't cause us concern, but we must benefit from this friendship. We hope that he will be a helping factor in the question of peace with Israel.

Husni Mubarak said that next Monday he will pay a courtesy visit to the French Premier Pierre Mauroy.

Mubarak Remarks

NC140853 Cairo MENA in Arabic 0752 GMT 14 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 14 Jun (MENA)--Egyptian Vice President Muhammad Husni Mubarak stated that during his meeting with French President Francois Mitterrand, the latter emphasized France's willingness to provide all facilities required by Egypt and that France is interested not only in continuing cooperation with Egypt and in honoring the existing agreements and contracts, but also in developing and strengthening relations.

Vice President Mubarak said that a good part of his meeting with the French president centered on bilateral relations and that this was the aim of the oral message he carried from President as-Sadat to President Mitterrand. He added: This is why we fully opened the file of bilateral relations covering all aspects of cooperation between the two countries.

In his statements during his meeting with a number of Egyptian journalists working in France, yesterday, Vice President Mubarak noted that the French president expressed his appreciation of President Anwar as-Sadat and his efforts to establish peace. He added that President Mitterrand told him that he was the first to support the Camp David agreements.

President Mitterrand, Mubarak said, is showing maximum interest in the establishment of peace in the Middle East and has stressed the need for a national homeland for the Palestinians so that the problem will be solved and peace will prevail.

On Egyptian-French military cooperation, Husni Mubarak said that agreement has been reached on the purchase of 16 Mirage-15 [as received] aircraft. The Mirage-15, he added, is a multipurpose fighter plane. This is in addition to the Alpha Jet deal signed a few months ago, he said.

In conclusion, Mubarak said: Talks are in progress between us and France to sign other agreements providing for further cooperation.

[Text] Vice President Husni Mubarak and French Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert will meet in Paris today. Mubarak will also visit the Le Bourget air show and attend an air demonstration this afternoon. He is accompanied by Lt Gen Abu Ghazalah, minister of defense and war production. Mubarak met in Paris this morning with director of the board of the French Thompson Company, (Yasuni).

Lt Gen 'Abd al-Halim Abu Ghazalah made a statement to our correspondent in Paris. He said that the combat capability of the Egyptian Armed Forces is now higher than it was during the October war. Abu Ghazalah said that Egypt is holding contacts with various countries within the framework of diversifying Egypt's sources of weapons to develop the combat capability of the Egyptian Armed Forces. He said that important developments will occur in 1982 in the areas of Egyptian war production.

Abu Ghazalah further said that Egypt has concluded an agreement with France to purchase French Alpha Jet planes. Under this agreement, Egypt will soon receive six Alpha Jets. Egypt will assemble these planes and participate in manufacturing their spare parts. Abu Ghazalah stressed the importance of this agreement that will also enable Egypt to start manufacturing the Mirage 2000 plane. Concluding his statement, Abu Ghazalah praised the cooperation between France and Egypt and France's desire to promote this cooperation as well as its readiness to offer limitless facilities.

Joint Statement

[Text] Paris, 15 Jun (MENA)--French Premier Pierre Mauroy this afternoon received Egyptian Vice President Husni Mubarak at the Hotel Matignon. The 1-hour meeting was attended on the French side by Robert Pontillon, parliamentary commissioner for military and diplomatic affairs in the premier's office and on the Egyptian side by Egyptian ambassador in Paris Kamil Khalil.

An official joint statement was issued following the meeting. It said: Egyptian Vice President Husni Mubarak was received by French Premier Pierre Mauroy. During the extremely cordial meeting, the Egyptian vice president and the French premier expressed their firm will to develop the traditionally friendly bilateral relations and political, economic and cultural cooperation.

The French premier stressed the French people's and Government's support of the efforts President Anwar as-Sadat and the Egyptian people and Government are exerting to establish peace in the Middle EAst, particularly through the Camp David agreements.

Husni Mubarak extended an invitation to the French premier to visit Egypt. Mauroy asked Mubarak to convey his warm regards to President Anwar as-Sadat.

Following the meeting, Pierre Mauroy told newsmen that the Egyptian vice president has been visiting France for several days and that he has met with the president as well as with a number of French officials. He added: I was very happy to meet with him.

The French premier said that the discussions were conducted in an extremely cordial atmosphere and that we discussed current events, which you all know too well--particularly the subject of Jerusalem and the efforts made by President as-Sadat and his government in this respect. He added: For my part, I affirmed the French position to the vice president. We must know that it is difficult to impose a solution because negotiations cannot be dispensed with. Pierre Mauroy added: I was happy to conduct fruitful negotiations in this respect, but it is clear that it is not up to us to decide on these matters. He added: We exchanged views on the overall problems of the Middle East and concluded with a discussion on French-Egyptian bilateral relations--which is a more important subject as far as we are concerned because, in this respect, we have excellent relations with Egypt, whether this refers to economic cooperation or otherwise.

The French premier went on to say: I had the opportunity to convey the regards of the French Government in general and the premier in particular to President as-Sadat for his personal efforts and the efforts of his government to achieve peace in this disturbed part of the world. He added: During our discussions, we dealt with the Israeli raid against the Iraqi nuclear reactor. In this respect, I reiterated France's stance, which I previously announced and which also has been announced by the French Foreign Ministry.

To a question on whether he reiterated France's previous bilateral commitments concerning nuclear cooperation with Egypt, Pierre Mauroy said: As you know, an agreement was signed in March 1981 with Egypt--but this was not the first such agreement because France and Egypt had previously signed one. We have also drawn up a very extensive program. I reiterated our commitments, and I would like to mention the agreements that were signed at the Le Bourget air show--agreements that France will honor.

FOREIGN MINISTER SPEAKS ON FOREIGN POLICY

[Text] Rome, 13 Jun (ANSA)--The strategy for peace behind Italian foreign policy for the past twenty-plus years underpinned by contributions to the stabilization of East-West relations and to the North-South dialogue was outlined today by the head of Italian diplomacy, Emilio Colombo, in a foreign policy address delivered at Perugia University for foreign students north of Rome.

The foreign minister began his statement by challenging the concept that Italy "has no foreign policy". He said that, "there is an Italian foreign policy which is well defined and contains fundamental choices, that is, the choices for Europe, for the Atlantic view and an opening toward the Third World all deriving from a well thought-out assessment on the role our country is capable of holding". Colombo went on to note that, "if the overall framework of our foreign policy has remained stable these past thirty years, this is not due to indifference or weakness but to responsible realism".

With reference to what he identified as a trend toward an international system characterized by heightened pluralism and to the areas of East-West friction, the foreign minister said that the Italian people support the right of the Afghan people to freely determine their own future without the presence of foreign troops on their territory and the right of the Polish people to responsibly decide the forms of their own economic and social development. The foreign minister insisted on the need to stop these crisis points from being transformed into elements of destabilization for the entire international scene and explained that Italy's work in this direction is conducted mainly within the framework of commitments underwritten in the Atlantic alliance and the European context.

Turning to specifics, Colombo said that, "the recent Israeli incursion against some installations in Iraq represents an example of how, in the presence of growing difficulties on the level of negotiations, crises show a dangerous tendancy to broaden." On the same matter, the Italian diplomatic chief said that the Rome government considered this Israeli act "inadmissible, not only because it ran contrary to international law but, especially, because of the prospect of heightening tensions in the tormented Mediterranean area".

He said that in this region, there are already the problems of the Middle East, Lebanon and, only slightly more distant, the Iranian-Iraqi conflict which involves the risk of expanding "in territorial and political terms". The foreign minister went on to speak of an Italian role in a Europe in which "political cooperation has been progressively affirmed". He concluded by underscoring the importance of the North-South dialogue within the framework of comprehensive negotiations in United Nations quarters which include the Western industrialized nations, the countries of the socialist bloc, developing countries and the oil producers.

PCI SECRETARIAT CONDEMNS ISRAELI ATTACK ON REACTOR

LD151525 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 10 Jun 81 pp 1, 16

[Text] Rome--The PCI Secretariat has protested vigorously at the Israeli raid on the French-Iraqi nuclear reactor; Comrades Pajetta and Bufalini have approached the Italian Government in this connection.

Comrades Gian-Carlo Pajetta and Paolo Bufalini visited Foreign Minister Deputy Emilio Colombo to draw his attention to the PCI's serious concern at the Israeli attack and bombardment of the Baghdad nuclear powerplant. Our comrades requested an explicit condemnation from the Italian Government of the Israeli attack and of the policy which prompted it. Minister Emilio Colombo also expressed deep concern at the situation in the Middle East and the consequences of the military action, and explained that the nuclear powerplant's equipment was constructed with Italian and French cooperation in full conformity with the requirements of the nuclear nonproliferation treaty.

The minister added that he has instructed the Italian ambassador to take official demarches vis-a-vis the Israeli Government.

Here is the text of the document issued by the PCI Secretariat: "The PCI Secretariat draws attention to the extreme gravity of the Israeli Government's attack on Iraq, with the bombardment and destruction of the nuclear powerplant on the outskirts of Baghdad. The event demonstrates that the Middle East situation is becoming more explosive every day and that the very forces which invoke Camp David and the "spirit" of those agreements definitely have no desire to turn the peaceful methods to seek and implement a solution to the tangle of conflicts and disputes which, in a vital area such as the Middle East, constitutes the most serious hotbed of tension and the gravest threat to peace in the Mediterranean and the entire world. We are dealing with an aggression of new and alarming characteristics. First, the Israeli Government suddenly, treacherously and arrogantly claimed the arbitrary right to commit an outright act of preventive warfare on a country not even adjacent to it, by means of a long-range bombardment by very modern aircraft supplied by the United States. Moreover, the bombardment of a nuclear power plant can in any case have disastrous consequences.

"The PCI Secretariat expresses its surprise at and criticism of the fact that the Italian Government failed to immediately issue the most explicit and clear-cut condemnation of such an irresponsible act of aggression on Israel's part; it urges the Italian Government to do so without further delay and at the same time to take every suitable initiative in various forums and within the European context to condemn the Israeli Government's aggressive action, to reject the impossible justification attempt which accompanied it and to press for vigorous and effective action to promote detente in the Middle East and the quest for a just solution to the Palestinian issue.

"The PCI Secretariat appeals to all communists and all democratic and peace-loving forces to step up the task of elucidation and mobilization among the peoples masses for peace and disarmament, to express condemnation of the provocative act of warfare and the entreaty to follow the path of a global and peaceful solution to the conflicts in the Middle East, with the recognition of the Palestinian people's national rights."

PCI STANCE ON POLAND RESTATED AFTER CPSU LETTER

[Text] As Comrade Kania has said, Poland is experiencing one of the most dramatic moments in its 1,000-year history. This newspaper, more than any other, has followed Polish events since August 1980 in a spirit of truth and critical evaluation, seeking to interpret and convey the full complexity of the characteristics of the profound political and social process, openly declaring our understanding of a solidarity with the forces of renewal and national responsibility and our disapproval of all phenomena of adventurism and anarchy. Consistent with this line of conduct, we publish today on another page the full text of the CPSU Central Committee letter to Polish United Workers Party leaders, a dramatic and worrying document which we do not want to comment on for the time being, while a rapid development of events is underway.

Nevertheless, may we be permitted to recall two essential points in our and the PCI's position on the dramatic Polish issue, namely:

1--There can be no solution without a renewal and a restoration of trust between Polish society and political and government leadership, above all between the working class and its party;

2--There can be no solution without respect for and the consolidation of the Polish state's independence, integrity and autonomy. This rules out any solution based on force--in whatever form and for whatever reason--from outside.

LD151350 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1109 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Text] A few minutes ago, King Khalid of Saudi Arabia arrived in Madrid on board a jumbo jet to begin a 4-day visit to Spain. At Barajas Airport the Saudi king was welcomed by King Juan, Carlos Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, and other ministers. The two kings, who have been friends for several years, reviewed a military parade by a company composed of the three armed forces, which saluted the kings. The two then met inside the state pavillion to begin their first talks and to discuss common positions. This meeting has just concluded, and the two kings are about to travel directly to Madrid city.

It is expected that during this visit by King Khalid, the sale of oil to Spain could be increased and assured, while Spain could enter into participation in economic projects such as railroads, oil, health and others.

DEMOCRATIC CENTER, SOCIALIST WORKERS HOLD MEETING

LD151401 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 9 Jun 81 p 9

[Excerpts] Madrid, 8 Jun--Following a 3-hour meeting, the Union of the Democratic Center [UCO] Executive Committee has issued, through party chairman Rodriguez Sahagun, a communique in which it reaffirms itself as a genuine center party and announces that it will run alone in the next election.

Rodrogiez Sahagun read out the communique, which says verbatim:

Following a thorough analysis of the current political situation, the UCD Executive Committee deems it essential to reaffirm unanimously and emphatically its nature as a genuine center party and as a party which advocates progress and reform and which claims as its own the banner of change in everything that is necessary. The UCD believes that the public formula of a broad center party which breaks the dialectical tension between the two Spains remains perfectly valid and applicable. The formula has been voted for twice by the majority of the Spanish people, and we believe that it has the necessary potential for surmounting any temporary difficulty.

The UDC aims at the modernization of our health [as published] and accepts the summary of itself as a party which defends freedoms and promotes justice, updating its formulas to a changing reality after a planned process of critical reflection.

The UCD Executive Committee wishes to end the dialectic of the constant putting forward of alternative hypotheses, which could create an image of disintegration. Its firm and clear aim is to remain faithful to itself and to its original principles. The UCD believes that the present party system, with a large center party, is the system most beneficial for Spain and for the consolidation of its democracy. In addition, it rejects all those activities and platforms which harm the political parties as an irreplaceable instrument for the democratic system. We are not within the dynamic of an electoral period of a national nature, but in a period when the work of government entrusted to the party until 1983 should be continued, basing itself on the documents approved at its two congresses, and very especially on its ideological manifesto.

In conclusion, confronted with actions with possible disintegrative external effects, our party, faithful to itself, emphatically reaffirms the validity of its center formula, hoping that it will not allow itself to be carried away and that it will defend its principles of reform and progress, freedom and justice and modernization of our social, political, cultural and economic structures; and believes that this political platform continues to be valued and esteemed by a majority of Spanish society.

PSOE Prepares Foundations for Cooperation With Government

The Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] Executive Committee meeting began at 1800 hours under the chairmanship of Ramon Rubial. Following 4 lengthy hours of debate, the Socialists issued a communique in which they identified themselves substantially with the tripartite socioeconomic agreement reached last week by the government, trade unions and employers. Within this agreement, they highlighted the setting of the wage scale, which offers as an important quid pro quo the creation of 350,000 jobs and an improvement in unemployment benefits. The PSOE points out in its note that this agreement is a result of the political strategy conducted by the general workers union over the last 2 years through the AMI [expansion unknown], which has created a new system of industrial relations. In this connection the Socialists stated their intention to carry out a policy of monitoring the fulfillment of the agreements by the government, principally with respect to the aspects of the agreement concerning the creation of jobs and unemployment benefits.

Another important aspect of the PSOE Executive Committee meeting was studying a document laying the foundations for action, which the PSOE will put forward to use to emerge from the political and economic crisis which Spain is experiencing. This document will be submitted Saturday to the Federal Committee for its approval.

In this connection, Pedro Bofill told LA VANGUARDIA that it is a broad document, whose broad outlines were discussed today, and in which various political aspects are embodied programatically, laying down the foundations for cooperation with the government. He also described it as broad in the sense that it could be accepted by the Executive Committee, as a short-term [guide].

PRIME MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON FIRST 100 DAYS

LD121053 Madrid ABC in Spanish 7 Jun 81 pp 7-9

[Guillermo Luca de Tena interview in Madrid with Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo: "Calvo-Sotelo after 100 days; moderate and cautious optimism"; date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] During these first 100 days of your government, we believe that progress has been made notably in the clarification of the autonomies process. Could you tell our readers what the present state of that process is and what subsequent steps will be taken in organizing the regional issue?

[Answer] I accept with pleasure the journalistic game of the 100 days, even though the historical precedent for that period did not end very well for Napoleon. I believe that the government has had far better luck and that during its 100 days it has tackled effectively and resolutely the outstanding problems, and, in the first place, the problem of the autonomies. In the speech of investiture I said that I intended to define the state as an essential part of the autonomy system and prevent its taking shape as a set of untransferred residual powers; and I emphasized that "the building of the autonomies must be effected in its entirety and not partially, and also with political and administrative meticulousness."

The government, in agreement with the foremost opposition party, believes that the building of the state of the autonomies currently requires a calm reflection in which the parliamentary groups take part, and it wanted to have the valuable help of Professor Garcia de Enterria and of a team of experts, whose now published report is a serious basis for the decisions which must be made and, among them, for the preparation of a possible organic law which will develop some points of Title VIII of the constitution.

Thus I hope to establish on sounder foundations a necessary process in which I firmly believe and which for this reason I wish to conduct effectively and meticulously, attending to the autonomy initiatives, but at the same time, if not previously, building the new state which can accomodate them.

Clear Measures on Terrorism

[Question] Could you take stock of what has been achieved during these 100 days with respect to the antiterrorist struggle? What other measures could your government implement to eradicate the scourge of terrorism, both in the domestic aspect and in possible agreements with the French Government?

[Answer] I have said on several occasions that the antiterrorist struggle is a lengthy struggle. So the period of 100 days seems especially brief for taking stock as far as this point is concerned. This does not mean that clear measures have not been adopted, whose consequences are already beginning to be gauged. Laws in defense of democracy and defining the states of alarm, emergency and extended siege have been drafted. The setting up of a new division for terrorism in the high court has been proposed. The single antiterrorist command has demonstrated its effectiveness, as is shown by the significant number of arrests which have taken place over the last few weeks. The army's cooperation on the border with France has helped to impede the support for terrorism. I am hoping for better cooperation with the neighboring country, which has just signed an unambiguous declaration on the issue in Strasbourg, and whose courts have just ruled for the first time in favor of the extradition of a terrorist.

23 February

[Question] How do you view the armed forces' attitude in light of your experience during this lengthy first 3 months heading the executive power? Do you believe that there is a "coup psychosis"?

[Answer] The events of 23 February have left an understandable but exaggerated mark on Spanish society. A certain pessimism and a sometimes obsessive tension have taken root in public opinion, without real justification. Perhaps your very question contributes to that state of mind when you speak of a "coup psychosis." It is not correct to be constantly analyzing the Spanish political situation in the context of 23 February.

I can assure you that my experience during these truly lengthy and difficult months has given me greater confidence each day in the constitutional loyalty of the armed forces as a whole and in their obedience to the established power. I can now repeat with the utmost conviction something that I announced at the beginning of these 100 days; our democracy is not watched over and weak but secure and watchful. Secure, because of the support of the overwhelming majority of the parties and people; watchful, because a young democracy, subject to the threefold test of terrorism, the economic crisis and the building of the new state of the autonomies, is always vulnerable. The press can do much to restore the calm that has been lost on these foundations.

Jobs

[Question] The problem of unemployment is one of those most severely worrying Spanish society. What have been the main lines of action during this first period of your term and what are the prospects for the next few months for reducing unemployment, as well as for using the funds for community employment?

[Answer] I understand and share the anxiety of a youthful society, such as Spanish society, in view of the impossibility for many of finding a job.

In the speech of investiture--excuse me for referring repeatedly to the speech, but I believe that an effective way of governing is to bear very much in mind the publicly undertaken aims and commitments--I said that "recognizing unemployment as the country's foremost social and economic problem, I wish to state emphatically that the government which I intend to form will devote all the time and energy at its disposal to creating the jobs which our society demands." This was and is my intention. The government's economic policy is aimed at achieving for the Spanish economy growth levels which will make possible the lasting creation of jobs. But in economics--it has frequently been said--there are no miracles. The initial will is not sufficient. Sustained and protracted action is necessary. The budgets for 1981 incorporate an economic policy strategy which the government will continue in 1982; the austerity which is feasible in current expenditure and the desirable expansion of public investment. The support for the construction of housing and the financing for the energy plan or industrial reorganization are evidence of a policy aimed at the lasting creation of employment. All this, which is the government's responsibility, is not sufficient. A demanding commitment on the part of society is also necessary; a commitment which has been sought through dialogue with the social and economic forces to ensure that each party, aware of its responsibilities, will place the partial sacrificing of its demands at everybody's service.

You speak to me of the future trend in unemployment. I will make no promise which is not in my power to keep. The trend in the most recent data is encouraging. There are no elements which suggest that this favorable trend will be interrupted in the future.

Diagnosis of Economy

[Question] How did you find the Spanish economy on taking up the premiership, and how do you view it in the first week of June?

[Answer] I am slightly more optimistic now than in March. Everything points toward a greater expansion of the Western economies in the second half of this year and throughout 1982. An economy which is as dependent on other countries as the Spanish economy must necessarily feel this impetus which can reach it from outside. The freezing of the prices of crude oil decided by OPEC is also a positive factor of the international situation.

But we are not expecting everything from abroad. I would be unjust to my own government if I disregarded what it is doing to rectify a certainly difficult situation. In addition to the previously mentioned measures in support of employment, the reorganization of the integrated iron and steel industry [Siderurgia integral] has been resolutely undertaken; the legal framework for tackling aid for other sectors has been improved; the national hydrocarbons institute has been set up; a new insurance scheme has been submitted to the Cortes; and the drafting of the budgets for 1982 has been prepared in a dialogue with the trade unions and employers.

I believe that all this bears out, despite the difficulties which persist, my present moderate and cautious optimism.

Dialogue With Economic and Social Forces

[Question] How do you assess the degree of realization of your economic program set out in the speech of investiture? What is your impression of the progress of the dialogue with the economic, social and political forces?

[Answer] It is too early to judge a program which still has a long way ahead of it, because it extends to the 2 remaining years of the legislative term. But I can assure you that all the points of that program have been the subject of attention by the government, which has adopted or prepared the appropriate measures in the case of all of them. Only yesterday one of the principal aims proposed--to which your question also refers--was achieved with the conclusion of an agreement on employment among the trade unions, employers and the government. The aim was ambitious and is unprecedented in our country; the fact that before beginning the drafting of the budgets for 1982 an extensive and detailed agreement between the government and the social and economic forces on some of the principal guidelines of economic policy for next year has been possible seems to me an instance of responsibility and maturity on everybody's part. It is sometimes said that the political class is incapable of concentrating on the country's principal problems; this agreement is good proof of the contrary. With concern about unemployment as the starting point, workers, employers and the government have reached an agreement which opens up the doors of hope.

Atlantic Alliance

[Question] As far as foreign policy is concerned, and specifically the NATO issue, what steps will follow in the near future, and how will the provisions of the treaty with the United States fit within the decisive stage of our entry into the Atlantic alliance?

[Answer] I have already held preliminary consultations with the parliamentary groups on Spain's entry into NATO, within the framework of our European policy. Now that the respective delegations have been appointed, the renegotiation of the treaty with the United States, which we wish to conduct precisely within the perspective of that entry, has begun.

Negotiations With EEC

[Question] What is the present state of Spain's negotiations with the EEC?

[Answer] The Community's internal crisis and the French attitude, expressed 1 year ago in the statements of the then president of the republic, have in fact meant not a halting but a delaying of the negotiation process. This does not mean that considerable progress has not been made in many fields. But it is not sufficient.

Spain is entitled to expect from the Community, as regards what remains to be done, something more than preliminary questions or words of support. We have made this known to the Commission and to the member countries with the clarity to which the Europeans are accustomed, and I trust--although the lengthy dealings with the communists have made me cautious in my assertions--that after the summer the negotiations can enter their final stage and that the treaty of accession will be signed in 1982.

Antiterrorist Cooperation

[Question] Has the Spanish Government sought the support of other Western governments for the antiterrorist struggle?

[Answer] A grave concern of the government such as terrorism cannot be absent from our foreign policy. Contacts on the issue with other Western governments have been maintained for some time. The firm stance adopted on this matter by President Reagan will make it possible to make the already established cooperation closer and more effective. Following the elections, I would like to hope for a better disposition than recently on the part of the new French Government. The problem of terrorism does not affect Spain alone, although it affects Spain to an exceptional extent; its resolution also needs international cooperation.

Party in Power

[Question] The Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] is subject to a number of internal tensions which, according to public opinion, render its future problematic. Which alternative is possible for the future; to strengthen the UCD's unity or to seek a new crystallization of similar political forces?

[Answer] The UCD's crisis has been a recurrent topic in the press and in opinion since the party's very foundation in 1977. The UCD's origin as a coalition of different groups which maintained their identity until after the first elections, and the fact that it is a party which has been in power for 4 years, are some of the reasons which explain that recurrence. To these can be added over the last few months the separation of the premiership and the party chairmanship.

I happened to play a certain role in setting up the UCD, then I have been chairman of its parliamentary group and an Executive Committee member, so I am well acquainted with the UCD and I know that it has problems, but no more problems than other parties, but greater openness with respect to its problems. The UCD will remain for a while yet, and those who interpret the recent events differently are mistaken. The UCD occupies an excellent position in the center of the Spanish political scene--a position which the parties to our right and to our left envy. That position remains valid, and I am certain that it will secure the voters' support in 1983, too. There is still a long time until that election and it will undoubtedly have to be used for perfecting the UCD, which will strengthen its center position, attend to its healthy internal differences, assimilate the experience of the transition, accept and correct the mistakes which have been made, promote further recruitment, and, in short, present to the voters in due course a platform which is loyal to its origins but adjusted to the new times.

A party which is in power surrenders many of its initiatives to the government formed from it. Only the imminence of elections will restore to the party its leading role. The coordination between the government and the party is good, and is demonstrated in the sometimes difficult, but strong in most instances, discipline of the parliamentary group. That coordination can be made closer in the future if the circumstances render this advisable. But I repeat that the elections are still far away and that we should not interpret the present situation in a premature electoral key.

In response to the Israeli air attack on the nuclear reactor station, Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen said: "The Danish Government takes a very serious view of the Israeli air attack on the nuclear reactor station near Baghdad. DEFENSE SETTLEMENT TALKS REPORT 'SLOW PROGRESS'

LD121257 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 10 Jun 81 p 19

[Bjarne Kjaer report: "Defense Settlement Unlikely To Be Ready by 1 August"]

[Text] The negotiations between the government and the political parties taking part in the talks on a new 4-year defense settlement continue to make slow progress. Neither Defense Minister Poul Sogaard nor the parties which yesterday took part in another round of negotiations are very hopeful of reaching a new defense settlement before 1 August, the date which the defense high command has fixed as the final one if a settlement is to have any effect in 1982.

The gulf between the government and the Radical Liberals on the one hand and the Conservatives, Liberals, Center Democrats, and the Christian People's Party on the other is still very wide, and after yesterday's meeting Defense Minister Poul Sogaard thought it unlikely that the Social Democratic Folketing group would make sufficient concessions at its meeting 29 June to make agreement on the defense budget possible.

The participants in the defense settlement talks will meet again on 7 July, and the government has promised to reply to the joint demarche made by the Liberals, Conservatives, Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party. This would involve an annual increase in defense spending of around 400 million kroner, whereas the government has thus far only added 44 million kroner annually--to reinforce Sjaelland's defenses--to its initial proposal of an unchanged defense budget.

After yesterday's meeting, the defense minister said that it looked as if agreement on defense spending was impossible. "It would be very difficult for us to give more than we have said we will give to the defense forces," Poul Sogaard said. "It would be very difficult to arrive at 4-year settlements in the present time of enormous economic difficulties, when we do not know where we stand with regard to oil prices, and so on."

Representatives of the Liberals, Conservatives, Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party said after the meeting that they would be sticking to their call for an increase in the defense budget, but are ready to negotiate on other uses for the budget increase. Liberal Party defense spokesman Jens Bilgrav-Nielsen thought that a settlement was "extremely unlikely."

FINLAND

COMMENTS ON ARMS, AMMUNITION USE IN AFGHANISTAN

LD102118 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 2000 GMT 10 Jun 81

[Text] Klaus Tornudd, head of department at the Foreign Ministry, thinks it unlikely that Afghan guerrillas have Finnish weapons, but that it is possible they have Finnish cartridges. Tornudd was commenting on an article in the Soviet LITERATURNAYA GAZETA, according to which Afghan guerrillas are using Finnish ammunition. Tornudd said that when the question of how Finnish cartidges came into Afghanistan was raised about a year ago, an investigation showed that the cartridges came from Iran, where Finland had sold them during the Shah's era. Finland sells cartridges abroad relatively freely. Head of department Fornudd said that although Finland demands a guarantee from arms buyers that Finnish arms will not go to third countries, it is impossible for Finland to check that this will not happen.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS OPPOSE DEFENSE SPENDING INCREASE

[Jan-Anders Ekstrom report: "Social Democratic 'No' to Real Increase in Defense Spending?"]

[Excerpt] Pori--Concluding its 32d party congress, the Finnish Social Democratic Party sketched a surprisingly radical line in its defense policy. The party's new defense policy program states that future defense spending should be "dimensioned so that it does not rise in real terms over the present level." This very Saturday the pacifist forces in the party pushed through by 122 votes to 103 a resolution according to which the party should support the banning of arms exports or, to be more accurate, the export of military materiel.

The Social Democrats' new "zero-line" in defense policy has been interpreted by party leader Kalevi Sorsa as a directive according to which the growth in defense spending must not be allowed to exceed the annual growth in the GNP. No matter how the resolution is interpreted, it conflicts with the third parlaimentary defense committee's recommendation for a real increase in defense spending of 3.8 percent per year over the next 5 years.

NORWAY

MILITARY SAYS SOVIET BOMBERS STATIONED ON BORDER

NC141820 Paris AFP in English 1754 GMT 14 Jun 81

[Text] Oslo, 14 Jun (AFP)--Soviet "Backfire" bombers are probably now stationed on the Kola Peninsula on the border between the Soviet Union and northernmost Norway, the Norwegian High Command said today. It indicated it was deducing this deployment after four of these bombers were photographed last week when overflying international waters north of the Lofoten Islands, off Norway's west coast and the most westerly location where they had ever been spotted.

The Backfire's official Soviet name is the Tupolev 22 M. It entered service in the early 1970's and is believed can fly at speeds of up to 2.5 times the speed of sound. The plane, it was recalled here, can be equipped with nuclear as well as conventional charges.

SWEDEN

SOVIET FIGHTERS STATIONED ON KOL'SKIY POLUOSTROV

LD141811 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1600 GMT 14 Jun 81

[From the "Radio Magazine" program: (Lisa Karlssen) report from Oslo]

[Excerpts] We shall take up the question of what Soviet attack planes are doing over the Norwegian Sea. We have talked to the Norwegian defense chief. The Norwegian defense forces have photographed Soviet fighter aircraft over international waters near the Lofoten Islands, and this is regarded as a military sensation, for never before have Soviet fighter aircraft been seen so far west. The Norwegian defense forces are worried about it.

It is known that the Soviet Union has had Backfire aircraft stationed on the Baltic, but as far as is known no attack planes of this type have been stationed on the Kola Peninsula so far. Now the information given by the Norwegian defense forces indicates that Soviet attack planes equipped with nuclear warheads are being stationed on the Kol'skiy Poluostrov, in the immediate vicinity of Norway, Finland and even Sweden, and this in the midst of discussions on a nuclear weapons-free zone in the north.

PAPER: USSR HAS MORE NUCLEAR-ARMED SHIPS IN BALTIC

LD121317 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 10 Jun 81 p 7

[Ingmar Lindmarker report: "Secret Nuclear Arms"]

[Excerpt] According to Swedish defense experts, the Soviet Union has placed nuclear arms on more naval vessels in the Baltic than its six nuclear-armed Golf class submarines. If this is the case, it would further complicate the question of the Baltic's status in a Nordic nuclear-free zone.

"There is reason to believe that certain Soviet vessels which have been stationed in the Baltic area have nuclear arms on board," Commander Lennart Forsman, chief of the south coast naval base in Karlskrona, told SVENSKA DAGBLADET. Commander Forsman is referring to Soviet vessels other than the six Golf class submarines which were stationed in the Baltic a few years ago. These submarines each have three nuclear warheads on SS-N-5 missiles with a range of over 1,200 km. The report that it is probable that other Soviet vessels also have nuclear arms is confirmed by security politicians in Stockholm. They point especially to surface vessels with advanced missiles which could be fitted with nuclear warheads.

These include Soviet submarine pursuit vessels of the Krivak class. There are between 5 and 10 of these in the Baltic and all are armed with the SS-N-14 submarine pursuit missile which has a range of 50 km and can be presumed to have warheads with nuclear charges.

The Swedish experts stress that it is impossible to decide for certain when the vessels have nuclear arms, and this uncertainty also stretches to the Golf class submarines. However, they say that they "have every reason to believe" that they carry nuclear armaments. The naval missiles in question have been developed extremely quickly by the Soviet Union. The Russians are thought to have a lead over the Americans, who are reported to be very worried by the Soviet Union's concentrations of long-range nuclear-armed naval missiles.

LEADERS MEET WITH YUGOSLAV FOREIGN SECRETARY

LD160406 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1907 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Excerpts] London, 15 Jun (TANJUG)--Josip Vrhovec, federal secretary for foreign affairs, who is on an official visit to Great Britain, was received this evening by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. He had his first meeting with Lord Carrington, British foreign secretary earlier. He also met with Defense Secretary John Nott.

In all the talks today, it was learned, mutual satisfaction was expressed about the development so far of relations between Great Britain and Yugoslavia as well as the interest in a further expansion of mutual cooperation. The atmosphere everywhere was friendly and marked by frank dialogue. The talks were attended by Milos Melovski, assistant federal secretary, Zivan Berisavljevic, Yugoslav ambassador in Great Britain, and Edwin Bolland, British ambassador in Belgrade.

Federal Secretary Josip Vrhovec met before that with his host Lord Carrington. The head of British diplomacy first welcomed the guest and then the two ministers talked for a short while about the most topical international problems. They touched upon some issues of European relations, in particular of East-West relations, problems linked with the arms race and with the development of events in Poland. It has been learned that the two ministers presented their views of the problems resulting from the arms race and of how to create conditions to set in motion the disarmament process. During the talks, the need was pointed out for a dialogue to halt the present unfavorable trends in international relations. In the talks between Vrhovec and Carrington, first assessments of the situation in bilateral relations also were made.

The subject of the talks with Defense Secretary John Nott, who until recently was in charge of an economic department, was the state of British-Yugoslav economic relations and in this context military-economic cooperation. Topical international issues also were touched upon.

The talks between Josip Vrhovec and Lord Carrington will resume tomorrow when the two ministers and their associates will exchange views on present international, political and economic relations, on hotbeds of crisis in the world as well as on some issues of bilateral relations.

Vrhovec Dinner Toast

LD161036 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 2253 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Excerpts] London, 15 Jun (TANJUG)--On behalf of the Government of Great Britian, Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington and his wife gave a formal dinner tonight in honor of Josip Vrhovec, federal secretary of foreign affairs. Participants in the British-Yugoslav talks and several prominent British personalities attended the dinner, which passed in a very cordial atmosphere. The host and the guest exchanged toasts.

In his toast, Josip Vrhovec referred to the importance of the traditional friendship and historic links between the peoples of our two countries. "They flourished especially during World War II when we fought together for our national existence and for peace and freedom in the world. All this represented an impotant basis for a stable and all-round development of our bilateral relations," Vrhovec said.

Having assessed the relations between Yugoslavia and Great Britain as being very good and having stressed the resolve of the two countries to further promote relations and strengthen the friendship of their peoples, the federal secretary said: "I will not say anything new if I emphasize that there is a close link between political and economic cooperation. It is therefore very important, by joint efforts, to bring about a more balanced commodity exchange and to make use of the not insignificant possibilities for the expansion of economic cooperation, enriching it with new forms and content. Our desire is that we should advance also in all other areas of our relations."

In this connection, he stressed his conviction that this represents our positive contribution to make the world in which we live today safer, to improve relations between countries, to ensure greater reciprocal trust and peace between them and that everybody be more secure. "We follow with concern the deterioration of international relations and the exacerbation of crises and the nonsolution of many vital problems of the world," said Federal Secretary Vrhovec. He stressed that he was not thinking only of East-West relations, but especially of those between North and South.

Referring to the situation on our continent, which he also assessed as one causing concern, the federal secretary said that Europe could not remain an island of peace and prosperity while the rest of the world is burdened by problems and crises. Cracks in the relative stability and mounting rivalry on our continent show that in the present day interdependent world there cannot be isolated cases of stability and prosperity. "This development can be halted only with active cooperation of all countries in the consolidation of peace and solution of world problems. We must today reaffirm the principles of the UN charter, which speak about the relations between sovereign states and their responsibilities for our life together on our planet," Josip Vrhovec concluded.

Carrington Comments

LD160618 Belgrade TANJUG in English 0110 GMT 16 Jun 81

[Excerpt] London, 15 Jun (TANJUG)--Present relations between Great Britain and Yugoslavia are based on firm ties forged during our alliance in the second World War. What the Yugoslav peoples endured and achieved cannot be forgotten nor will it be forgotten. This was stated this evening by British Secretary of State Lord Carrington in his toast at the dinner which he gave in honour of his guest, Yugoslav Foreign Secretary Josip Vrhovec.

Perhaps because our relations are based on this, Lord Carrington added, they have shown significant stability for years, so they have been maintained already for a long period in such open, sincere and friendly manner.

The British minister assessed as significant the existence of permanent British-Yugoslav dialogue, as is the current visit of Minister Vrhovec to Britain. He said that such meetings help to jointly contribute to the peaceful solution of world problems.

Lord Carrington assessed the present talks with Josip Vrhovec which will be continued tomorrow, as very useful. It is doubtless, he concluded, that these talks will again demonstrate that we have many interests in common and that that will cement our already good relations. Yugoslavia can be sure of our lasting friendship.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS TO UN OVER DENKTAS STATEMENT

NC121122 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 12 Jun 81

[Text] It has been learned that Mr Pelayias, director general of the Foreign Ministry, today summoned to his office the UN representative in Cyprus and made a strong demarche over the recent statements made by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas. At the same time, the Cyprus permanent representative at the United Nations has been instructed to make a similar demarche over the same issue.

DENKTAS SAYS VILLAGES WILL NEVER BE RETURNED

TA131318 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 13 Jun 81

[Text] The Greek Cypriot leadership has claimed that President Denktas' statements are provocative, that the Turkish Cypriot side's intransigence has reached a climax. It was announced that for this reason and also under the pretext of security regarding the issue of [word indistinct] the Greek Cypriot leadership is taking steps to complain to the United Nations. President Denktas reiterated that Lefke [Lefka] Guzelyurt [Morphou] and Yesilirmak [Limnitis] villages would never be given to the Greek cypriots and that these regions were not negotiable.

Denktas said that the Greek Cypriots should not appraoch the territorial questions with far-fetched imaginary demands--he said that the Turkish Cypriots had stopped being refugees following the 1975 exchange of population. He added: We are opposed to all moves that might make them refugees once more. Denktas called on the Greek Cypriots to give up their dreams. He said: They are wrong if they think they will return to these regions following negotiations.

PAPER CRITICIZES KIPRIANOU STAND TOWARD DENKTAS

[Editorial: "No Virility Toward Denktas"]

[Text] Yesterday, political observers in Nicosia expressed grave concern over:
--The hardening of the Turkish position, as it has been strongly expressed on a daily basis in statements by Denktas;
--The obvious lack of virility in the government's one and only reaction to these statements.

The same observers underlined that such a lack of virility only serves the plans and aspirations of the Turkish side and further weakens the Greek Cypriot positions. The same obervers noted that this lack of virility is the sequel to preelection assurances given by the government and specifically by President Kiprianou and Rolandhis that there would be a change in the Turkish position during June and July and that proposals on the territorial issue would be made. These observers expressed surprise over this government position, which they described as "totally inexplicable." It is recalled that in reacting to one of the many provocative Denktas statements, to the one about the return of the refugees to Morphou, Kiprianou simply limited himself to stressing his insistence upon the return of all refugees to their homes and proceeded to add his assurances about his good will.

EVREN STRESSES RESISTANCE TO OUTSIDE PRESSURES

[Public Address by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in Amasya on 12 June 1981--recorded]

[Excerpts] My dear citizens of Amasya, as you know, in the various speeches I have made since 12 September, I pointed out that we carried out this operation following the will of the nation, and that we would succeed in our struggle against anarchy and terrorism in a short time if our people helped us; that as a nation we would have to suffer 3 or 4 years before our economy--which was destroyed over many years--recovered and regained its stability. Certain persons are now uneasy with the measures taken. They are shouting inside the country and making others outside the country shout that "people are being tortured." They are doing this in order to cast a shadow over the success we achieved in fighting terrorism. These persons tried to exert pressure on us through foreign organizations. When this proved fruitless, they claimed that it was against human rights to detain a person for 90 days. They did not think twice about using this as a tool against us through foreign circles. They even complained to outsiders that we were stripping traitors who were fleeing the country of their Turkish citizenship.

They also tried to exploit our remarks to the effect that former parliamentarians--those who were in parliament on 11 September--would not be allowed to join the constituent assembly or the first assembly to be established. Whenever our European friends come to Turkey they ask us whether any elections where the former parliamentarians will not be allowed to participate can be democratic.

My dear citizens, are they the only ones among 45 million people, who have the capability to govern this country? Are there not any other citizens who can govern this country among this big community? [applause] Hundreds and thousands of citizens can govern this nation at least as well as they can. [cheers and applause]

I am saying it once again categorically, we are firmly opposed to the torture incidents that occur sometimes, here and there. The culprits are interrogated and receive the punishment they deserve. The decision to detain persons up to 90 days was taken as a result of the extraordinary situation we are now in. This period will be reduced in steps at the first opportunity.

However, warnings from outside on this issue will produce countereffects. We might not annual the decision [to detail a person up to 90 days] so as not to give anyone the satisfaction of saying "they annulled the decision following pressure from outside." [cheers and applause] Our friends should know very well that the Turkish nation is very sensitive about outside interference.

Now let me give you some figures related to the issue of 90 days. The figures are not for the entire country. Soon, I will disclose figures for the entire country too. In one martial law area, since the day we enacted the decision on the 90 days, some 5,247 citizens were detained. Now you will see how many of them were held for 90 days, how many for 30 days. Of the 5,247, 4,143 were held from 1 to 30 days, 769 were held from 1 to 45 days [as heard], 172 were detained 60 days, 99 were detained for 75 days and only 64 persons were held 90 days. Why were they held for 90 days?--because the martial law command of the area had to detain them for 90 days. The interrogation of persons captured en masse does not end quickly. That is why, in view of the existing extraordinary conditions, we enacted that law. However, we were about to annul it now, until our European friends began to say "if they do not reduce the 90 days we will cut the aid to Turkey." Now, we are not annulling it. [cheers and applause] We are not persons who will sell the honor and dignity of the Turkish nation for money.

My dear citizens, if a country which used to reign over other countries then begins to beg for money from those countries, from countries smaller than itself, then those countries begin to think they have the right to order us around. That is why we must be strong in every field. Nobody can say anything to a strong state. Nobody can say anything about the laws of a strong country. Therefore, we will be strong economically, culturally and militarily. If we are strong in those ways then such pressures will not come from any country. That is why we are saying that our nation will work hard, will produce a lot, will sell a lot and we will stop being beggars. [cheers and applause]

Let me say it categorically once more; the party leaders and leading cadres of 11 September in particular will not be able to enter the constituent assembly or the first assembly to be established. [cheers and applause]

These cadres which turned the political parties into enemies must now go. They must leave their places to people who, as in civilized countries, can criticize each other without swearing at each other, who are not enemies, who can conduct proper discussions at the assembly and who can be friendly outside the assembly. They were not able to do that. Those who are able to do that must replace them. Those leaders have not yet forgotten their enmity to each other.

Let me give you a very recent example: A parliamentarian from a friendly country arrived in Turkey and tried to see them both [Demirel and Ecevit]. Coincidentally, they both said 1000. The parliamentarian asked them if one of them could change the time. Neither of them would change the time. Each said let the other change the time. As you see, they cannot even change their times, with their superiority complex. [cheers and applause] The nation can no longer tolerate people who hate each other so much.

My dear citizens, those who criticize our economic policies are afraid that they will have to say goodby to their dreams for the future because they think that if the economic policies succeed as well as the antiterrorism policies then this administration might stay on forever. All they want is to have the previous leaders in power. My dear citizens, we promised you from the first day; we will solve the problems of the country in the shortest possible time and we will return to our barracks. As soldiers, we do not covet the ruling of the country. We do not want that. Even though you received us with such enthusiasm, even though you receive us with such enthusiasm wherever we go, we will return to the democratic system because we believe, as Ataturk said, that the best system which suits this nation is a republic. It is the democratic system, and also because we know that this is what our citizens want. Those circles should not worry, they should not be afraid. If they regain their senses, they might put their candidacies in the future, after a few elections, and then they might also join the assembly.

My dear citizens, lastly, I would like to refer to the Armenian problem which has been occurring lately. Armenians outside the country who have been perpetrating shameless actions are demanding land from us. I ask you; why are they asking for land now? Why did they not ask for land during Ataturk's rule or even when the Ottoman Empire was at its weakest? The reason is that there was chaos and a threat of civil war in the country. Like vultures, they thought they might grab something from us.

They must realize very well that the Turkish nation is very patient, but that if it loses its patience it will not consider obstacles before it. [cheers and applause] They exploded bombs in their own churches, in their own buildings in certain European cities. They then claimed that certain organizations which they said we had established caused these explosions. If we were to set up such an organization it would not be so amateurish. [cheers] They should not oblige us to do that. We are running out of patience. They will receive the answer they deserve. [cheers and applause]

However, I am proud to say that our Armenian citizens in this country are upset about these actions. They do not approve of that at all. I extend my thanks and my best wishes to the Armenians in this country. [cheers] We adopt as ours all persons who live on this land and who are known as citizens of the Turkish Republic. We consider them citizens regardless of their race, religion or ideas.

Those who are outside the country are causing incidents encouraged by the countries in which they live. The latest example was the occupation of one of our offices [the Turkish Airlines office in Paris] in France. We were very concerned about this incident. We expect these countries which claim to be our friends to display their friendship.

FOREIGN MINISTRY OFFICIAL OUTLINES POLICIES

TA151456 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1445 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Text] Ankara, 15 June (AA)--Secretary General of the Foreign Ministry Kamuran Gurun said certain circles wanted instability to prevail in Turkey.

Opening a conference on "Turkey and the U.S." sponsored jointly by the Foreign Policy Institute in Ankara and the Georgetown University International and Strategic Studies Center Monday, Gurun noted that the principles of current Turkish foreign policy had been set at the time of the war of independence with a "national pact," aimed at preserving Turkey's independence and ensuring economic development within her present borders. Such a policy should not create any difficulties in relations with neighbors and other countries, Gurun added.

Gurun believed it was difficult to deny the link between terrorism in Turkey and abroad, noting the rise in attacks on Turkish officials abroad coincided with the successful curbing of terrorism at home, thus confirming the existence of such a link. It was not difficult, Gurun said, to guess at the motives behind the propaganda abroad against the current administration in Turkey, which paralleled the decline of anarchy at home.

SYRIAN JUSTICE MINISTER ARRIVES FOR TALKS

TA151133 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Text] Syrian Justice Minister Khalid al-Maliki arrived in Ankara today for an official visit. He was received at Esenboga Airport by Justice Minister Cevdet Mentes. Mentes said that Al-Malaki's visit would not only serve to realize cooperation between the two countries in the judicial field, but would also contribute to the solution of mutual problems. In his reply, the visiting Syrian minister recalled that deep-rooted friendship links existed between his country and Turkey and added that his visit constituted a significant step in the promotion of relations between the two countries.

The Syrian justice minister will make an official call on Justice Minister Mentes this afternoon. An agreement on the extradition of criminals and mutual legal assistance in criminal cases is expected to be signed following the talks. Al-Maliki will depart Turkey on Friday, 19 June.

Extradition Agreement Signed

TA151717 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Text] An agreement was signed between Turkey and Syria in Ankara today on the extradition of criminals and mutual legal assistance. The agreement was signed by Syrian Justice Minister Khalid al-Maliki and by Turkish Justice Minister Cevdet Mentes. Speaking at the ceremony, Mentes said that Turkey wanted close cooperation especially with its neighbors in all fields. He explained that the agreement envisaged the extradition of criminals as well as modern mutual legal assistance in criminal cases.

The Syrian minister pointed out that the agreement was a sign of the friendly and brotherly ties between Turkey and Syria. He also expressed the belief that it would strengthen the relations between the two countries.

FINANCE MINISTER LEAVES FOR PARIS OECD MEETING

TA151550 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen left for Paris yesterday to attend the OECD ministerial committee meetings there. The meetings will last 2 days. The foreign ministers will meet tomorrow and the finance ministers on Wednesday. Finance Minister Kaya Erdem left for Paris at 1430 in order to attend the latter meeting. In a statement at Esenboga Airport before his departure, Erdem said: [Begin recording] The world economic situation, the OECD countries' economic conditions, the relations between developing countries and OECD members and questions related to world trade will be discussed at the OECD foreign ministers meeting on 16 June and the OECD finance ministers' meeting on 17 June. As I have said before, our main aim is to integrate Turkey in the world economy but with a stronger [economic] structure. For Turkey to ensure a minimal economic independence, it must achieve an export level which can guarantee a foreign trade balance, given its import level. Every sensible step is being taken to achieve this aim. Such an approach makes it necessary for Turkey to continuously follow the developments in the world economy and to contribute to the international economic dialogue.

Turkey, which is a developing country with a medium [per capita] income, has a special place and responsibility among the OECD countries. Turkey can make concrete contributions, arising from its own capabilities and experience, to the debates and harmonization within the OECD of the OECD countries' policies regarding the developing countries. It is part of Turkey's traditional policies to approach the problems between these two groups of countries with the aim of serving common interests and to prevent any breaks in dialogue. I hope that during the Paris meeting I will have the opportunity to hold bilateral contacts with my colleagues from the OECD countries. [end recording]

SPOKESMAN REGRETS SOVIET 'UNCLEAR' CSCE POLICY

[Text] Bonn, 16 Jun (DPA)--According to Government Spokesman Kurt Becker, the Federal Government regrets the Soviet Union's unclear policy at the CSCE followup conference in Madrid. Becker told newsmen in Bonn after today's cabinet meeting on international topics that the head of Moscow's delegation to the CSCE followup conference, Leonid Fedorovich Ilichev, obviously has already partially withdrawn agreements on confidence-building measures promised by Leonid Brezhnev. The formulations by Ilichev, who now is speaking only of appropriate areas of application for confidence-building measures and no longer of an area for such measures up to the Urals--as Brezhnev had done in February--has led to concern in Bonn about the direction of Soviet CSCE policy. Vice Chancellor and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher reminded the cabinet that during his visit to Moscow in March there had still been talk of extending the area to the Urals.

Becker said that the Federal Government presently is trying, within the framework of the Madrid conference, to reach a clarification of these newly-arisen questions. He stressed Bonn's express hope that Moscow will return to the old offer.

Bonn political circles point also to the potential dangers for Poland if the Soviets limit the area for confidence-building measures. This problem ought to be dealt with by a European disarmament conference, which would receive its mandate from the CSCE followup conference in Madrid.

In a readio interview this weeken, Genscher expressly urged the Soviets to announce the continuing validity of Brezhnev's offer.

[Text] [No dateline received] Genscher today expressed to Soviet Ambassador Vladimir Semenov the Federal Government's concern at the partial retraction of Brezhnev's assurances. At the talk, which took place at Semenov's request, Genscher, according to diplomatic circles, said that nevertheless there are encouraging signs at the CSCE review conference in Madrid pointing to agreement on a substantive final document. At the present difficult juncture, the successful conclusion of the Madrid conference and the calling of a conference on disarmament in Europe could help stabilize the international situation.

Genscher expressed to the Soviet ambassador the Federal Government's interest in the continuation of the East-West dialogue. He referred to the Bundestag's support for the Federal Government's appeal to the Soviet Union to stop the construction and deployment of further SS-20 missiles and to facilitate disarmament efforts by reducing the number of missiles already installed.

GOVERNMENT VIEWS POLAND 'WITH GREAT CONCERN'

LD161436 Hamburg DPA in German 1314 GMT 16 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn (DPA)--Government Spokesman Kurt Becker told newsmen in Bonn today that the Federal Government is following the situation in Poland "with great concern." This serious assessment of the situation, which was discussed in detail at today's meeting of the Federal Cabinet was based not least on the letter from the Soviet Party Central Committee to the Polish party. Moreover, the current Polish situation has to be viewed against the backdrop of the planned Polish party congress.

Becker declined to give details of the government's concern and pointed to the clear German policy of noninterference. Nonetheless, in an assessment of the situation, the increase in the published statements, the speeches and letters directed against Poland in Moscow and the bordering East bloc states has to be taken into account. Becker said it is still not clear what will be the future team of Poland's leaders, which is to be confirmed at the party congress. However, it cannot be ruled out that the composition of the new Polish leadership may be unacceptable to the Soviet Union.

OFFICIAL WELCOMES SOVIET MIDEAST INVOLVEMENT

NC161138 Beirut MONDAY MORNING in English 8-14 Jun 81 pp 56-59

[By Claude Khuri]

[Excerpt] The West German secretary of state, Guenter von Well, stated last week that the current Syrian-Israeli crisis has given the Soviet Union the opportunity to increase its involvement in the Middle East.

In an interview with MONDAY MORNING, Von Well said that any constructive Soviet contribution to peace in the Middle East should be welcomed, and he called on Moscow to clarify its repeated proposal for an international conference on the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The secretary of state, who sent in written answers to MONDAY MORNING's questions, also stated:

--That the situation in Lebanon can be stabilized before the ultimate settlement of the Middle Eastern crisis. This, he said, would require a total commitment to the state by all Lebanese groups and non-interference in Lebanese affairs by non-Lebanese forces.

--That if the Syrian-Israeli crisis poses a serious danger of superpower confrontation, which it has not posed so far, the actions of Bonn and its European partners will be governed by the principles of "restraint and responsibility" spelled out in the Rome communique of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

--That although Bonn would like to avoid a situation in which any country sees the Soviet camp as its only refuge, it does not believe that Syria "will allow itself to be pushed into anyone's arms."

--That Western efforts to settle the Arab-Israeli problem should go hand in hand with Western measures to help the Gulf states protest themselves from external threat, if the Gulf states approve of such assistance.

--That the attitude of France under Socialist President Francois Mitterrand will continue to be in accord with the attitude of the European Economic Community towards a peace settlement in the Middle East.

"There is no doubt," the West German secretary of state said, "that the current (Syrian-Israeli) crisis has given the Soviet Union the opportunity and the occasion to increase its involvement in the Middle East, and I cannot imagine that anyone would object to a constructive, responsible and balanced Soviet contribution to finding a comprehensive and just peace settlement."

Asked to define Bonn's attitude towards Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's proposal of an international Middle East peace conference, Von Well said, "we take a goal-oriented position, which means that we are open to any method which might realistically lead to a comprehensive peace settlement in the Middle East. This is why the current (American-Egyptian-Israeli) peace efforts, which have doubtless brought some progress, have found our approval."

He added: "It remains to be seen, in the light of the experience gained at the Geneva conference (on the Middle East), whether the Soviet Union's proposal of an international conference is realistic or not. Thus far, little is known about the Soviet Union's concrete conception of such a conference."

The secretary of state stressed that "the Soviet Union will, in particular, have to answer the question of how it expects to act as a mediator when it does not maintain diplomatic relations with all nations concerned." The Soviet Union severed its diplomatic relations with Israel after the 1967 war.

"Let me emphasize the fact that we are pushing for serious and substantive negotiations," Von Well said. "We reject a conference for purposes of propaganda."

And in reference to the Camp David agreements, he added, "it is also vitally important that the ground gained so far should not be lost."

Commenting on fears of a superpower clash developing out of the Syrian-Israeli crisis in Lebanon, Von Well said, "I do not think that the Syrian-Israeli crisis has so far brought us close to a confrontation between the superpowers. The governments of both countries have stated clearly that they do not want an armed conflict, and we have expressed our appreciation of this. The superpowers were very quick to make contact with each other as soon as the crisis threatened to become acute, and they made it clear that they are not interested in the conflict spreading."

Asked what role West Germany and the EEC could play to defuse superpower tension if it threatened to develop into a confrontation, the secretary of state referred to the NATO communique of Rome, which emphasized the principles of "restraint and responsibility."

"In the case of a serious danger of conflict, these principles would govern the actions of the Federal Republic of Germany and its European partners," he said.

BECKER SAYS BREZHNEV STILL EXPECTED TO VISIT

LD161350 Hamburg DPA in German 1310 GMT 16 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 16 Jun (DPA)--The Federal Republic continues to expect Leonid Brezhnev to visit the Federal Republic in late summer or early autumn. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker made this statement in Bonn today in reply to a statement by three CSU deputies who maintained that, in view of the lack of prospects for the success of such a visit, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is working to postpone the date. Becker said this was based on an "erroneous assumption."

In a general statement on the political situation and on security policy, European Parliament Deputies Aigner and Otto von Habsburg and Count Hans Huyn, foreign policy spokesman of the CSU land group in the Bundestag, expressed basic concern at an "exchange of visits with political representatives between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union which, with their propaganda effect, could be interpreted as acceptance or even approval of overall Soviet policy." The deputies also deplored a campaign in which "the United States is defamed as being unwilling to negotiate," as for example in the statement by SPD politician Egon Bahr on 11 June. The counterarming part of the NATO twin decision must be "implemented without delay."

FOREIGN MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON MIDEAST POLICY

JN121954 Monte Carlo Radio Monte Carlo in Arabic 1730 GMT 12 Jun 81

[Monte Carlo Radio interview carried on the "It Happened Tomorrow" program with French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson; date and place not given--recorded in French with superimposed "verbatim or almost verbatim" translation into Arabic]

[Text] [Question] Allow me, Your Excellency Mr Minister, to begin with current hot affairs, that is, the Zionist air force's bombardment of the Iraqi nuclear center. Through its president and premier and through you, France has condemned this operation. The Arabs might demand retaliatory measures on the international level and a strong condemnation of Israel at the UN Secretary Council. What will France's stand be?

[Answer] First, allow me to tell you how happy I am to be speaking for the first time with Monte Carlo Radio. I am aware of your vast popularity in the Middle East and I am making use of it.

In our opinion, you have referred to an extremely serious subject which, frankly, saddens us immensely. We are a new majority. I am not referring to the change in government. Changes in ministers are secondary. We are a new majority, the progeny of a popular trend in France. This is what is important. The French people, who gave us their confidence by making this change which we represent, are expecting frank and clear stands for us. This is what President Mitterrand and his government plan to do so. In this new French resurgence, we will be inspired by making some minor changes so that the people can understand.

Recently, they have complicated matters a lot and they wanted to placate all sides. For us, however, the great principles of liberty and respect for human beings are important. Perhaps you know that the first statement I made as a minister from the UNESCO rostrum was to condemn all forms of religious, racist or other discrimination.

In the Middle East, we will proceed inspired by these principles, since it is the right of a human being to be himself; since religious discrimination is intolerable; since Lebanon should cling to its sovereignty and its right to run its own affairs; since the Jews were subjected to oppression, we should sometimes understand their hate and sentiments; since Israel is a state and is entitled to have a guaranteed security; since the Palestinian people are a real people and they have proven this, they should be given a future, a homeland and a horizon. Nobody has the right to give these people refugee tents for a future. We are convinced that the assertion and confirmation of these great principles can serve as the beginning for finding solutions.

Therefore, such an operation is a blatant violation of international norms and cannot be justified. The argument brought forth by the Israeli leaders doesn't hold water. No expert in the world can say that a research reactor--and in the world there are about 100 similar reactors, supplied by us or the Americans or the Italians--can pose a danger if it is subject to an alert supervision in order to prevent the produced nuclear material and from being assembled, thus giving no room for apprenehsion about an Iraqi nuclear policy outside ths scope of these reactors. However, it would be lying to say that these reactors pose the danger of the ability to produce an atomic bomb.

Without any justification, the prime minister of a nation we respect and with whom we sympathize, the prime minister of a state for which we desire security inside borders recognized by the international community--not outside these borders, naturally--launched a raid on a neighboring state. He launched this raid although the new French president had insisted on the subject of this supervision. He launched this raid while ignoring the additional security, if I may say this, which the new French administration could have represented.

One French citizen was killed. And this was very painful. We think of the family of this Frenchman and of the respect for the great principles. We note that we should not deviate from these principles and not turn our backs to what might reduce tension in the near future.

It is a real problem for us also. France's official stand continues to be, as it was in the past in the Venice declaration, to seek to achieve peace in the Middle East. We had increasingly friendly relations with the Israelis and we had hoped that this would be beneficial. As for Israel's partners, we notice from their reaction that they were embroiled in an embarrassing dilemma.

A few days before the raid, President as-Sadat met with Begin. Saudi Arabia [as heard] wants to show reason on conditions that the great principles, including Jerusalem, are respected. Therefore, we turn our backs to peace. [sentence as heard] Israel is embroiling itself and its future. From this, you can understand that it is an extremely grave matter to us.

[Question not translated into Arabic]

[Answer] You have asked me a specific question: What will happen? The UN Security Council will undoubtedly hold a meeting. In this meeting, we will reiterate what has already been said by the premier and the president, namely, this action is rejected and condemned and that the great principles should be respected. We will reiterate this in other forums.

Perhaps some people want to use threats. We do not think that threats are the wise way to solve the big problems in the Middle East. We are worried that the consequences of threats will fall on the heads of those who are suffering the most in the Middle East, such as the Lebanese. Therefore, this is not what concerns us more than anything else. Legally, we might find ourselves committed, in view of the condemnation we have announced, to participate in this or that resolution taken by the United Nations. Pardon me. However, these are future matters. The grave matter is to see Israel going away from peace, its future and its own security.

[Question] Mr Minister, do you think that this act will lead to results that might harm the continuation of cooperation between France and Iraq or, as the Anglo-Saxon press is saying, might drive France to reconsider its policy on nuclear cooperation?

[Answer] Excuse me, but I do not see how an air raid against Iraq, an act which violated international law, can change relations between Iraq and France. If this raid has any effect, it will bring us closer together. Wasn't our blood shed together?

The principles for cooperation with a Third World state and all states have been clearly defined. All concluded agreements are implemented. There are some agreements we would not have concluded. Our commitment toward the Third World is stronger today than at any time in the past. The economic interests resulting from cooperation with the Third World states do not differ from what they were during the previous government. However, in addition to that, we have a socialist mission. Since we are struggling to alleviate injustices and to reduce differences in our country, we also will struggle for this elsewhere. Since we are struggling for France's identity and independence, be definitely sure that we also will do this abroad.

Therefore, our policy on the Third World will be extremely pure. Hence, I do not see how what has happened recently, which was tragic in itself and in regard to the region, can change France's relations with the states in the region.

[Question] It seems that Iraq wishes to rebuild what has been destroyed. Has France made a decision on this issue?

[Answer] You are better informed than I because I do not yet know what Iraq intends to do. How can we know today the real situation when the extent of the damage has not yet been ascertained? Is what has been left undamaged adequate for the immediate resumption of work? I believe that we technically, economically and politically do not know what tomorrow will be like.

[Question] No one denies that the Communists' participation in the future government is a French affair, but some anxiety in this respect is noted in some Arab capitals. King Khalid will visit Paris. Is this visit going to alleviate this anxiety, if we may ask?

[Answer] The purpose of King Khalid's visit is not to tell us that he is carrying a Communist to us or that he does not accept the Communists. [sentence as heard] King Khalid is a grand figure among the Middle East figures and, consequently, among Third World figures. He understands very well what the value of his people's independence, the independence of the Arab nation and the independence of Islam mean to his people and the believers. Consequently, he does not accept the task of teaching us lessons on what we must or must not do.

[Question] Your Excellency, Saudi Arabia will participate in the North-South conference to be held in Mexico. Are you going to bring up this issue with the Saudi monarch and do you expect a special Saudi role and influence at this conference, upon which the new majority pins great importance?

[Answer] The dialogue will be between the heads of two states. I cannot predict what they will say. We, the French, particularly we the Socialist government, are committed to the North-South dialogue.

What does the North-South dialogue mean? It naturally means more aid, more financial efforts, more participation in markets and more stability for raw materials. However, if you prevent the hiding of the whole forest by these trees which I have mentioned, then what is the forest?

The dialogue between the North and the South is for us to understand where the South is in today's and tomorrow's world. Where is it? Is it marginal and unknown? It is no longer under our control. We are no longer materially and militarily present in it. However, does that mean that we have no interest in it unless it has a harbor where there are sailors with beautiful hats and with other things and unless it has such raw materials as oil, uranium and the like? We do not have this perspective. In our view, the South is part of the world. Every state in the South has a right to its identity, to handle its destiny, to use its resources in order to grow, to increase its friends and allies and to promote some policies of the South. Every state of the South has the same rights as those of the North. We prefer to say the North to the West because East European states have, regrettably, little presence. Every state of the South has the same rights as our states. Thus, any future event, issue and thought about the North and the South becomes a thrilling, tempting and exciting issue because we are from a new world, a different world. If we face the new world in this way, France undoubtedly will have a great role to play. We are an ancient country. We are nationalists. We have a prosperous industry in various fields. We have a deep-rooted culture.

It is certain that Saudi Arabia has a big role to play. It is naturally a large country. It has a distinguished geographical situation. It is a country of great faith. If we talk about the distant future, then what people believe has a basic value. Saudi Arabia is a kingdom run by an elite group of men of big influence. There is no embarrassment in saying that Saudi Arabia is also important because of its oil and money. Is it a shame for a country to have oil and money? Therefore, there is a possibility for deep dialogue between France and Saudi Arabia about the world of tomorrow, provided that we admit that the status of every country of the South is equal to the status of every country of the North.

[Question] There is the bilateral dialogue and there is the tripartite dialogue. Will you adopt this idea, which was launched by the former French Government? The idea of the tripartite dialogue might not be bad?

[Answer] You embarrass me a little because before President Giscard d'Estaing found this beautiful phrase with which to name this issue, I was a humble envoy in a small office in Brussels undertaking a large number of such operations. When I left Brussels, we had about 50 operations between the European Community and Arab money, which amounted to about $5 to $6 billion. Arab participation in these operations was larger than that of the Community--road and factory projects, cement factories here and educational complexes there. We did that before finding the name. We achieved that in practice. Some of the projects are going on and some of them have been completed. This proves the extent of my belief in this cooperation. I believe that cooperation must go beyond what has been achieved between the European Community and Arab money. This includes what we might term general aid, that is, treasury grants and aid to development projects.

We must find similar relations with private capital. There are numerous operations in the world which need to be undertaken, whether here with us, in the Arab world or in nonoil states--big operations with the possibility of joint financing and solidarity between these finances and the technology which we have and the possibility for these finances to enter our market. The Saudis are far richer than we are. Our market is far larger than theirs. Every establishment needs money, technology and a market.

[Answer] Does our presence in office amount to more than 15 days? Thus, formulating an idea about French diplomacy on the basis of 15 days is not feasible. I know that the moment the infant is born and while it is still blue, crying without teeth and hairless, people ask: Don't you see that he looks like his father? Our new infant diplomacy really resembles its father or mother.

But let us be serious. Before be decide what the French diplomacy will be like, particularly in a world which is very complex and very proud, like the Middle East world, we must give it 1, 2 or 3 years to assert its presence. What are its characteristics? I have told you that we stem from the same point and same stands adopted by the former government. This is self-imposed. France is a big country characterized by continuity. A pledge made by a former government is taken up by the next government.

I already have told you that, in some cases, we might not be pleased to be committed to the pledges of the former government. For example, there are weapons which we find ourselves obliged to deliver to South America, which we would have rather sent to another place and so on. We are committed to our pledges in view of this continuity. Our stands are the same. We we have shown from the beginning that our methods will be different.

We have close relations with Israel. We have a desire to have closer relations with all the Arab states, hence, the large number of envoys who flocked to all the Arab states. This is the reality. Moreover, our determination is to truly respect the grand principles. You might think that I am hallucinating. I don't care if I hallucinate in front of you. This is the trend which we will adopt. We might accordingly lose this or that bargain. We proceed with some grand principle and some grand ideas. This is what you will feel and this is what will be proved day by day. We can surely be depended on in this respect. This is the broad line which will be our line.

Our colleagues in the European Community meet with us on joint stands. Our U.S. colleagues have the weight in the Middle East. This is beyond doubt. Our Arab and Israeli colleagues--when I say Arab I think of the states of the steadfastness and confrontation front and the other states--we must lead them to a settlement. They understand that the French are trustworthy but sometimes intractable.

In the political field, we will see how we can apply what I told you a moment ago. This is based on every people's right to determine their destiny.

Now, for self-determination in accordance with diplomatic terms, we stopped at the word homeland. You know how words develop. The diplomacy of Western states has not yet gone beyond the word homeland. When we were free to write like the common people and not as diplomats, we went far with our expressions. Some of you might have read the two latest books by President Mitterrand, excuse me, Francois Mitterrand. But since he has now become a president, he has to talk like a diplomat. But when he was still Francois Mitterrand, he expressed the right of self-determination in a simpler way, as you do at home in the evening when you talk with your wife about that--when you do not have a better subject to talk about. Hence, to understand what the word homeland means, you must go back to what was written. Look into the line which we follow for our inspiration. You will understand that the word homeland means a lot.

[Question] Your Excellency Mr Minister, you have recently met with senior U.S. officials. Have you felt that the U.S. policy in the Middle East might develop and get closer to the European statements, particularly the French ones?

[Answer] Your question is very difficult. The Americans had preferred to be less engaged or committed to the Middle East. They find that their Middle East responsibility transcends their ability for immediate action. They are now the godfathers of the Camp David agreements after having been their makers. These agreements constituted progress, but this progress was not enough because the agreements did not lead to a comprehensive solution. And since they are, to a certain extent, the makers of the Camp David agreements, many people believe that they had taken sides, which embarrassed them. They would like to have more freedom of movement because they know as well as you, I and the man in the street that the comprehensive settlement will never be reached unless all concerned states enter the process.

The presence of a European state that can talk to and have good relations with all the parties concerned is a useful thing. They will not ask us to be their ambassadors, and if they ask us to be, we will not respond because we will say only what we believe in. We do not currently believe in all that the Americans said in the past. However, the French role might be appropriate and useful because it would soften the positions and create new horizons. That is the role I can envisage for France, the faithful member in the Community's efforts through contacting all parties concerned.

Therefore, Begin's latest act strongly disturbs and worries me because if it leads to a deterioration in the ability for a dialog, it will be a serious factor on the future peace.

Therefore, we are a factor that is able to establish relations with all the parties concerned. We are an ally that is trusted by the United States, which knows that we say what we think and that when we do not agree, we say it frankly and without worry. We are a dynamic factor in this issue and we are not alone in this. Among the Arab states, some, whom I will not mention now because I do not want to interfere in their internal affairs, take a stand similar to ours.

[Question] Our feelings, Your Excellency, are that the French president's visit to Israel is no longer a priority item. The president announced that he would visit Israel when the opportunity arose. Do you think that there is an opportunity in the foreseeable future?

[Answer] As I grow older, I keep noticing that the journalists are emotional because they always depend on their feelings, showing this by saying: Our feelings are. You must have felt last week that Mitterrand asked for a plane to take him to Tel Aviv. Now you have a different feeling. In fact, issues are not as simple as that. The president, no matter how well he knows this person or that and regardless of his personal relationships, does not have the power to board a plane whenever he feels like going to a certain place. His answer to Mr Begin was very clear: He will go to Israel with pleasure when the opportunity arises.

Allow me to tell you--and I do not know whether this (?has been published)--that he gave the same answer, word for word, to King Khalid when he received an invitation from him to visit Saudi Arabia. It is probable that in areas of less importance and urgency, the president would say that same thing to other states which he might be less desirous of visiting. Therefore, the possibility of Mitterrand going to the area, to this country or that in a single journey or in a number of journeys, is a valid possibility but is connected with occasions.

[Question] If this visit is accomplished someday, I think that its aims would be to convince the concerned parties that mutual recognition is the key to just and permanent peace in the area. This expression is borrowed from the Socialist project. Can we ascertain that this visit might take place within one tour and that the president would visit all the states and capitals to convince them of this mutual recognition?

[Answer] It seems that we are practicing imaginary politics. There might arise 10 different occasions to justify President Mitterand's visit. There might be a serious event which might call for a personal presence, a happy occasion which might require a celebration, I do not know. It is clear that no matter what his wishes, the president will not travel to this or that place unless his journey is useful for the progress of peace. He will not travel if his journey might harm the chances for peace or France's position vis-a-vis our colleagues. Therefore, it is difficult to know whether there will be one, two or three journeys because there are not only two countries but many countries.

[Question] You recently met with your Lebanese counterpart Fu'ad Butrus and undoubtedly affirmed to him France's determination to respect Lebanon's safety and to force others to respect this safety. I stress the word others. In my opinion, this respect is a moral obligation. How can France act toward those who do not respect Lebanon's safety in order to force them to do that?

[Answer] We would like to have a simple answer to your question. We have none. Naturally, we alone cannot find an answer because it cannot be obtained except through the joint determination of a number of states and perhaps international organization. You must know that we are waiting for any opportunity to find a state or two states or any organization that is determined to respect Lebanon's territorial integrity, independence and sovereignty without creating internecine fighting. The answer also depends on the ability of the Lebanese president and Government to make themselves heard in Lebanon.

We will be pleased to contribute toward strengthening the Lebanese Army. We and the European Community have offered food and economic assistance to Lebanon more than once. Some of the Lebanese Army's weapons are French and we are always ready to send spare parts to Lebanon and replenish the Lebanese arsenal. All this will lead to respect for and forcing others to respect Lebanese independence.

[Question] President al-Qadhdhafi, in an interview with the newspaper LIBERATION, has expressed his happiness over the election of President Mitterrand, a socialist like him, as he put it. However, he pointed out that in case France sides with Israel, all cooperation between France and Libya would cease. In any case, what will French policy be toward Libya and Chad? Do you fear that the United States will replace France in some African states?

[Answer] I am not sure that Al-Qadhdhafi's socialism is like ours, and I do not think that our party, with all its different sections and its many colors, has any tint which might be similar to Al-Qadhdhafi. However, we are pleased because a president of an important state expresses such a desire. It is an encouraging gesture. What pleases us more is that Al-Qadhdhafi is respected by his people and by other people and that he is a sincere believer and that all this might be a basis for possible future talks. However, at this stage, we are not in a position to hold close and essential talks with Libya. We are in the stage of exchanging courtesies or a little more than that in view of Al-Qadhdhafi's desire for openmindedness. As for the rest, let us wait a little to define our positions on the issues you raised and also others.

On our position concerning these issues, I would like to say frankly that France will not take a stand on any Third World problems before thinking about it. The outgoing government did not take such a position. We will not make any decision before consulting with all the other parties, such as the legitimate government if present, the neighboring states that have a relation to the issue, or even the distant states that might have an interest. Therefore, the past 15 days days will not allow me to tell you about our thinking on Chad, the Central African Republic and others. Let us await the results of consultations and what is said by other states and other peoples. It is not up to Paris to say what is aspired for in Ndjamena, Bangui and Khartoum, for instance.

[Question] However, some colleagues have written that France will return its diplomatic mission to Ndjamena even before the departure of the Libyan troops currently stationed in Chad. What is the truth of the matter?

[Answer] I have not yet heard anything related to this problem. I have not been informed by anyone on a change of stands. Therefore, the problem is not raised.

[Question] One last question, Your Excellency Mr Minister, I remembered a few moments ago that France has sent envoys to several Arab capitals. What is the impression with which they came back? Are you ready to soon go to the region following your visits to the major Western capitals?

[Answer] Yes, by supplying the airlines with numerous passengers, we have made it clear that we have sent many envoys. As a new administration, we wanted to consult and ask in order to avoid misunderstandings and to issue reminders of the great principles in which we believe. This is a matter in which I rejoice. I believe that this is the ideal way to act. At this juncture, I would like to reiterate that we are no longer in the 19th century, when world affairs were decided in a certain golden lounge in a certain capital. This era is over for good.

The president's senior and junior envoys were warmly welcomed everywhere. I believe that all these officials are happy because we are asking questions and issuing reminders of the great principles without proposing anything specific. We ask before forming an opinion. We believe that these envoys contributed to dissipating any misunderstanding that might have existed anywhere, particularly in those states where it was in the interest of others to cause a misunderstanding.

We do not forget that when rumors were circulated in the Gulf states about the nationalization of banks, that is the government will pocket all bank deposits, this might have resulted in the transfer of billions of dollars to other European or American banks. I understand this when others do it. This is their job. Don't you remember that commercial about a bank manager saying your money concerns us? This is life.

Therefore, there were some misunderstandings in some places and these envoys contributed to dissipating them. I personally visited a not small world state, the United States of America. I believe my visit dissipated some of the misunderstanding. I stressed what we adhere to and explained what we believe. I also explained why we adhere to this or that. The Americans can no longer rely on words. They know that the words we use express a genuine need for a deep commitment. This was the main purpose of the envoys we sent to some countries.

[Question] Will you personally go to the region soon?

[Answer] Unfortunately, when somebody is appointed to a post like mine, he immediately realizes that several traps are closing on him. One is told that there is the committee for cooperation with this or that, that there is the large committee, that there is the small committee and that there is the semi-big committee. You have to go to such and such a place and meet this or that. He has not come for 14 months, while you must see him every 12 months. We, the foreign ministers, are captives and prisoners.

I am lucky, if I may say so, in that in the first 3 weeks, I was totally ignorant. I don't know anything. I signed no papers and I did what I wanted. All this is over. My freedom of movement has ended. Next week, I have to attend the European development meeting and the European Council meeting. Afterward, I have to go here, there and everywhere. This means that my free time will be rare. However, as soon as I have the time, I would very much like to go to the Middle East. I love this part of the world. What is happening there is extremely exciting from various aspects. I deeply believe in direct contacts.

MITTERRAND ON U.S. INTEREST RATES, ISRAEL, POLAND

LD161057 Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Jun 81 p 7

[Apparent text of President Francois Mitterrand speech at Montelimar on 9 June: "I Hope That the Country Will Give Me the Means To Implement My Policy"]

[Excerpt] In the foreign sphere, our main economic difficulty is connected with the world monetary crisis. I would be inclined to emphasize this factor among others. The U.S. interest rate is 21 percent. It has doubled in the last few years, forcing all other countries either to follow suit or to lose the major part of their foreign exchange reserves. From 15 February through 21 May, France lost $10 billion--$5 billion before 10 May and $5 billion since--without any response on anyone's part.

On 21 May, that is as soon as I took office, I issued instructions with a view to countering speculation against the franc. Since 23 May, that is since the measures taken by Premier Pierre Mauroy came into effect, France has lost no foreign exchange at all nor has it borrowed a single dollar to maintain the franc at its proper level in the European Monetary System.

Nonetheless, the U.S. policy--an excessively high interest rate and an excessively strong upward trend of the dollar--have forced all countries in general and West European countries in particular to adopt measures which have hit everybody, especially our enterprises and home buyers. How many people are there who need only the stimulus which a government freed of its financial burden could give them in order to be able to live? If this policy is pursued, it could well make unemployment worse--in the United States too--and nullify any efforts to resume progress and other kinds of development throughout the world.

The United States should realize that no real political solidarity is possible unless it is based on fair economic cooperation. Indeed, how can it ask its allies for political and military cooperation if its monetary policy imposes a disproportionate burden on them all? It is of essential importance for the Western economy as a whole that this situation change.

But to be able to change the course of events, the European nations, which have all suffered as a result of this situation, should first realize what unites them. This is why, to remove this threat, I intend to enter into consultations with all our European partners as soon as possible with a view to adopting a concrete and firm attitude.

These problems could be resolved at the Ottawa summit on 21 July, at which France will submit a number of proposals. It will put them forward in the belief that it will thereby help to create a union of forces which will contribute toward the preservation of peace and individual development.

The current situation reminds us of the importance of France speaking clearly to the world as a whole. We will condemn any violation of law. Irrespective of our feelings for Israel, which are generally friendly, this also applies to the intervention in Iraq which the Israeli Government decided upon and which led to the death of one of our fellow countrymen.

The development of the situation in Poland is also causing concern. I would like to state that France's attitude toward this question is: The Poles should resolve their own problems by themselves. I solemnly reiterate that the principle of nonintervention in other countries' affairs is a fundamental principle. Any violation of this rule will have grave consequences which any responsible government must taken into account before making any decision.

In times such as these, when so much uproar and disturbance is being created, France must speak with one voice. I intend to preserve pluralism and democracy but I also intend to make that voice heard on behalf of the French people, who are France. For the sake of its own peace and that of the world, France must be able to make heard everywhere a message of freedom, hope, strength and calm. Since it will soon have an opportunity to do this, I hope that the country will give me the means to pursue this course.

EGYPT'S MUBARAK DESCRIBES VISIT AS 'PRODUCTIVE'

NC161302 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1150 GMT 16 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 16 Jun (MENA)--Egyptian, Vice President Husni Mubarak left Paris at 1245 today for Cairo, following a 6-day visit to France. Mubarak described his visit to France and his talks with senior officials as good and very productive.

Mubarak said his meeting with French Premier Pierre Mauroy yesterday dealt in particular with the bilateral relations between the two countries and the Middle East issue.

Asked whether he was promised that the contracts signed between Egypt and France will be carried out, the vice president said that there is no problem regarding all past agreements and that the French premier affirmed to him that they will be honored and completely fulfilled. France will even add to them and will work to strengthen the relations in all economic, military and other spheres, including the nuclear sphere.

The vice president stated that he has extended an invitation to the French premier to visit Cairo, and Mauroy promised to visit at an appropriate time.

TREASURY MINISTER QUESTIONED ON CONDITION OF LIRA

LD161537 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 11 Jun 81 pp 1, 3

[Eugenio Scalfari interview with Treasury Minister Nino Andreatta: "Where Is the Lira Going, Mr Andreatta?"]

[Excerpts] Rome--The government resigned 3 weeks ago and the parties are busy with abstract strategies. Meanwhile however, the lira is vacillating; the dollar is causing an upheaval in all the Western monetary markets and the state's deficit is continuing to increase. We had a 2-hour interview with Nino Andreatta on these topics, and here is an account of it.

[Question] Is it true, Mr Treasury Minister, that our currency reserves have reached a very low level?

[Answer] At this moment the Bank of Italy has $5.4 billion in convertible currencies, $8.5 billion in European currency units and its gold reserves.

[Question] How much is that altogether?

[Answer] At current gold prices I would estimate our total reserves to be $50 billion. I realize that having little more than $5 billion in convertible reserves gives us little reason to be happy, but it is not only the unexciting level of reserves that is causing us concern.

[Question] What is your greatest worry at present, Mr Treasury Minister? The behavior of the dollar? The inflation that is eroding the lira's purchasing power? The deficit of the state and of the public corporations? The government crisis?

[Answer] What a lot of problems all at once! Let us take them in order. They are all serious problems, in fact, but of different dimensions. Let us start with the dollar.

[Question] I would like to ask you how you explain such a rapid and alarming rise in the U.S. currency's exchange rate against not only the lira but also traditionally strong currencies, such as the Deutschmark and the yen. What is happening? Is it a case of putting the dollar above everything else?

[Answer] There are several causes. Among the most prominent I would place the fact that U.S. oil imports have halved. Let us bear in mind that the oil crisis began when the United States suddenly became a net importer of oil. It was then that the producing countries decided to free themselves from a patronage that had lasted for years and to drastically revise the price per barrel. Well, after many hesitations and also under pressure from all the other industrialized countries, the United States unfroze prices of U.S.-produced oil, thus strongly encouraging extraction and stimulating the guest for new energy sources; and at the same time demand decreased. In the United States, 50 percent of oil is consumed by automobilies....

[Question] What is the proportion in Italy?

[Answer] It is 15 percent. So in the United States demand is fairly elastic. If oil prices rise, demand decreases. In other words, for a number of reasons U.S. dependence on Middle East oil has halved. This has caused an immediate strengthening of the dollar.

[Question] This is one of the causes, but certainly not the only one.

[Answer] Indeed not. The second reason stems from the fact that the Arab countries which possess petrodollars have turned to the U.S. currency on a large scale. In recent years the Arabs have invested their surplus in various currencies, especially Deutschmarks, Swiss francs and oil, as well as dollars, of course. In the past 6 months all the new flow of currency created by the Arabs has gone to New York.

Mitterrand? He Has Weakened the Franc

[Question] How do you explain such a decision?

[Answer] It is due to the greater confidence in the United States and lesser confidence in Europe. The Polish crisis has played a decisive role from this viewpoint.

[Question] Do you believe that Arab investors are sending their fortunes to the United States partly because of the Polish crisis?

[Answer] Yes, I do. Also because of the political instability of several West European countries.

[Question] What about Mitterrand's victory?

[Answer] Listen, I am certainly no conservative and I am not unhappy about Mitterrand's victory. But if I am to argue from a strictly economic and monetary viewpoint, there is no doubt that it has weakened the franc, at least for the time being. And the weakening of one of the EC's major currencies pulls the others down too. However, the real reason for the strengthening of the dollar is this; the fact that the new administration is steadfastly determined to combat inflation.

[Question] All governments have been setting themselves this same objective for the past 10 years, but the results are modest, indeed negligible.

[Answer] Well said. It is not a matter of announcing plans and coining slogans, but a matter of credibility. Take the example of Italy. In our country when a government presents its economic plans it invariably asserts that it will combat inflation, but equally invariably it adds: "without holding down investments and while cutting unemployment" or some such. What do people make of that?

[Question] Not very much, I think.

[Answer] You are mistaken, people infer that everything will continue exactly as before. Therefore inflationary expectations are strengthened.

[Question] The strengthening of the dollar seems to be a misfortune for the rest of the world. But until recently was the rest of the world not asking the United States to set its own economy straight, to combat inflation and waste less oil? I see a contradiction in Europe's positions now and previously.

[Answer] Well, it is a matter of how and when. Europe and the Western world need a solid and stable U.S. economy. Therefore Washington's efforts in this direction are salutary and welcome. But if the therapy being adopted across the Atlantic is administered in excessively large doses, not many will survive the treatment. That is the point.

[Question] What does a 10 percent increase in the dollar exchange rate against the lira mean for us?

[Answer] It means a 1.5 percent increase in inflation.

[Question] Do you regard that as insignificant?

[Answer] I regard it as most serious. Indeed, at the beginning of 1981 we forecast a domestic inflation rate of 15 percent averaged over the year. Readjusting our calculations now, bearing in mind the rise in the dollar that has occurred in the interim, the inflation rate is over 20 percent.

Few Pressure Instruments on United States

[Question] What can we do, Mr Treasury Minister? Is it not time for all the European governments to take joint demarches vis-a-vis Washington to warn our major ally that if the situation continues like this Europe is in danger of becoming a disaster area?

[Answer] I do not believe that we have many effective instruments for exerting pressure, apart from the following: It is in our interests that the United States carry forward the anti-inflation struggle, not so much, however, with monetary methods, as with an appropriate fiscal and budgetary policy. The U.S. federal budget shows a deficit in the order of $50-$60 billion. Reagan has promised to balance the federal accounts. Of course such an objective cannot be achieved by magic. But it is in our interests that it be achieved as soon as possible. Thus, U.S. monetary policy will gradually become softer, bank rates will fall. This is the only strategy that Europe and the Third World countries must pursue with respect to the United States.

[Answer] ...which for the time being do not seem in the least well disposed...

[Question] ...do you see any other ways of containing the pressure of the dollar on the European economy?

[Answer] The EC countries should have implemented the second phase of the European monetary system, by creating the European monetary fund and pooling their reserves. The EC reserves pool totals $200 billion--a sum that would have made it possible for Europe to adopt a united and credible policy with respect to the dollar. Unfortunately, nothing has been done, and this is serious.

[Question] Let us discuss our domestic troubles, Mr Treasury Minister. For many years you advocated expansive policies. People still remember some memorable skirmishes of yours with the Bank of Italy under Carli and even Baffi, whom you accused of excessive toughness. It seems to me, however, that as treasury minister your viewpoint has changed. It seems to me, for instance, that between you and Carli....

[Answer] Yes, indeed, we now speak a fairly common language. What it boils down to is this: I, too, like my counterparts in Washington, have reached the conclusion that it is necessary to concentrate all attention, all messages and all measures on one single objective, namely combating inflation. If we adopt contradictory measures and issue ambiguous--or balanced, as they say now--messages, inflation will not recede at all and our battle will be lost.

[Question] You are asking the workers to reconsider the escalator machinery, but you are well aware that this is not the source of inflation. Why this emphasis on the escalator?

[Answer] It is not the source of inflation, but the escalator does consolidate inflation. The quarterly escalator adjustments automatically multiply every inflationary impact fourfold. If the trade unions were with me in this battle we would stand a good chance of winning it. Of course, the escalator alone is not enough.

[Question] It is necessary to cut the public spending budget and deficit.

[Answer] Precisely.

[Question] But this is where the patronage which pumps money from the state funds comes in. Is that not so, Mr Minister?

[Answer] It is so; do you believe I am not aware of it or afraid to say it?

[Question] I merely believe that you cannot defeat the patronage system within the present political framework.

[Answer] This is why I desperately need an alliance with the trade unions. But the only price that I can pay to attain it is to involve them in the anti-inflation struggle. Any other price would be off the point and would lessen the chances of achieving the main objective.

[Question] Many things have been said and written about the public deficit. Could you make a clear statement about it, at last?

[Answer] Very well. When the finance bill was submitted to Parliament I wanted a preliminary vote on spending and deficit ceilings. My proposal was rejected, however. Well, the treasury minister is now authorized by Parliament to spend 115 trillion lire over revenue in actual expenditure over the year and deficits. Obviously if this were the real size of our deficit we would have to declare ourselves bankrupt.

NIGERIAN WATER MINISTER HOLDS TALKS IN ROME

AU151952 Rome ANSA in English 1935 GMT 15 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 15 Jun (ANSA)--Relations between Italy and Nigeria in the areas of industry and agriculture were at the center of 4 days of talks conducted in Rome by the Nigerian minister for water resources, Ndagi Mahmudu.

The visiting minister consulted with the Rome government under secretary at agriculture, Fabio Fabbri, the chair person and secretary general of the Italo-African Institute, Tullia Carettoni and Luigi Gasbarri, and with representatives from the Italian and European commissions on agriculture.

The Nigerian government official also met with the chairman of the European Industrial Confederation, Guido Carli. In this talk, and with those he held with the managers of Italian concerns operating in the African state, Ndagi Mahmudu examined the state of cooperative relations in the industrial sector.

The Nigerian minister is also in charge of operations of the Italian-Nigerian joint enterprise, Impresit Bakolori, at work on two irrigation projects valued at 800 million dollars. The projects will provide the capability to irrigate hundreds of thousands of hectares in the north-west of Nigeria. Five hundred Italian technicians and eight thousand Nigerian laborers are currently at work on the irrigation jobs.

LUCAS PIRES VIEWS 'CLIQUES' IN DEMOCRATIC ALLIANCE

LD160929 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Jun 81 pp 15-16

[Fernando Diogo interview with Lucas Pires, deputy chairman of the Social Democratic Center Party]

[Excerpts] DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Undoubtedly the theme of the moment in the political sphere is Mota Amaral's statements criticizing the Social Democratic Center party [CDS] for trying to restrict Azorean autonomy which would be fully incorporated in the process of the elaboration of the Democratic Alliance's draft constitutional revision. How do you read the position of the premier of the Azores regional government?

Lucas Pires: Relations between the Social Democratic Party [PSD] and the CDS in the Azores are a government-opposition relationship which perhaps partly explains these statements. Without dwelling on a topic which I consider to have been adequately commented on, I would just like to say that there has never been any intention here to restrict Azorean autonomy.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: But the matter is not finished. The PSD Azorean regional political commission reaffirmed on Monday its full support for Mota Amaral and fully endorsed his accusations which means that the matter is back on the agenda.

Lucas Pires: I think the "ministry of words" is only of relative importance at the moment and I believe that the events in question result more from social, political and economic causes than from the repetition of certain phrases. As for the rest, it is just talk because there is an agreement on the draft constitutional revision signed by all the Alliance parties and it is that which is conclusive and important in political terms. Anything else is just talk--it has no effect on the agreement relating to constitutional revision.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Are you suggesting that Mota Amaral wants to go beyond what is prescribed in the agreement?

Lucas Pires: I am not suggesting that Mota Amaral wants to go beyond the agreement. I am saying that any comment on what took place during the discussion of the draft constitutional revision becomes unimportant because in no way does it alter the draft. There can be no going back on that.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: According to some political commentators, the CDS has also been dominating the government and even forcing ministers who opposed it to resign, as in the case of Ferreira do Amaral and also Eusebio Marques de Carvalho, as we now know.

Lucas Pires: There are five CDS ministers and obviously the position of the Finance Ministry is extremely important, but I do not believe there has been either hegemony or attempts at hegemony on the part of the centrists or that the other ministers would have allowed themselves to be dominated. It is the prime minister who imposes his character on the government and he is from the PSD. In principle, the government is a unit. When you think of this government you think of the Balsemao Government not the CDS government. For that reason I do not agree with your observation.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: As for the government being a unit, the executive has been in power for not much more than 5 months yet it has already undergone a reshuffle during which the administrative reform minister was removed, having previously asked to be relieved as a result of a dispute with the finance minister. Do you still regard this government as a unit and that the CDS' dominant position is not evident?

Lucas Pires: I think that one has a bad habit, perhaps deliberate, of attributing many of the problems to CDS positions when many of these problems were not even considered by any CDS executive committee and have nothing to do with any official CDS policy. Obviously there are many problems and many opinions which could be ascribed to CDS members but which are official and deliberate party positions. The CDS ministers, in both this and the previous government, behaved more like Democratic Alliance executive members than party members. And this was intentional. They do not get together to champion a "CDS view" in the government. They champion personal views since they do not have any imperative party mandate to champion formal CDS opinion in the government.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: So the disagreements which have come to light were the direct result of different program philosophies championed by each bloc of ministers?

Lucas Pires: Note that the divergences and disagreements that have occurred within the government have so far been between individual ministers rather than between parties. I think you would be deceiving yourself if you were to see party disputes in the issues that have arisen within the government. I believe that, within the Council of Ministers, ministers belonging to the same party do not necessarily agree. The correlation of forces is not party against party. You could put individuals against individuals, but it is not a correlation of forces between parties.

In any case, if there is something worrisome taking place today within the Democratic Alliance it is that cliques have appeared which have nothing to do with parties and exist over and above them; and also worrisome are individual statements made by certain people in the Democratic Alliance. I accept that one could say there are problems. I accept that one could talk of a certain problem regarding discipline in the various Democratic Alliance parties....

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: ...Or indiscipline....

Lucas Pires: Or indiscipline, precisely; but not in the sense of party blocs waging a kind of civil war within the government of the Democratic Alliance.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Could this be a manifestation within the government of a possible realignment of forces in the Democratic Alliance? A kind of "central bloc" within the actual alliance?

Lucas Pires: This observation seems more accurate than that on CDS hegemony although I don't think the trend is sufficiently well organized to be regarded as a reality.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: But could it become institutionalized?

Lucas Pires: Yes. But at the moment it is more a question of affinity, osmosis and strategic identity than of agreement or organic unity.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: If this process becomes established, the Democratic Alliance will be in jeopardy, don't you think?

Lucas Pires: I like to think that all existing problems can be resolved within the Democratic Alliance. In my view this is not the issue. One might ask whether the Democratic Alliance is still in control of the political process, apart from government activity. One might also ask whether the Democratic Alliance might not benefit from disciplining its activity. A possible proposal in this sphere would be the formalization of political leadership of the Democratic Alliance through the three leaders, for example. One might also wonder whether the Democratic Alliance has not lost interest in renewing the political agreement which brought it into being precisely in order to resolve a series of doubts which still exist at a time when certain objectives, like the election of the president of the republic, no longer exist, and its principal leader and organizer, Sa Carneiro, is dead. I believe it would be useful to establish certain priorities and to formally clarify certain points in order to display any doubts and confusion that may exist.

In my view, the Democratic Alliance could become a feasible central bloc, but this would require a different strategic posture which would come about through an implicit or explicit renewal of the Alliance's global conception, a renewal encapsulated in the following points: emphasis on the social aspect; the entry of independents into the central area of Portuguese society; the possibility of a dialogue, albeit critical, with the president of the republic; basic consensus on constitutional revision with the Socialist Party and the retention of semipresidentialism; renewal of the ideological, cultural and educational stance.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Let me share your doubt. Is the Democratic Alliance still in charge of the political process?

Lucas Pires: In this case the question is intended more to provoke than to express a doubt. It is important that when one talks about the Democratic Alliance one should talk not only about its problems, and that the idea of a global plan or framework should be presented more clearly once more. It is for the Demcoratic Alliance to choose the themes, to formulate the aims, to sort out the priorities and to inspire the confidence of its members and the country, with the backing of the social reform movement and the majority national will. I deem it necessary to reemphasize these aspects to get away from the inevitable manifestations of personal ambition.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Your emphasis on the Democratic Alliance plan appears to push into the background a fundamental aim of any party, that is, growth. Considering the ideological affinities between the CDS and the PSD, do you not regard the Democratic Alliance as a limiting factor in terms of the centrists' electoral growth?

Lucas Pires: What does the CDS desire more--to be a major opposition party, because it cannot gain power by itself, or to have, as now, five ministers and three times that number of secretaries of state in positions which enable it to influence the course of Portuguest society in accordance with the CDS plan? The problem of Portuguese society is more a problem of choosing between the social model adopted by the Democratic Alliance and the idea of socialist planning presented by the opposition. Hence the fundamental question for those who do not think slavishly in party terms is that of a choice between the two great images of society.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: So the CDS chooses to sacrifice its growth to the exercise of power?

Lucas Pires: But the CDS can grow within the Democratic Alliance. We do not rule out the idea of an electoral law permitting the existence of coalitions, with each party's votes being counted. This would enable the PSD and the CDS to know exactly what their backing is. So it is not a renunciation of the growth process. After all, the Democratic Alliance means in itself putting the country above the parties and above scehming for power.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Are the CDS leaders afraid that the softening of the Democratic Alliance concept might prompt a PSD shift toward a central bloc with the Socialist Party, thus removing them from the sphere of power?

Lucas Pires: Actually, the CDS thinks a great deal in Democratic Alliance terms since we regard it as a means of changing the present conditions. If they change a great deal, other realities may occur. Obviously, a central bloc could come into existence if an organizer appeared with a clearly conceived plan, if new economic and social conditions appeared to bring about this reality and if there existed a definite enough body of ideas corresponding to it. But if the bloc were formed it would probably not be based simply on party alliances. The conditions would have to be completely new, capable, perhaps, of bringing about a redefinition of electoral geography and various personal realignments. However, I believe that the idea of a central bloc is only valid in the absence of the Democratic Alliance and, therefore, following new legislative elections. And they are not in the offing. As the Lisbon meeting showed, despite certain serious exaggerations, the fire has not gone out; the problem lies with the bellows.

RAMON TAMAMES EXPLAINS COMMUNIST PROBLEMS

LD160909 Madrid YA in Spanish 7 Jun 81 pp 36-38

[Luis Blanco Vila interview with former PCE Executive Committee member Ramon Tamames; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] Let us go back to 1956. That is when you joined the Communist Party....

[Answer] I never believed that Marxism was all that mattered. But, on the basis of my reading on the subject, it seemed a major body of social and economic ideas, and I still regard it as such, together with other currents of thought.

[Question] Did you feel at home in it? It is a generally suspected that you did not....

[Answer] I did feel at home in it, in my relations with the PCE--albeit always with a critical attitude, because I believed that things could be better organized. Much time was wasted in endless meetings. There was a great deal of centralism; everything had to be said at the top and thus many opportunities were missed.

[Question] It was the discipline that you did not like....

[Answer] No, I never felt affected by the disciplinary system because I wasn't subject to strict discipline. My impression is that it only worked at half capacity, at a time when people were risking a great deal in the party. I have always said this...everywhere. From 1965 through 1967, we worked on a book called "A Future for Spain," which I believe must be regarded as among the sources of Eurocommunism. Santiago Carrillo wrote the preface. But the book was poorly distributed, perhaps because of inefficiency. It seemed to me that the party was not very interested in distributing it.

[Answer] Yes, they left. The first was Carlos Zayas, who stayed only a few months; next to leave was Sanchcez Drago, then Mujica, then Javier Pradera, more recently my comrades from the democratic junta Pablo Canto and Eugenio Triana, and many more.

[Question] So you felt in a way obliged to resist?

[Answer] I knew that we held much responsibility, that such a decision could not be taken lightly in a more or less passing moment of frustration. I decided to leave when I became fully convinced that there was nothing to be done, that the party's outlook differed from what I believed a popular-based party of transformation should be. In my opinion, these characteristics are not reflected in the Communist Party, which has an almost monolithic power structure, despite certain appearances, and which presents a difficult situation for the minorities, which I believe are an asset to any party. If one tries to rule out minorities except at very specific times, such as precongress periods, it does not work. In any case, a party of transformation must provide work for, and allow initiatives to, all its groups and organizations, within a federal structure... This has not been attempted either, though it too is necessary in a party regenerating its decisionmaking structure, its leadership nucleus--which is something else that is not accepted. I proposed that the secretary general should be no older than 65 on his election and that he should not be eligible for reelection more than twice. This wasn't accepted either. I believe that a party like that has no future. And since it has no future and I had not [as published] been a member for long and had many hopes, it seemed to me even morally inadvisable to continue participating in an operation of continuous deterioration of something that I had regarded as capable of creating hope.

Center of the Scene

[Question] Is it mostly intellectuals who rebel?

[Answer] No, it is those best informed. We unversity teachers must have left in hundreds, thousands. Workers don't even send a letter to the party. They stop attending their group meetings, stop paying their dues and that is that.

[Question] You are still a deputy and area member of the mixed group. I must admit that I don't regard you as suited to it. You are preparing something called the foundation. Tell me about it.

[Answer] I cannot do so in deatil because we are putting the finishing touches to what we are calling the Foundation for Progress and Democracy. We are a group of people trying to form this body. It is not a political party. Its only ideology will be the guidelines of the 1978 Constitution and the 1948 UN Declaration of Human Rights. This is all that we ask all members to observe. We will be forming a public platform for raising and discussing issues, with study centers in various parts of Spain. It will also enter into local matters and matters concerning the autonomous communities. Plans are processing well and I believe that we will publicly announce the group in June. But for the time being, I am not in a position to say any more because we are still at the planning stage.

LA VANGUARDIA Interview

LD161031 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 11 Jun 81 p 11

[Ramon Gonzalez Cabezas interview with former PCE Executive Committee member Ramon Tamames; date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] You left the PCE because it was impossible to achieve a reform and democratization of the party structures, including the renewal of its top leaders. In view of the essential characteristics of communist parties, to what extent was this a personal excuse for entering a political environment that is better suited to you and, above all, has better future prospects?

[Answer] I believe that the PCE could have occupied a much larger space, essentially as defender of the workers' interests. But I believe it is a serious mistake to devote insufficient attention to social movements, the ecology movement, culture, art--and this is one of the reasons why I left. The bureaucracy is so inefficient that it is incapable of using the vast potentials that exist, and of course, I don't know whether the PCE will manage to regain its capacity in this context because it has lost many people connected with these very fields. But it is not a matter of seeking a new political space of my own, though for those of us involved in daily political activity it is a vocation. To assert otherwise would be absurd and nobody would believe it. The fact is that the PCE is incapable of developing one of the aspects which I was most keen to develop in the future.

Organizational Matter

[Question] The PCE is subject to pressures from its leftwing (pro-Soviets and Leninists), which accuses the party of deviationism and capitulation, and from the "critical Eurocommunists," who are dissatisfied with the survival of old habits and structures. It is simply a structural problem or is there a profound crisis of identity within Spanish communism?

[Answer] All parties at some time experience the problem of trying to define their identity within the context of the political scenario. Parties that belong to a particular international, as the PCE did until 1943, have clear guidelines.

The problem for the Western communist parties, which are seeking a path called Eurocommunism, is that they lack an approach that would enable them to feel solidarity with other political groups in other countries. Therefore, many veteran Communist Party members long for the centralized leadership of the Comintern, and this is what is called pro-Sovietism. Others, however, believe that it is necessary to seek a national path which, as it takes shape, could move away from the historical origins of the Communist Party. It is a difficult situation but I do not believe that this is the major problem. As far as I am concerned, it presently is basically a problem affecting organization, which is in fact what eventually determines a party's political line. If the organization is structured round a leadership nucleus which holds power for many years, this nucleus eventually changes its ideology and tactical stances every so many years. I don't want to say any more because I don't want to sow discord or to interefere in the PCE's internal debates.

Carrillo's "Sacrifice"

[Question] Since the charges and criticisms from both sides ultimately fall directly on the present PCE secretary general, must the historical figure of Santiago Carrillo inevitably be sacrificed to find a way of surmounting the PCE's present internal situation?

[Answer] I'm not talking about sacrifices or inevitability. All I am saying is that one of the amendments to the PCE rules which I proposed is that the secretary general should not be over 65 years old when elected and that he should not be reelected more than once. My position is very clear. If there is no regeneration in a party that wants to be of the masses, it will be very difficult for it to embrace the needs of the times, the technological problems, the changes in the universities, in science, research and culture. There must be an influx of new blood and new brains--and I believe that says it all.

[Question] Do you believe that the Eurocommunist plan is about to founder definitively in Spain?

[Answer] Well, I believe that one must allow time to take its course and one must view things calmly, without trying to foretell the future. Consistently with this, I believe that the Eurocommunist plan will return to the shared roots of socialism, of progressive ideas, social change and a pluralist society, an advanced democracy. This is the logical conclusion. I know that many communists are in favor of action increasingly in liaison with the socialist party and with all the progressive forces, but the latter have their doubts and this hinders a Eurocommunist plan, unless there is continuous progress in the trend toward the shared roots of socialism and social change. I discussed all this fairly clearly in my book "Inevitable Socialism" published in 1978.

PRIME MINISTER HOSTS DINNER FOR SAUDI KING KHALID

[David Morales dispatch]

[Text] The second day of the official visit to our country by the Saudi king ended with a dinner hosted by Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo. The day centered upon the talks between the two delegations, talks which give rise to hope for more wide-ranging cooperation. For example, Spain is going to increase its exports of cement to Saudi Arabia, which will reach 5 and 1/2 million tons this year. In the forthcoming weeks, a delegation from the Spanish National Institute of Hydrocarbons will go to Riyadh to assess the possibilities for cooperation in the Saudi Petrochemical industry. Moreover, it seems certain that our imports of Saudi oil will be increased by the end of 1982. King Khalid's day has been intensive although he did have time to rest during the private lunch hosted by Don Juan Carlos at the Zarzuela Palace. The Saudi king this morning received from the mayor of Madrid the golden keys of the city and this afternoon he hosted a reception at the Hotel Ritz for the diplomatic corps accredited to Spain.

CARRINGTON, YUGOSLAVIA'S VRHOVEC END TALKS

LD162236 Belgrade TANJUG in English 2130 GMT 16 Jun 81

[Text] London, 16 Jun (TANJUG)--Yugoslavia and Great Britain today stressed the need for political solutions to problems in international relations worldwide including in Europe.

In the closing talks here today Yugoslav Foreign Secretary Josip Vrhovec and British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington underlined the above stand during the discussion of crisis hotbeds, despite certain differences in views on the problems.

Vrhovec has concluded a two-day official return visit to Great Britain.

Vrhovec and Carrington stated that trust in Europe must not further deteriorate and that everything which could lead to the straining of the situation in Europe must be avoided.

Vrhovec and Carrington assessed their exchange of views on international political and economic relations and on bilateral cooperation as very useful and successful and as a new stimulus to the further development of relations between the two countries.

Vrhovec particularly set forth the nonaligned countries' view on ways and means for overcoming the crisis in the South African south, particularly in relation to the illegal occupation of Namibia.

The talks particularly focused on East-West relations and the current developments in Europe including those round Poland. The arms race and prospect for opening a disarmament process in Europe were also discussed as were efforts invested for a successful outcome of the European Security and Cooperation Conference follow-up in Madrid. The situation in the Balkans was also discussed.

During the talks, Vrhovec and Carrington also discussed questions of the struggle against various forms of terrorism which is increasingly turning into a European and broader problem.

During the exchange of views on bilateral relations, certain questions outstanding, primarily in economic cooperation, were discussed. Vrhovec informed his host about Yugoslavia's efforts for overcoming the existing economic difficulties and about certain aspects of relations discussed in detail today during the meeting between Vrhovec and [name indistinct].

Yugoslav Foreign Secretary Vrhovec invited his host Lord Carrington to visit Yugoslavia. The invitation was accepted with pleasure.

DAILY TELEGRAPH WEIGHS SANCTIONS AGAINST ISRAEL

LD161125 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 16 Jun 81 p 4

[David Adamson report: "Sanctions Call Rejected by Britain"]

[Text] Arab ambassadors who called on Mrs Thatcher yesterday were left in no doubt that Britain would join the United States in opposing mandatory arms and other sanctions on Israel.

The British view is that to force the United States, with British support, to veto a sanctions resolution in the Security Council would be counter-productive.

An alternative approach, which would have British and probably American support, would be a resolution condemning Israel for the Baghdad reactor raid and calling on all countries to refrain from supplying arms to nations guilty of aggression.

British officials believe that if the United States voted for such a resolution it would be committed to pressure Israel after the June 30 elections to soften its attitude and become more flexible about negotiations.

The Arab ambassadors who talked to Mrs Thatcher and Lord Carrington yesterday represent the United Arab Emirates, Kuwait, Jordan, Iraq, Algeria and Lebanon. Their meeting was a follow-up to one last week with Sir Ian Gilmour, deputy foreign secretary.

Whether a sanctions resolution can be avoided was regarded in London last night as extremely uncertain, although the Security Council debate has been delayed, presumably to allow Arab diplomats to test the degree of support.

The Israeli raid and the hardening of attitudes on both sides has been a disaster for the European Community's Middle East initiative. There had been hopes that while Lord Carrington was in the chair of the European Council in the second half of this year it would be possible to make at least a few significant moves towards negotiations on the future of the West Bank and Gaza.

But there is now a recognition that those hopes have become dim to the point of disappearance. The view of one influential Arab foreign minister is that none of the pieces are in place at the moment to permit fruitful negotiations.

The best that can be done is to keep them moving forward in the hope that they can be assembled next year if the climate is more favourable.

Mr Shlomo Argov, Israel's ambassador in London, yesterday made it clear that Israel would negotiate, and criticised Mrs Thatcher's condemnation of the Baghdad raid as "unhappy and unjustified." "There was no justification for condemning Israel for an act of self-defence," he said. He blamed the failure of the Camp David talks to make progress on Europe's failure to rally around them with even half the verve and enthusiasm it had shown for the "so-called" European initiative.

RED CROSS SPONSORS NICOSIA IRAN-IRAQ POW EXCHANGE

[Text] Nicosia, 16 Jun (AFP)--Iran and Iraq today exchanged badly wounded prisoners on the runway at Larnaka Airport in Cyprus, sources said here. Seventeen Iraqis were exchanged for 25 Iranians in a deal arranged by the International Red Cross under the third Geneva convention on POW's considered medically unfit for further combat.

An Iraqi cargo plane landed at Larnaka at 10:05 a.m. local time (0705 GMT), followed 20 minutes later by an aircraft of the charter company Balair coming from Tehran. The prisoners switched aircraft under the eyes of Red Cross officials. After refuelling, the Iraqi aircraft took off first, two hours after it landed, while the Iranian plane left 35 minutes later.

It was the first exchange of prisoners since the Gulf war broke out last September. (In Geneva the Red Cross said it was carried out at the instigation of Iran. The Red Cross also said it had sent yesterday 7.5 tons of emergency supplies of tents, blankets and other aid to Iran for the relief victims of last week's earthquake.)

The 140 passengers of the airplane as well as the 15-man crew were taken to Konya hotels. Security measures were taken around the plane. A Turkish Radio and Television correspondent has learned that the pilot of the Romanian aircraft received a bomb threat while the plane was flying in Turkish airspace after it had left Bucharest. The pilot immediately reported the incident to the Turkish authorities, asking for permission to land at the nearest airfield.

VOTCP ATTACKS U.S. PRESSURES FOR RDF, NATO SUPPORT

TA161018 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 16 Jun 81

[Station commentary: "Where and Who Wants To Determine Turkey's Destiny?"]

[Excerpts] The Reagan administration wishes to see Turkey as a active stronghold of the West in the Middle East. Dear listeners, this statement was made by U.S. War Minister Caspar Weinberger. Washington administrators do not even feel the need anymore to hide their plans for our country. They openly declare their wish to determine Turkey's destiny in accordance with their expansionist and hegemonistic plans in the Middle East and to transform our country into a cheap gendarme of the Middle East. It is not possible to view and interpret Weinberger's statement outside these purposes.

U.S. imperialists are attaching great importance to Turkey in realizing their plans for the Middle East from the military and strategic viewpoints. However, the fact that the balance of power has been tipped in favor of peace, detente and disarmament on the international level as well as in the region prevents Washington from automatically implementating its plans in the political arena. Therefore, the Reagan administration is applying to our country the tactics of bribery at certain times and overt pressure at other times. Washington wants to send a Rapid Deployment Force [RDF] to the region in order to safeguard its own interests. It is forcing NATO to adopt the RDF--which threatens the security of the Persian Gulf--on Turkish soil or to provide the RDF with the facilities of U.S. bases on our soil. It is a fact that this pressure has been further intensified at a time when the situation in the Middle East is more strained due to Israeli agression.

The concoction of a Soviet threat--the biggest lie of the century--is being exploited in a bid to force our country to bow to U.S. pressure and impositions and to drag it into Middle East adventures. Through lies of a so-called Soviet threat, the United States is forcing our country to increase its armament to protect U.S. interests. As even Weinberger had to admit, while, through U.S. pressure, the other NATO countries are increasing their armament expenditures by 3 percent, Turkey is spending 14 percent [not further amplified] on armament.

Dear listeners, in his Amasya speech, National Security Council President Evren said: We do not sell our honor for money and we do not allow anyone to trample on it. These words, which give a positive impression at first glance, do not, unfortunately, explain the intensified U.S. pressure and impositions on our country. As stressed earlier, the United States wishes to deploy the RDF on our soil through the NATO channel or to provide the RDF with facilities in Turkey. NATO ringleaders announced on a previous occasion that they submitted a proposal to Ankara on this subject. Now, Weinberger is speaking even more clearly. He is uttering words to the effect that the United States will determine Turkey's destiny and Turkey will comply with U.S. wishes. The military administration is not mentioning these matters, i.e., the U.S. pressure and impositions. It is merely stating that Turkey will not assume any responsibility outside NATO borders. It is far from adopting a firm and decisive stand in the face of such events that concern our national security and independence.

Being dragged in the wake of imperialism, and the existence of atomic weapons deployed [at U.S. bases] in our country could, at a time of increased tension in the Middle East, cause the war flames to extend into Anatolia as well. Therefore, apart from trampling upon our national honor and independence, membership in NATO, dependence on the United States and the base of aggression on our soil also carry the danger of the total annihilation for our country.

Comrade Brezhnev's concrete and peaceful proposals discredit the lie of a Soviet threat and, at the same time, confirm once again that they constitute the most realistic way to prevent the escalation of a war threat. The June issue of the Turkish Communist Party organ, ATILIM, notes: If Turkey is to be prevented from being dragged into imperialist adventures, the Soviet peace proposals should be supported. The junta government should oppose the pressure and blackmail by the Pentagon. It should not grant any possiblities to the RDF. The junta government must also sign non-belligerence agreements with all our neighbors, including Syria. Only such an attitude would constitue both a strong guarantee of our country's security and a genuine contribution to regional peace.

VOTCP URGES VIGILANCE AGAINST REACTIONARY FORCES

TA170825 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 17 Jun 81

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee statement]

[Text] The trial of the fascist bloody terrorist NAP was followed by a new anticommunist lie and slander campaign against the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] and other progressive forces. The fact that such a campaign would start was not a secret for progressive circles. The TCP informed the public that the most reactionary circles were preparing to respond to the trial of the fascist NAP through every possible means. As it is, hundreds of progressive persons, workers, toilers, members of the intelligentsia and youth are being detained in numerous cities through the pretext of a communist threat. The detainees are being subjected to inhuman tortures in many provinces--primarily in Istanbul, Ankara, Izmir, Adana and Bursa. There are attempts to forcibly attribute to them crimes they have not committed and especially terrorist incidents. The detainees are being threatened with death and interrogated in order to force them to falsely accuse the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK], the Progressive Women's Association [IKD], the Union of Cooperatives for Village Development and Other Agricultural Goals [KOY-KOOP], the Turkish Teachers' Unity and Solidarity Association [TOB-DER] and the other professional organizations. Thus, false evidence is being sought for the series of trials lacking evidence against these organizations. Numerous democratic detainees, who bravely reject these accusations, are seriously injured and hospitalized in military hospitals and clinics of the military police following barbaric tortures.

Who is behind these anticommunist attacks and barbaric measures? What are their goals? The real forces behind this attack directed against the working class, the toilers, the intelligentsia and the youth consists of the most reactionary elements in the military administration and their supporter--the extreme rightist civilian circles. These forces consist of fascist antipeople elements embedded within the state, who have pinned their hopes on the possiblity that the most reactionary generals within the junta will reign. They consist of the agents of the U.S. spying organization, who have infiltrated every level of the state. These circles alone benefit from this attack directed against the progressive forces at a time when the world, our region and our country are faced with dangers.

Immediately after the trial of the fascist NAP, the public witnessed an incident. This trial intimidated the most reactionary forces within the army and these forces even engaged in armed clashes as in the case of the incident at the mechanized division headquarters in Edirne. Why are the various groups within the army and the junta that have declared that they are opposed to terrorism and fascist organizations participating in this anticommunist attack? Whey are they endorsing it? In other words, why are they making concessions to the most reactionary circles? These forces might be deceived by the illusion that they can mitigate internal clashes. This is a very dangerous maneuver, because every concession accorded to reactionary circles and profascists and every attempt to employ the anticommunism weapon in a bid to appease them weakens both the working movement and the democratic forces as well as the Ataturkist circles within and outside the army. It strengthens the antipeople elements and the agents of imperialism and prepares the ground for the adventures they wish to drag Turkey into.

What are the intentions of the most reactionary circles who attack the progressive forces? First, these circles are trying to discredit the plea by the military prosecutor in the NAP case to the effect that the NAP is a gang that commits murders under the guise of saving Turkey from communist attacks and disorder and to 'prove' the existence of a communist threat in the country. They thus wish to justify the murders committed by the NAP and save Turkes and his men from the gallows.

Second, these circles, that have adopted the "communist threat" as a mask, are serving the interests of U.S. imperialism which aims to drag the world into a nuclear war. These forces are (?binding) the masses with anticommunism. They are preparing the ground to drag our country into adventures in the wake of U.S. imperialism and to provide bases to the Rapid Deployment Force [RDF] on the Turkish soil. They wish to undermine the relations pursued by the Ulusu government with the Soviet Union. With this aim, they are attempting to attribute terrorist actions to the communists, who have always waged a consistent ideological and political struggle against all kinds of terrorism. Moreover, through Pentagon orders, they are preparing to slander the Soviet Union with the accusation of supporting terrorism.

Third, these circles are intimidating the millions of workers, peasants, civil servants, artisans and small shopkeepers, who are being crushed under the weight of the deep economic crisis, through this attack. They are trying to suppress their protests. These circles are accusing the labor unions, the village and consumer cooperatives and the professional organizations of being affiliated with the TCP only in order to perpetuate the state of unemployment, the high cost of living, lack of land and increasing poverty for the crushing majority of our nation. They are leveling these accusations in a bid to guarantee the excessive profits of a handful of local and foreign monopolies, four or five banks and a few landowners.

These are the real truths and intentions of those who wear the mask of a communist threat. Communists are in revolutionary solidarity with all the detained progressive persons. The TCP will not fail to organize the struggle of the working class and the masses against imperialist pressure, the exploitation by monopolies and the attacks by reactionaries.

Freedom to all political detainees except the fascist and Maoist terrorists! End the prosecution of democrats! Tortures must stop and the security of life of detainees must be secured. Detainees must immediately be allowed to meet their lawyers and brought to trial without delay.

Officers and noncommissioned officers who defend national interests and all forces who are not in favor of fascism: Let us--together with our people--thwart the attack of those who wish to avenge the NAP trial.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee. [Dated] 15 June 1981.

CHANCELLOR KREISKY CANCELS TRIP TO HUNGARY

AU171915 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1730 GMT 17 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Despite the improvement of Chancellor Kreisky's state of health, the official visit to Hungary planned for early this week has been cancelled. The physician in charge stated in this connection that from a medical viewpoint Kreisky certainly could have made a trip, but he and Health Minister Steyrer had advocated further rest. Kreisky will probably leave the hospital over the weekend.

Health Report

AU161926 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1730 GMT 16 Jun 81

[Statement by Prof Neumayr, chief physician of Vienna's Rudolfs Hospital, in Vienna on 16 June--recorded]

[Text] For some time Chancellor Kreisky has occasionally had somewhat higher blood pressure readings which, as a rule, it has been possible to adjust very well. Yesterday several converging factors--the unusually hot and sultry weather, extra fatigue not only yesterday but also during the past 2 weeks, as well as various other factors which all came together--all caused his blood pressure to rise particularly noticeably on that evening, and this led to a certain shortness of breath as a result of an overburdening of the heart. This is the reason the chancellor came to our clinic.

Examinations during the night have shown that there were no organic ailments, let us say of the heart, but just a certain fatigue. This morning this impression was verified at first clinically and later also by subsequent special tests. No additional organic findings were revealed. We hope the chancellor will remain a bit longer with us in the hospital because he will be compelled to rest here, and I hope that we can keep the chancellor with us for a rest at least until the weekend. Further observation will naturally show when he can be released, possibly over the weekend.

SLOGANS REMOVED FROM SOVIET MEMORIAL IN VIENNA

[REUTER, APA, AZ report: "Slogans on Russian Memorial in Vienna"]

[Text] Moscow, Vienna--On Tuesday the Soviet party organ PRAVDA charges Polish emigres with having recently daubed anti-Soviet slogans on the Soviet Heroes' Memorial on Schwarzenbergplatz in Vienna. The party organ carried a TASS report which blamed the slogans on Polish emigres.

Actually the following slogans were discovered on the memorial on Saturday, 13 June: "Dada greets the pea king. Poland to the Dadas. Dada Ivan, vodka to the Paox. Dada the terrible." ["Dada" and "Paox" have no recognized meaning in German. "Pea king" might be an allusion to the USSR, which fed lots of peas to the Viennese in 1945]. These slogans have since been removed. The Soviet Embassy in Vienna has asked the Foreign Ministry to ensure the protection of the monument.

The PRAVDA report seems to be a new warning to Poland, where recently anti-Soviet slogans appeared on monuments in several cases. To date, these incidents in Poland were reported only in the Polish, but not in the Soviet press. The Soviet Union may be taking up the subject to step up its propaganda campaign against the Polish leadership.

PAPER SEES FRG CONCERN OVER MISSILE DEBATE STANDS

LD161521 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 11 Jun 81 p 7

[Editorial: "Apel and the Labor Party"]

[Text] Yesterday evening FRG Defense Minister Apel made it clear in fairly plain terms that in NATO there is a certain correspondence between what contributions you choose to make and what you choose to say. He did so in The Hague and it will not have escaped him that the government formation negotiations have been started there in the last few days.

Apel focused his speech on the nuclear arms issue, and on the question of whether The Netherlands will decide at the end of December to accept the deployment of nuclear cruise missiles on its territory. The West German minister is bound to have known that this question touches on one of the most difficult problems in the government formation negotiations. What Apel had to say was more interesting for the place and the time he chose for his statements than for their content. It might be thought that Apel's remarks in The Hague ran the risk of having a counterproductive effect on the debate in The Netherlands, but he is bound to have considered this too.

In any case, his speech in the Congress building illustrated the concern in the SPD and the FRG Government over the course of the nuclear arms debate in The Netherlands, and concern over the views in the SPD's Netherlands sister party, the Labor Party (PVDA), is not the least important factor here.

Apel clearly relegated the views of his colleagues in The Netherlands party in the field of nuclear arms to the category of mere rhetoric. An unconditional rejection of the nuclear arms modernization plan which NATO decided on at the end of 1979, which the PVDA wants, or, if necessary, the unilateral rejection of four or five of the six existing Netherlands nuclear forces, would as far as Bonn is concerned not have the effect hoped by the PVDA. The number of nuclear arms in Europe would not be reduced through this move, stability would be damaged and the influence which The Netherlands wants to have in order to win a hearing for its wishes and views would virtually disappear.

What such Netherlands steps could mean, Apel did not say. But it is not difficult to say something on the subject. Any study of the West German political map shows that any lack of support for the SPD from its Netherlands sister party in the debate on nuclear arms modernization is bound to be welcomed by the CDU opposition in the Federal Republic. Of course, this could be an unintended consequence of the PVDA's views, but it is a curious aspect of the matter, given the nuclear standpoints of the CDU/CSU and the announced desire of the PVDA to have influence over European partners such as the FRG. As things now stand, the PVDA could perhaps claim to be making a small contribution to the fall of Chancellor Schmidt and his replacement by CDU leader Kohl.

Earlier, editorials have said that Netherlands participation in the NATO nuclear arms modernization program would be desirable as far as The Netherlands is concerned. A reply to the Russian SS-20 program is needed, if only to gain a good negotiating position in talks to limit such arms.

It is important that the NATO partners show as much political solidarity as possible with regard to the FRG position here. If this were to happen, the U.S. basis for negotiations would not only be strengthened, but the possibility of West European influence on the U.S. conduct of the negotiations would be maximized.

There is yet another factor which the debate in The Netherlands has ignored. This is that Netherlanders may well think that the NATO modernization is not necessary or is dangerous, but that--and this is a part of the reality of The Netherlands' position in the world--a reasonable number of politically and geographically relevant countries obviously have different ideas.

It is possible to consider that the governments in Washington, London, Bonn, Paris and Rome, for example, are completely wrong on this score, but this would not bring about a change of views in these capitals. To put it more strongly--it would be possible to go to those capitals and ask for an opinion on the wisdom of The Netherlands' views on this and other questions in NATO and the EEC. Herr Apel has already provided an answer to this, and he will not be the only one.

COALITION CANDIDATES DIFFER OVER PREMIERSHIP

["Own correspondent" report: "Premiership Also For Negotiation"]

[Text] The premiership in a Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA)-Labor Party (PVDA)-Democrats '66 (D'66) Cabinet is not on the agenda of the negotations which will begin between these three parties tomorrow. But it will probably be discussed. PVDA parliamentary leader Den Uyl said yesterday evening that negotiation leaders Lubbers and De Moning had made this perfectly clear by announcing that the negotiations for a future government accord could not be completed before there was agreement on the allocation of ministerial posts and on the premiership in a new cabinet as well as on points of policy.

CDA leader Van Agt yesterday indicated that the question of the premiership would "naturally" remain "open to discussion." But, he added, it is as open to discussion as the weather. "It will continue to be an enthralling topic, but there is nothing about it which can be changed." Van Agt stressed that the CDA group in the Second Chamber had expressed a clear wish for a CDA prime minister and has stated that the post should be filled by the present prime minister, Dries van Agt.

D'66 party leader Terlouw found Van Agt's comparison of the choice of premier with the weather frivolous. Before negotiations begin on Thursday he intends to ask Van Agt in person whether he will negotiate seriously about the matter. Terlouw described talks on a government program as "pointless" if the questions of the allocation of ministerial posts and the premiership were not "open" during the coming negotiations.

Union Leaders Seek Influence

[Own correspondent report: "Netherlands Trade Union Federation Wants Involvement in Government Formation Negotiations"]

[Excerpt] The Hague--The Netherlands Trade Unions Federation (FNV) wants to be party to the negotiations for a new cabinet. FNV Deputy Chairman W. Spit made this express request to negotiation leaders Lubbers and De Koning on Wednesday.

"At a suitable time" the negotiating parties (the Labor Party, the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) and the Democrats '66) will have to find out what the trade union movement thinks about the agreement reached on policy between the three parties, Spit said.

According to the FNV deputy chairman, it is pleasing that the negotiation leaders are endeavoring to form a cabinet different from People's Party for Freedom and Democracy (VVD). In the last few years contacts between the Van Agt cabinet and the trade union movement have grown progressively worse and, according to Spit, this has done no good to the democratic functioning of society.

[Own correspondent report: "Still No Definite Results in Government Formation Negotiations"]

[Excerpts] The Hague--It was admitted on Friday that there was some strain during the second day of the negotiations between the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA), the Labor Party (PVDA) and the Democrats '66 (D'66) on possible collaboration in government between the three parties. CDA leader Van Agt spoke of a "continuing good atmosphere," but considered it "actually pretty difficult to bridge the gaps." His PVDA counterpart Den Uyl said that negotiation leaders Lubbers and De Koning, who are chairing the negotiations, "are sounding out the differences in the attitudes of the three parties."

The negotiations covered national housing, energy policy, defense (with over an hour devoted to the new nuclear missiles), the recommendations of the Vonhoff commission, and finally, for 15 minutes, education (chiefly concerning secondary schools.) None of these topics was "rounded off," in the sense that a final decision was reached. This could happen next week, if attempts are made to reach results in various policy areas in accordance with the vigorous agenda drawn up by the two negotiation leaders.

In defense policy, great emphasis was placed on the issue of the new Pershing II cruise missiles [as published] which the PVDA does not want deployed in The Netherlands and which D'66 does not want deployed under the present circumstances, while the CDA is divided on the matter. But D'66 considers that no agreements need to be made during the government formation negotiations, because The Netherlands does not need to reach a decision about the missiles until the end of the year under the terms of the NATO agreement.

FRG, USSR EXPERTS DISCUSS ARMAMENT PROBLEMS

DW160837 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 11 Jun 81 p 11

[Robert Held report]

[Text] Prior to two ostentatious exploratory visits to Moscow, that of Egon Bahr and Willy Brandt, German experts in Bonn had an opportunity to learn that no tempting concessions can be expected from the Kremlin. The Soviet leadership tries to influence the West European public by offering the freezing of SS-20 armament. In fact, however, the deployment halt involved is questionable because of the mobility of this arms system. An offer to discontinue the current widescale production of these destructive arms has not been mentioned.

The opportunity for such explorations resulted from the fact that one of the periodic meetings of two foreign policy institutions, the Research Institute of the German Society for Foreign Policy in Bonn and the Institute for World Economy and International Relations of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, was on the agenda. While this time it was the Soviet side's turn to appear with eight participants, the Bonn discussion round was extended by further experts from institutes, ministries, parliament and economic circles. Not all persons on the Soviet side were holding positions too far away from the leadership.

A Talk as a Warning Against Misunderstandings

Surrounded by politeness, friendliness and hospitality, such a meeting in an already half-acquainted circle offers an opportunity for the exchange of somewhat tougher arguments. The prerequisites of the apocalypses sometimes are analyzed with some laughter, sometimes one keeps ominously quiet. Such a discussion doesn't create real liberation from the oppressiveness of the situation, but it has the function of warning the respective partner or antagonist in the forefield of decisions against misunderstandings. The biggest message which the Federal Republic gave the Soviet visitors to take back home was formulated, for example, by a young SPD deputy in the middle of the discussion. Naturally, the German side has to listen on such an occasion to many things which are not too pleasant, completely different from what our idealistic peace movements want to hear. The general conclusion from the respective insights is that the Soviet Union enjoys a not very shakeable imperial awareness, despite all the small worries. The grim truth vis-a-vis some quite foolish babbling on our side is that the SS-20, which threatens not only the West but the entire Eurasian continent including Japan, almost completes that feeling, so that it is not an accessory to be renounced by the Kremlin in the near future.

Fear of the "arms race spiral" (originally a Soviet slogan) is therefore, just relative on the Soviet side. They instead act and react in a precautionary way, making "a stock of reproaches." They suspect, not without justification, that the Americans want to demonstrate to them that achieving strategic advantages by concentrating on armament, while more or less neglecting everything else, cannot go unpunished.

Simplifying the impression of positions in this Bonn discussion, the situation looks as follows. The Germans, the Western side, have a great reproach. Despite all the signals and warnings given by the federal chancellor since 1977, the Soviets have developed the SS-20 project. By exploiting a zone beyond the SALT agreement, the Soviets achieved an enormous lead which changed the balance of forces.

The Soviets, on their part, answer with all kinds of reproaches also regarding trade and credits. But they don't like to discuss the actual SS-20 story, or if they do, only with a decreased need for the truth. It was seriously said that the decision regarding the SS-20 project was made when it could be seen in the mid-1970's that the coming U.S. cruise missiles would complicate the situation. The second part of this argument may be true, the other not. The SS-20 with its range of at least 4,500 km was planned geostrategically as the brutal and aggressive forward defense of the entire Eurasian bloc against the countries of the "outer ring." And it is worth some trouble for the Soviets. The American complaint, on the other hand, that the Soviets have surprised and fooled the West with this move, is so correct, despite its simplicity, that contentment with the successful trick can even be seen in such careful talks as in Bonn.

The Soviet Union Is Innocent

At this point, we can recount only fragments of the talks. But we will make an exception for the introductory expose of the Soviet delegation as the reflection of Moscow's position:

The situation at the beginning of the 1980's is marked by a considerable worsening of the international situation and the worsening now also extends to peripheral areas such as on the Persian Gulf, as is noticeable, for instance, in Lebanon and in the Syrian-Israeli relationship, in the case of Iran-Iraq, and in the "lack of a political settlement for "Afghanistan." The consequences of this worsening can already be felt, for example in the economic effects (embargo) but also in aggravations of the North-South relations, in the "price leaps of oil." What is symptomatic for the worsening in the military field, above all, is the nonratification of the SALT II treaty by the United States. It marks the beginning of "another spiral of the arms race." It is difficult to have a different name for it. The United States is planning a gigantic increase in arms spending by 1986. A number of new arms programs has been developed which are bound to have a destabilizing effect.

What also worries Moscow is the view that nuclear war could be localized war and that there are more lofty things than peace. This is unacceptable. Fundamentally, new mass destruction means have emerged which put war and politics into a different relationship. The world's nuclear weapons stockpile now amounts to the equivalent of 50 billion tons of TNT. What is at stake is not only the changes in quantity but also the changes in quality caused by the new programs: The Pershing II (the counterarming answer to the SS-20) is one example. While the intercontinental missiles (ICBM) require a flight time of 20-25 minutes--which still leaves time for measures in the event this involves an erroneous launching--a Pershing II (or an SS-20) needs only up to 4.5 minutes to cover the distance between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union. This is too little time for any corrective action. The new cruise missiles make verifications for the purpose of arms control particularly difficult, their range of action, their deployment being an involved complex. Thus, progress in the field of military technology put up new obstacles for arms race limitation.

This is why the proposals of the 26th party congress must be all the more heeded. The decisions of the party congress are of a long term nature and important. They are based on a well-thought-out, sober assessment of the situation. The key predication is the Brezhnev finding: It is dangerous foolishness to put one's stakes on victory in nuclear war and thus to start an arms race. So if war cannot be won anyway, military superiority is useless as well.

What the corresponding program of action of the 26th party congress comprises is this: The further development of constructive relations with the capitalist countries and Japan and of the dialogue with the United States. With regard to the countries of Africa and Asia, the basis is the recognition of their nonalignment and sovereignty. The Soviet Union is prepared to discontinue nuclear weapons tests and to submit new proposals concerning confidence-building measures. As early as during the preparations for the Helsinki conference (1975) it advanced the proposal to include all of Europe up to the Ural Mountains in an area of confidence-building measures. The 26th party congress decided to extend this area to the Urals if the area is correspondingly extended in the West. The West and its mass media ignored the fact of this offer.

In the Far East, too, confidence-building measures should be created vis-a-vis China, Japan and the United States. If the other side were interested in attaining calm in this field, it would have had to respond. Nothing happened. Besides, Brezhnev once again demonstrated receptiveness to negotiations despite the extremely difficult situation with respect to SALT II. Part of this also is the suggestion to look into the limitation of submarine armament and of the submarine-based weapons systems.

Thus, the proposals advanced by the party congress provide the basis for a serious discussion. The Soviet Government, however, does not aspire to any monopoly for its proposals should the others still wish to advance proposals on their part.

Everything attained in the 1970's is in jeopardy. Creating a normal political climate is an objective necessity. No matter what obstacles separate us. what matters is to localize conflicts and to ensure an overall positive development, which requires that the climate of detente be preserved.

Afghanistan Effect and Iran Shock

The German side replied to this Soviet expose with its analysis of developments: What is new is the globalization of the East-West relations. In the 1960-70's the East-West relations still had been concentrated on the relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union and the region of Europe. This also held true for detente policy, first of the bilateral phase and later (conference of Helsinki) of the multilateral phase. The principle was that no side should aspire to unilateral advantages.

On the U.S. side, this has been understood as a point of global relativity. Yet some factors caused a change: The 1972 accord between the Soviet Union and United States contained a fundamental dissension which became obvious only later. The arrangement had set aside the ideological debates and the support of liberation movements.

In this way the Americans gained the impression that they are up against an expansion on the part of the Soviet Union. It was an illusion indeed that a power-political competition of the two world powers could be localized. As a result, the feeling emerged that detente has utterly failed. Detente did not fail in Europe. This is why differences of opinion exist between Europe and the United States. But as far as global detente is concerned, many people in Europe endorse the contention that it has not made any headway.

The effect of Afghanistan has been particularly strong in the United States because it was preceded by the Iran shock, therefore the Afghanistan occupation is being regarded as an operation of global strategic significance. Granted, the original motives of the Soviets were known, yet scepticism spread subsequently, expecially owing to the consequences and changes caused by this operation.

In Europe, the effect of the events of Afghanistan likewise is very strong because a new dimension of security thinking has developed there since 1973, which considers economic security just as important as military security, because the Middle East situation is now being regarded as a security problem of cardinal importance.

In Europe, the lines of demarcation are clear, this is not true for the Middle East. In Europe, the policy of the individual countries is predictable. This doesn't hold true for the Middle East where the regimes lack stability. There is no such thing as virulent interstate conflicts in Europe that might escalate, unlike the Middle East. The problem of stabilizing that region is incomparably more difficult.

To many people in the West, the problem of the medium-range weapons (SS-20) goes far beyond the technical angle. Many of them see here a starting point for a violation of the basic rules in the nuclear world: desisting from pursuing unilateral advantages and understanding the other. For years signals have been sent out without any answer having come forth from the Soviet Union. This is why the counterarming decision was then taken in 1979.

What constitutes the central problem is the globalization of the East-West relations. In that respect, different assessments of the significance of the East-West conflict exist in certain regions of the world. In this connection, it is necessary to look at the "linkage" problem ("linkage" standing for making the deportment in one sphere dependent on the good behavior of the negotiating partner in another area). Reasonable politics must make allowances for that. Developments outside of Europe may well have repercussions on the bilateral relations. The democratic process alone sees to that.

The arms control dialogue constitutes a value in itself. It may be aggravated through crises, yet it must be conducted for its own sake. No answers have as yet been found for the Middle East. One is skidding into a situation in which direct confrontations may emerge in the future. The region is of central significance to Europe while geographically it borders on the continental power, the Soviet Union, hence, the risk that the West regards the corresponding military capacities in the Soviet Union as a threat to its interests and likewise the risk that the Soviet Union regards any initiative of the West in this region as a threat to its southern part. What prevails there is a dual asymmetry for which it is hard to find an answer:

1. The geographic asymmetry--the normal military presence in the Soviet Union is set off by an area which, in the view of the West, does not have a corresponding capacity.

2. The asymmetry of the instruments. The West confines itself to classical instruments --an agreement on military assistance in this area leaves completely open the support to certain political groups. This is different in the case of the Soviet Union. The question is whether it is possible to achieve regulations extending beyond the military sphere, that is to say, agreeing on restraint in other spheres as well. To many people it has also become doubtful whether the basic assumption is still valid which determined relations with the East in the 1960's: that an increase in economic relations also will increase mutual dependence.

Confidence-Building Measures Are Insufficient

The Germans further explained what alarms them as a nonnuclear power: Granted, agreement was reached in Vladivostok in 1974 between the Soviet Union and the United States on the intercontinental weapons and negotiations are in progress in Vienna on the Soviet Union's superiority in the conventional field (MBFR). But on the floor between these two, the Soviets in the meantime developed the SS-20 uncontrolled and played deaf to the warning of the Federal Republic. This already was a topic during Brezhnev's visit to Bonn as well as at subsequent meetings. On the Western side, there was nothing equivalent to the new weapon.

While the SALT treaty created a comprehensive classification for strategic missiles, the stability thus attained has been called in question again as a result of the development of the medium-range missiles. Hence, the dual decision of December 1979---but the deployment of the SS-20 had begun long before that, and is still in full swing. Naturally, Brezhnev's proposals were acknowledged. But the Soviets did not make a move for years and also took their time after the signal of the dual decision. What the Western negotiation proposal specifically means is this--limiting on both sides the systems that cause the concern. The West is prepared to include the results of the negotiations in the assessment of the requirements in these medium-range systems.

The impression has emerged in the West that detente has been interpreted in the Soviet Union as a political concept without any military consequences. The West has drawn the conclusion from its observance of the Soviet armament since the mid-1960's, meaning during the "detente" period, that the Soviet Union has a concept of alternative options for its foreign policy, that it regards detente as being neither irreversible nor fundamental for Soviet security but as a variety for which potentially the Soviet military power is kept ready as a substitute.

A Change to Moscow's Advantage

Understandable explanations would exist for the Soviet armament: First, the old Russian tradition of overinsurance; second, the need of a wide country for an armament volume that looks out of proportion from the outside, while actually it could be in line with the objective need for security. Both explanations would correspond to a considerable aspect of reality. But regardless of how the result--Soviet armament policy--would look, it remains incontestable that the situation in and around Europe has been changed to the advantage of the Soviet Union in the last 15 years.

The resulting question is not how to stablize the situation through renunication of force, but with what military capacities one must reckon in the field of conflict on both sides. The situation is such that there is a Soviet preponderance with armed forces able to launch an attack. The hard core of security measures will remain untouched by possible confidence-building measures as long as the military forces remain unchanged.

It is impossible for European governments to achieve an agreement with the present Soviet advantages, consisting of geography plus military forces, as the basis of the common security. In such a case, the governments would have difficulties with their own credibility. If security should be established, both sides should start out from the same facts and data. No applicable arms control agreement can be based on dissent. It is therefore a task to aim only for such agreements on whose contents one could really come to terms.

"Parity Is What We Have Achieved"

The desire for clear data (a Soviet expert read some arms systems figures from an ominous red book filled with notes, claiming that one is better informed than the Germans) led to the German suggestion of setting up a committee for the common clarification of data. It was not completely rejected by the Soviet side, and a member of the Soviet delegation said about the just-mentioned considerations: "There is no need to convince us of the necessity of parity." But he also said: "Parity is first of all what we have achieved. One cannot attack the Soviet Union any more while remaining invulnerable oneself...Kissinger says that the United States can destroy the Soviet Union seven times, while the Soviet Union can destroy the United States just once. But what difference does that make?"

The discussion about unclear data led to the outlining of German considerations which are a bit different from popular ideas. The Soviets insist, as Brezhnev said to Schmidt, in case of talks on medium-range arms on the inclusion of forward based systems, the nuclear arms and delivery means stationed in Europe (including the Poseidon systems on submarines, although they are already included in SALT II). The German side has other ideas: Even without the SS-20, Germany is threatened by the intercontinental SS-11 missiles. In addition, it is threatened by the medium-range arms of smaller range, 1,000 km, deployed on the Warsaw pact area, which alone would suffice for complete destruction. If such medium-range missiles with a long range such as the SS-20 (and on the Western side the Pershing II and cruise missiles) should be negotiated, "everything" should be actually included from the standpoint of German interests! The consequence, however, would be years of negotiations. The German demand is in any case to move talks on medium-range arms into the framework of SALT. The Germans also made it clear that they consider a control offer of SS-20 missiles up to the Urals as insufficient because SS-20 missiles stationed on the other side of the Urals would still threaten the Federal Republic and upper Italy.

Germans Don't Think Globally

The Soviet experts complained that the SS-20 is "an entire philosophy in the West." But it turned out simultaneously that the SS-20 is the pet of the existence philosophy of Soviet strategists and that, thus, little chances exist to talk the Soviets into making some sort of a concession in this field. What is known to everybody who has talked to Japanese military experts became evident: The West Europeans feel too much involved as Europeans by the SS-20 problem. That makes the Russians almost laugh. "It is necessary to think globally to assess the European problems," lectures a Soviet military theoretician. "Your military follow what I would call central European military thinking--excellent in planning, but as regards the global problem.... The SS-20 is not a European problem, it would be scientifically correct to consider it only a global problem. Look at the map. Bear in mind the defense problems in the Far East at the seam of three power blocs." (One must pay attention to the careful evasion of Japan, which is also threatened by the SS-20.) "There are the U.S. 3d and 7th Fleets and a power with a great human potential..."

Does the Missile Threat Constantly Force Europe More Into a Sort of Hostage Role?

Far beyond the local egoistic concern of the European peace movements, it turns out that the SS-20 is not a system among many but, as far as the Soviet Union is concerned, the great, global strategic weapon, the solution for overcoming all fears, the total nuclear haymaker around the gigantic land mass of the Soviet empire. Consequently, the Soviets willingly and with only lame excuses ("great concern about the lack of clarity of U.S. policy, its zigzag course over 20 years) listen to the charge that this had been a dirty trick, and they are happy about what they have accomplished. They love their SS-20.

The effects of such imperial awareness already are quite similar to attempts at intimidation. "It is for the first time that I see your beautiful country. It would be a shame indeed if..." said an important member of the delegation. As a German put it, the discussion thus became relieving and depressing, relieving through the frankness of the discussion, depressing by the confrontation with the facts. It was little consolation that an expert from Moscow said that one should not pay attention to the utterances of Soviet military men, to what they write, but rest assured that military policy is being determined by the political leadership.

The Germans replied: What is alarming about the weapons systems that over many years abortive efforts had been made to make it clear to the Soviet Union that it was in the process of setting up a weapons system which would be bound to entail profound, negative effects of a psychological and political nature in our country. And what makes this weapons system so terrifying is that it is part of a military strategic concept of which Soviet literature says: Should there be war, then it must be won....

"The category of the war won is a category no longer usable today"--this German contention also was advanced by the Soviet side in another form, also as the opinion of Brezhnev.

Intimidation Is a Poor Instrument

The Germans insisted that the Soviet Union with its SS-20 has undertaken a preemptive strike arms policy. So far the attempt has been made in Europe to equalize the imbalance in the field of nonnuclear defense with nuclear deterrence. But the SS-20, which is a typically far-reaching forefield weapon, has created a new situation which elicits the apprehension that we in Europe, as the Soviet experts say, by this global strategic weapon more and more are forced into a sort of hostage role under global strategic conditions, that in the event of a conflict anywhere in the world one would be able to discipline the Europeans with the help of the SS-20 threat. Europe is not far away from being intimidated. Yet, intimidation is a poor instrument for bringing about a stabilization in the relations between East and West.

The Soviet side did not show any feeling of guilt: "We accuse the West of overreaction in view of the SS-20 and of Afghanistan... We suspect that this arms race is forced upon us at this particular moment so that the Soviet Union will collapse in the very process of pursuing certain economic objectives." The discussion therefore was ill suited for getting something to move. But it intensified to a certain effect not devoid of any hope. The fact that the Soviet Union pursues intimidation and that elements of this intimidation are aimed at domestic level effects in the Federal Republic and also at the separation from the U.S. ally could not be camouflaged here anymore. A guest who was highly intelligent said humourously in this context: "Uncoupling? The exploitation of contradictions between states is part of the elementals of diplomacy, and it would be naive to shed any tears over it... We are not so foolish in Moscow as to assault this reality (of the Western alliance). Nobody is doing that..."

The SPD Conveys Warnings

The German side recalled that both the renunciation of force and the renunciation of nuclear weapons had been included in Adenauer's policy of 1955 and that the Soviet interest in having the Germans sign the nuclear nonproliferation treaty is offset by the condition that the Germans stay in the Western alliance. After all, an independent Federal Republic autonomously negotiating with the Soviet Union cannot be in the original interest of Moscow. Why, then, the influence on German domestic policies? The Soviet Union is exploiting a pacifism which it doen't even allow at home.

A SPD Bundestag deputy phrased the overdue warning: He said he believed that the discussion in the Federal Republic will even increase. At best, it can lead to the overthrow of the government, but this would not change anything militarily, at best only with respect to arms policy. "The more you support a campaign, the more will that part of the public in the Federal Republic, which interprets this as a threat, increase. This would spell a new conjuring up of the Soviet danger in this country. Thus, both of us are not interested in emotionalizing the discussion in this country..."

The visitors from Moscow failed to react to this warning message to the hosts of Bahr and Brandt.

Dispute Without Hatred and Irritation

Economic relations also were discussed, above all the big natural gas deal, which currently is limping because of the high credit costs on the world market (costs which the Soviets would like to dump on the Germans). They didn't get far in the discussion on the separate aid to Poland. The Soviets would regard a joint clearing authority for the review of the aid conditions as an insult to a socialist state. Everything is more or less overshadowed by the arms policy conflict; the hope that detente would follow the tracks of trade has been abandoned. To the brink of irrationality, the Soviet side levels accusations at German firms unable to make deliveries because of embargoed U.S. parts now lacking for exports. The Soviet Union is greatly concerned that it might be cut off from the technology transfer, yet Western strategists should not rely on any smash effects of this option, just as they should not have on the ridiculous wheat embargo.

The two delegations parted without any hatred and irritation despite their terrible frankness, as Ernst Jaeger would probably phrase it. One of the guests said that the 20th Century is an exception to the rule in German-Russian relations. Another case, the process on the road toward detente, will extend into the third millennium. Thus, the terrible frankness, as a strange sign perhaps, also a good sign.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU QUESTIONS SCHMIDT POLICY

[Anton-Andreas Guha editorial: "Questions to Helmut Schmidt"]

[Text] In his book "Defense or Retaliation," a former SPD security expert named Helmut Schmidt proved in brilliant language and most logically that the deployment of nuclear arms, particularly medium-range arms, on the territory of the Federal Republic would be "senseless," "unreasonable," "irresponsible" and "insane." Europe "cannot be defended but only destroyed" with nuclear arms. Medium-range missiles are "an aggressive provocation vis-a-vis the Soviet leadership" because they are strategic arms and because "everybody knows" that they are suited "only for a first strike and never for a second strike." If at all, such missiles must be deployed in remote areas such as Alaska, Greenland or the deserts.

Schmidt saw his party marching in rank and file with nuclear arms opponents. He quoted such "outstanding leaders as Pandit Nehru and Albert Schweitzer," such responsible scientists as Albert Einstein and "more than 40 million Japanese" who wanted to ban nuclear war once and for all with their signature.

The same Helmut Schmidt brought up the fundamental question of whether the security interests of the West European NATO partners must not be basically different from those of the United States. Schmidt answered the question himself with passionate engagement: If alliance partners are threatened with destruction in a state of conflict while the main ally is not yet involved at all, while he has possibilities to act, security interests cannot be identical. The Federal Government must make that clear to the United States if it doesn't want to be reproached for being a vassal.

The critics of NATO's dual decision and of the peace movement as a whole derive good arguments from the ideas outlined by the chancellor in his book. Nothing has changed for them since 1968, on the contrary. Schmidt's theses are more valid for them than ever, last but not least because of the tendency that has developed on the basis of arms technology to limit nuclear war to Europe, and because the Soviet Union also has a complete destruction arsenal, which was not the case to such a degree in the 1960's.

This security expert Schmidt is the federal chancellor today, but he represents an absolutely contrary position. He was the first to call for medium-range arms in 1977, approving their deployment in Europe at the price of his political career if negotiations with the USSR should fail--an argument, by the way, which was added later on.

Naturally, everybody has the right to change his opinion. But since the position of an important politician is not a private affair, the public can demand an explanation for the change of opinion--last but not least in the interest of Helmut Schmidt himself.

The earlier questions remain: Can the Federal Republic today be defended with nuclear arms? Is there a chance for it not to be destroyed? Do medium-range arms in densely populated areas make more sense than in 1968? Would they no longer attract the destructive preventive strike of the Soviets? Aren't the planned Pershing II and cruise missiles strategic arms? Aren't they threatening the USSR? Are they no longer a provocation for the Kremlin? Are they now suitable for a second strike or are they still only first strike arms? Wouldn't West Europe now be destroyed much earlier than the United States? Are the NATO security interests now identical? Is the Federal Republic a sovereign partner?

So far, Helmut Schmidt has not given a substantiative answer to these questions. The fact that such an answer is not a private affair is most clearly demonstrated by the condition of his own party. Its confusion is caused in a great part by the party's sticking to a security policy which was considered substantial and correct a few years ago and which was represented by Helmut Schmidt. But now the SPD, the government and people's party, is supposed to make a turn of 180 degrees, like a company following an order, without an explanation as to why it has been marching in the wrong direction. Some people make that turn out of solidarity and without asking questions, believing that the chancellor will be right. Others, however, feel compelled to continue marching. Still others stand there helplessly. The picture is that of a chaotic party which has been maneuvered by its leadership into an obviously hopeless situation.

Helmut Schmidt can't simply declare worthless what he had once thought, said and wrote in the name of the SPD. He must answer the questions.

NEWSPAPERS REVIEW COUNTERARMING DISCUSSION

DW151140 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 15 Jun 81

[From the press review]

[Text] The editorial of the FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE says: Anyone looking at the difficulties of the Federal Government--be it out of concern or out of personal interest--readily includes NATO's counterarmament in their assessment. The weekend offered ample opportunity for doing this--from Hesse-South [the Regional SPD congress] to a Gustav Heinemann initiative which seems to be addicted to the naive believe that peace policy is not linked with a balance in armaments. A difficulty of a special nature emerges for the Federal Government in the laender. It has shrunk in the laender to SPD governments viewed with toned down sympathy by the FDP. It finds itself making an effort, not quite devoid of hectic features, to stabilize in regard to personnel what threatens to slip from its fingers in concrete politics.

The daily DIE WELT sums up its opinion: The contrast just could not be more crass. While Foreign Minister Genscher voices justified concern about Moscow's constantly harder course, the resistance to NATO's counterarmament intensifies in the SPD. Bahr provides the Soviets with anti-American arguments in Moscow. And leftist friends of peace prepare for a unilateral disarmament action at the German Evangelical Church convention. This weekend showed how little effect Schmidt's resignation threats and Boerner's solidarity utterance have had. Politicians like Eppler, Lafontaine and the party congress delegates of southern Hesse are living in a world of illusion. They believe the obscure figures of the Soviets about the arms potentials in East and West more than their own politicians.

In this connection, SCHWARZWAELDER BOTE comments: The Social Democratic Party conventions of this weekend once again make it plain how extensive the SPD identity crisis is. The fields of conflict identified by such catchwords as NATO dual decision, nuclear energy policy, airport enlargement or investment program cannot be eliminated with party congress decisions. The imploring words of party congress speakers Boerner and Vogel, Wischnewski and Glotz indicate the range of the debates which probably will be continuously waged in the German Social Democratic Party despite any voting majority or minority.

BUNDESTAG CEREMONY MARKS GDR UPRISING ANNIVERSARY

[Excerpts] Bonn, 17 Jun (DPA)--A ceremony held in the Bundestag today commemorated the popular uprising in the GDR on 17 June 1953. In the presence of Federal President Karl Carstens, the chairman of the Committee for Indivisible Germany and former federal minister, Johann Baptist Gradl (CDU), urged the GDR leaders to make conditions easier for the people in the other part of Germany.

Gradl said that the GDR is in arrears with what it offers in exchange for the profit it draws from relations with the Federal Republic. He said that the GDR leaders have not met their obligations regarding normal, goodneighborly relations to which they have committed themselves in the basic treaty.

Gradl called upon Federal Republic citizens not to be deflected from this aim of unity in the interests of themselves, Europe and human and national solidarity. They must not let themselves be put to shame by their fellow countrymen in the GDR, who steadfastly regard themselves as Germans "and who inwardly adhere to solidarity with us through all trials." Gradl said that unification of the two German states--the time of which can not be foreseen--would "be in the nature of an alliance." The systems of the two parts of Germany have diverged so much that a simple joining together isn't possible. Gradl urged that the people of the Federal Republic not be arrogant toward their fellow countrymen in the GDR. Not everything in the GDR must be criticized out of hand. Impressive progress also has been made there. But from the viewpoint of the Federal Republic, it would be possible to regard the GDR in a more comprehensive way, despite all political and ideological contradictions, "if it at last permitted more dignity, more justice, more respect and more freedom in human relations between Germans in the two states," Gradl said. In the long run, the GDR cannot avoid easing people's conditions.

MITTERRAND, NEW ZEALAND'S MULDOON HOLD TALKS

NC172215 Paris AFP in English 2200 GMT 17 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 17 Jun (AFP)--President Francois Mitterrand today ruled out any decision to end French nuclear weapon tests at Muroroa Atoll in the South Pacific, visiting New Zealand Prime Minister Robert Muldoon said here today.

"Essentially, it seemed to me that his policy is not very different from that of the previous administration," Mr Muldoon told a press conference after a 45-minute meeting with Mr Mitterrand at the Elysee Palace.

Mr Muldoon, in Paris for a meeting of the Organisation of Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), said that Mr Mitterrand had also ruled out independence referenda in the French South Pacific island territories of New Caledonia and French Polynesia.

The French president did however express what Mr Muldoon called very positive support for his idea of a trade agreement between New Zealand and the European Economic Community (EEC) to help provide a reliable market for New Zealand sheep meat and butter.

Mr Muldoon, who first put the idea to Roy Jenkins, former president of the EEC Commission, four years ago, said that Francois-Xavier Ortoli of France, the current vice-president of the EEC Commission, had also approved the idea yesterday.

Mr Muldoon, who acknowledged that France had been a cause of many of New Zealand's problems with the EEC in the past, said that he was optimistic about prospects for the plan. "Instead of having the question of New Zealand's access for dairy products, lamb and so on coming out year after year, staying on the agenda for months and long drawn-out wrangles, my belief is that the long-term solution to our association (with the EEC) is a trade treaty," he said. "I think we're at the point where this can become a new initiative in New Zealand's relationship with the Community," he added.

Mr Mitterrand, according to the New Zealand prime minister, said "we will take that up and pursue it," but Mr Muldoon would not go as far as saying that this new climate of optimism stemmed from Mr Mitterrand's accession to power here on May 21. Instead, he attributed it to the fact that New Zealand and the EEC had acquired a period of breathing space by concluding a four-year mutton agreement and a two-year agreement on butter.

Mr Muldoon met with Mr Mitterrand's predecessor, Valery Giscard d'Estaing, a year ago to discuss problems posed by EEC policies on New Zealand's lamb exports to Europe.

Mr Muldoon, who arrived here on Monday, is scheduled to leave tomorrow for London, where he will have talks with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. He is expected to start a four-day working visit to West Germany on Sunday.

CHEYSSON MEETS WITH AUSTRIAN FOREIGN MINISTER

[Text] Paris--Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr, who is in Paris on the occasion of the OECD Council of Ministers session, met on Monday afternoon with French Foreign Minister Pierre Cheysson for a talk in strict privacy. According to an Austrian source, their principal topics were problems of North-South relations and the current state of the Kampuchea problem.

Cheysson discussed in detail the joint initiative by Mexican President Lopez Portillo and Chancellor Bruno Kreisky for the North-South conference scheduled for the fall in Mexico and for the preparatory meeting of the participating countries' foreign ministers to be held in August. Both sides expressed the hope that substantial progress will be achieved as soon as possible in the North-South dialogue.

PRESIDENT ASKS FOR SUPPORT IN SECOND ROUND

[Dominique Souchier report from the Elysee Palace]

[Text] By their vote on 10 May, said Francois Mitterrand, the French people entrusted me with the task of directing our country along the path of a new policy. That is also what was done on 14 June. A new upsurge has begun, and I am convinced, said Francois Mitterrand, that Frenchmen will not stop there. At the end of a long democratic debate which has been a credit to the French Republic, next Sunday, French people will, I hope, demonstrate their desire to give me on the broadest bases the means to conduct useful, coherent and durable action, for which the situation of France calls. Universal suffrage has spoken and all the undertakings promised to the country will be carried out.

Francois Mitterrand concluded his talk this morning at the Council of Ministers by saying: In this spirit, my intention is that the opposition is respected and associated, as it should be, with the responsibilities which the proper functioning of parliament implies.

MITTERRAND EXPRESSES HOPE FOR DIALOGUE WITH LAOS

NC121602 Paris AFP in English 1547 GMT 12 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 12 Jun (AFP)--French President Francois Mitterrand today expressed the hope of a "new dialogue between France and Laos" which could be discussed between the two countries' ambassadors to the United Nations.

The proposal was made in a telegram to Laotian head of state Prince Souphanouvong from President Mitterrand, thanking him for the message of congratulations following the French president's election on May 10.

Reports of a renewal of diplomatic relations at ambassador level between France and its former Indochinese colony have been circulating here for some time.

Vietnam, which backs the communist government in Laos, has said it favours the idea. Observers see a normalisation of links with Laos as part of the Cambodian question. Laos, like Vietnam, favours the Heng Samrin government currently ruling in Phnom Penh but not recognised by the UN.

The Cambodian question is to be discussed at an international conference in New York 1 July. Informed diplomatic sources believe France, as the former colonial power in the three Indochinese states, could play the role of intermediary.

PCI DIRECTORATE ON PRI EFFORT TO FORM GOVERNMENT

[PCI Directorate 11 June document]

[Text] Deputy Forlani's abandonment of his attempt to form another government marks the failure of the DC's attempt to reject any substantial change in the country's leadership, which is made more necessary than ever by the explosion of the moral issue and of the maneuvers aimed at postponing until after the 21 June elections clear assumptions of responsibility and precise political options.

The PCI, which has vigorously condemned and opposed such attempts and maneuvers, confirms the pressing need for a government solution that will set in motion a remedial change and that will be equal to the alarming gravity of the domestic and international situation.

The PCI confirms the need for a democratic alternative to governments centered on the DC and on the conception and practice of DC-established governments--an essential component of the alternative is strong PCI government representation.

However, the Communists are willing, even in opposition, to play their part in facilitating an improvement in the political and moral climate and the transition to a complete and correct functioning of the institutions and a proper realization of the democratic dialectic.

The PCI directorate acknowledges the significance of the president of the republic's assignment of the new task to a non-DC politician, namely the PRI secretary

The PCI hopes that the prime minister-designate's task will move clearly in the direction of the full restoration of constitutional norms and guarantees, starting with the exercise of the power conferred on the prime minister himself to choose ministers irrespective of the traditional and unacceptable impositions of party secretariats and currents.

There is a need for a new kind of government, with a highly streamlined form which reflects the need for clarity, unity and operational efficiency and with ministers who will provide guarantees of competence and of perfect morality and honesty. There is a need for a government of moral, political and institutional reform, which will free democratic life and the state from hidden power centers such as the P-2 lodge, from corrupt and subversive conspiracies and from now intolerable forms of corruption, and which will fully restore the legality and transparent functioning of the state bodies and apparatus.

There is a need for a government formed on the basis of a clearly defined program, determined to tackle what are really the most pressing problems in the fields of terrorism and Mafia crime and the defense of democratic order; the anti-inflation struggle for a new economic development, and international political and economic relations, a need for a new active role for Italy and Europe in the direction of detente, arms reduction and the solution of tensions and conflicts, with respect for every nation's independence and sovereignty.

In implementing such a program, a more open relationship must be sought with all the democratic forces represented in Parliament; the social forces, and regional and local government bodies. It is essential to promptly surmount the political and institutional bottlenecks and distortions that have led to the present state of decline, instability and paralysis in the democratic system.

PCI'S NAPOLITANO ON P-2 AFFAIR, LEFTWING PARTIES

LD180815 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 13 Jun 81 pp 1, 22

[Fausto Ibba interview with PCI Secretariat member Giorgio Napolitano: "PCI, Parties and 'Moral Issue'"; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] For years it seemed as if the only problem worthy of attention, as far as the parties' internal arrangements are concerned, was the PCI's "democratic centralism." It is indeed an important issue, but it seemed as if we were simply expected to adapt to someone else's model, implying a choice between two truths, whereas in fact there were many....

[Answer] Indeed, it is a long time since the polemical arguments used in the past against the PCI's "internal system" lost all strength and credibility, as if a change in this field could constitute a precondition both for acknowledging the Communist Party's democratic nature (with a view to its government participation) and for rebuilding leftwing unity. I must say at once, however, that we are acutely aware of problems concerning the regeneration and further development of our party's democratic life, and we demonstrated this at the January Central Committee meeting. But it is a fact that the regressions and failures that have occurred in the internal life of other parties are such that they pose very different issues from that of urging the PCI to change its ways, in an uncertain direction. Nobody now dares ask us to change by establishing internal currents and power groups. This in fact is one of the roots of the degenerations that culminated in the P-2 lodge affair.

[Question] But the most worrisome factor is the extent to which forces of the left itself, our interlocutors, are involved in a mysterious network of political and financial interests and fierce internal struggle.

[Answer] People from all the government parties, as well as from the fascist right, seem to be involved in that network, that hidden power center. On the other hand, there is something that we must not forget. For almost 20 years, Italy's two major leftwing parties have continuously--apart from in 1976-79--held different stances, in government and opposition respectively. Unfortunately, the PSI now has some of its protagonists associated with the organization and conspiracies of the P-2 lodge. Apart from which, it is time to reflect on the terrible consequences that can result from sharing certain government methods and certain ways of exercising power and the political struggle typical of the DC. And I am talking about internal struggles both within the individual parties and among the various parties.

[Question] What solution can be envisaged?

[Answer] There must be an open discussion of these matters within the left--a discussion of the need for a break away from conceptions and practices of government established by the DC. The parties' regeneration and their relations with society and the state and the moralization of public life should become one of the essential elements and commitments of the left, one of the foundations for rebuilding leftwing unity.

[Question] It seems to me that the main thrust of the January Central Committee meeting can be identified with a policy of improving the PCI's organization. Is this policy progressing, and if so, how is it related to the developments in the political situation?

[Answer] We are in an experimental and development stage. We are working seriously on the pointers provided by the Central Committee. There will be an initial important stocktaking in the fall with the regional congresses. Of course, we do not imagine that we have already satisfactorily resolved the problems. We therefore still have much work to do to ensure that the party's democratic life develops as clearly and effectively as possible.

FRG'S GENSCHER HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE, ENDS VISIT

LD171315 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 13 Jun 81 pp 3-4

[Excerpt] Madrid, 12 Jun--Today has been a busy day in the diplomatic field. FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher concluded his visit to Spain, and 45 minutes later, the man holding the same post in the French Government, Claude Cheysson, arrived at Barajas airport. Genscher, who met with the king, Calvo-Sotelo, Felipe Gonzalez, Perez-Llorca and members of the Liberal Club, praised Spanish democracy's good prospects. For Cheysson, who met with Calvo-Sotelo and Perez-Llorca, terrorism and Basque Fatherland and Liberty were the principal topics of his visit.

Hans-Dietrich Genscher's last day in Spain was very busy. He met with Felipe Gonzalez at 0930 GMT and he was received by the king at noon at the Zarzuela Palace. He later went to the Moncloa Palace to lunch with Calvo-Sotelo. He concluded his official visit with a news conference at which he said: "Spain has successfully surmounted a grave test over the last few months and also has demonstrated its democratic responsibility with the signing of a national agreement on employment. This has impressed me favorably and I am leaving Spain with great hope in its democratic future."

In addition, Genscher also made a declaration of principles in which he stated: "I regard this visit as a demonstration of close friendship and of our desire for close cooperation. I have found that Spanish vitality continues to exist; I was impresssed by the national agreement on employment which was signed a few days ago and which I interpret as a personal success for Spanish Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo. It is an encouraging sign for the Spanish economy. Moreover, Spain has surmounted a tough test with total success and this is very encouraging for Spain's democratic future. We also have ascertained that our opinions on East-West relations coincide, and the FRG Government intends to facilitate smooth negotiations so that Spain can join the Common Market. And if Spain decides to join NATO, it will be well received in that alliance."

Asked about the problems which Spain has in EEC waters, since our vessels' permits expire 15 June, the FRG minister stated: "You know that that is a Common Market decision, and the FRG is only one member. But you can be quite certain that our government will not underestimate this issue."

He next was asked about the drawing up of a possible timetable for negotiations between Spain and the Common Market. He said that the FRG will do its utmost to ensure that the negotiations are smooth. "You may be confident that we will do our utmost to ensure that the negotiations on agriculture begin in the fall. The FRG will attempt to convince other Common Market members that the political problems are more important for the stabilization of Spanish democracy than the economic problems which may arise in the negotiations."

Perez-Llorca was asked at the same news conference about the possibility that Spain's entry into NATO could destabilize the current balance of forces. The minister said: "Spain is already de facto in NATO; what is at issue is normalizing a situation so that it can enter as a full member. It does not entail an alternation of the current balance of forces."

CALVO-SOTELO ANALYZES GOVERNMENT'S FIRST 100 DAYS

LD171603 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 13 Jun 81 p 8

[EUROPA PRESS report on 11 June interview granted to Spanish television by Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo]

[Excerpt] Madrid, 12 Jun--Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo was interviewed on Spanish television yesterday evening by Rosa Maria Mateo. During the almost-40-minute which analyzed the government's first 100 days, Calvo-Sotelo said:

Watched over or watchful democracy: "I haven't felt watched over, except by parliament and by the press, which is exercising its right."

Possible government crisis: "I don't have an 'inherited' government, I have a government which I myself formed and with which I feel very happy. I believe that we are on good terms and I have no intention of changing the government. I know that a government crisis is always stimulating for the news media. I truly am sorry that I won't be contributing to the stimulus over the next few months."

Final configuration of the state of the autonomies: "Formally, I believe that the autonomy bodies should be formed in 1983, but this doesn't mean that such a complex and far-reaching process--an historic process such as the transformation of a centralist state into a state of the autonomies--can be carried out within a set period. The constitution itself envisages lengthier periods. I believe that it is necessary to have the firm intention--and I have it--of continuing the process positively."

Tripartite agreement on employment: "The government contributed primarily the initiative and the political will for this agreement. The government deemed it very important, when the ruling class is being criticized because it is incapable of tackling the country's real problems, that trade unions, employers and government should set the example of working on the problems and seeking solutions. The government also has contributed something else--it has pledged to contribute 350 billion pesetas to social security, which will lighten workers' and employers' obligations. It has pledged to go further in unemployment benefits than the law envisages, and to increase public investment and to encourage private investment so that jobs will be created and the working population maintained until 1982."

Nuclear energy: "I believe that it is absolutely necessary, at least for the next 20 years. Dependence on oil is not only an economic dependence costing us a good deal of money, but also a political dependence. And we must extricate ourselves from this. The only way out for the next 20 years is nuclear energy. Does a nuclear powerplant have risks? Certainly, it does. It would be naive to deny it, just as any industrial plant has risks. Progress has always entailed some risk. But the risks of nuclear powerplants are so well calculated and ensured against that I can say that they are minimal. I have visited a nuclear powerplant with my wife and children. We entered the shielded area of the reactor and I measured the levels of radioactivity within the reactor. Moreover, I watched the measuring of the radioactivity carried by the water leaving the powerplant and being returned to the river. These levels are lower than the levels of radioactivity of some mineral waters which were called radioactive not more than 15 years ago."

NATO: With or without referendum?: "I said nothing new during my visit to the FRG. Chancellor Schmidt said new and important things. As for the referendum, there is no constitutional obligation to call one for an issue such as NATO. Rather, the Constitution itself advises in Article 87 against this kind of initiative in international policy matters. I believe that there should be a great debate in parliament, which is the home of politics, where the issue should be examined with the utmost thoroughness and in the greatest detail. But I do not believe that a referendum is necessary."

Policy of consultation: "This is a term which has taken root but which I do not like, because language experts have something to say about the use of the word in this sense. As for whether this stance will jeopardize the agreement, among other matters, I don't believe so. The issue has been raised since the investiture debate, we are in dialogue with the opposition; and we have already made remarkable progress, for instance, in the issue of the autonomies. The disagreements will be debated in a civilized manner in parliament."

The treaty with the United States: "The bilateral treaties with the United States, which date back to 1953, have so far meant a de facto Spanish presence in the Atlantic alliance; a Spanish entry into the Western defense system; an entry by the side door. Entry by the front door is entry into NATO. The fact that we may be a NATO member some day--and I hope that we will--does not invalidate the possibility of our also having a bilateral treaty with the United States. The renegotiation of the agreement is now being conducted within the perspective of an entry into NATO."

Entry into EEC: "I am well acquainted with the issue because I negotiated with the Community for 2-and-1/2 years. Giscard d'Estaing intervened 1 year ago which has meant, if not the halting of the negotiations, then a delay in them. The Community's internal situation is critical; the members are on bad terms with each other. At the end of this month, the Commission must submit to the EEC Council of Ministers a report proposing solutions to the agricultural and budgetary problems, which are those which most worry the Community and also--especially the agricultural problem--those which most worry Spain."

The French stance: "It is with France that we have had the problems. The government, insofar as it must be sensitive to the stances of the people and of the farmers, will not behave very differently. However, I am confident that a dialogue with the new Mitterrand government will enable us to have clearer approaches to the problem, because the French foreign minister comes from the EEC. He was an important commission member for 4 years. I know him very well and I know that dialogue with him will not be difficult."

Attack on the Banco Central: "I wish to recall that I appeared before congress a few hours after the hostages were released; I made no categorical assertion; I kept constantly within the sphere of hypotheses and set out the first hypotheses which were deduced from the first statements and which pointed in that direction (presumed responsibility of the extreme right). The deposition continued for 8 days and contradicted those first indications. I said and I repeat again that I did not and do not discount any hypothesis, that I do not consider the matter closed. And I say now, as I said then, in all clarity and in all humility, that I do not know who is behind the Banco Central raiders, if indeed there is somebody behind them."

Anxiety of the people and of the government: "We are still living under the shadow of 23 February. That anxiety is rather obessive. We should all make an effort--primarily the government, but also the news media--to emerge from that obsessive anxiety. I do not believe that we should interpret everything that happens in Spain in terms of 23 February. We should be more optimistic."

Broad rightwing party: "The Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] has occupied a key position in the Spanish transition; the successes of the Spanish transition is largely due to it. It occupies the center of the Spanish political secne and that is a privileged position, coveted by parties to our right and our left. It must remain in that center position and run in the next election from that center position. The fact is that the election is far away and we also have a certain electoral syndrome. The election is not around the corner; the legislative term ends in 1983 and between now and then the UCD--which, as a ruling party, always has a more languid life than the oppostion parties, and which only becomes invigorated and recovers close to elections--can and should improve its image. And I am certain that it will do so in order to offer voters in 1983 a center position, faithful to the origins but updated, in which very probably there can and should be very valuable innovations."

DENMARK

DEPUTY URGES MORE DIALOGUE BETWEEN EUROPE, U.S.

LD180909 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 13 Jun 81 p 7

[Social Democratic Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee Chairman Lasse Budtz "Panel" article: "West-West--We Know Too Little About Each Other's Defense Rationales"]

[Text] The need for an international dialogue across ideological and political boundaries seems to be more urgent now than for a long time. Relations between the superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, can safely be described as tense, which in the West European view makes an East-West dialogue very necessary. But relations between the United States and its European allies are not the best either, and this fact ought to emphasize that we should talk to each other more--and not become unnecessarily impatient. The Europeans are not rearming enough, the Americans say. The Europeans are not realistic enough, when so many of them are opposed to the latest developments in the arms race, represented by the new medium-range missiles, people on the other side of the Atlantic add.

Leaving aside the East-West dialogue and concentrating here on the West-West dialogue, it must be said that despite the enormous amount of work done by the U.S. and European diplomatic corps to keep respective governments informed of what is really happening, there is still a widespread lack of information in both the United States and West Europe about "each other's" attitudes and the reasons behind them.

A number of people tried to cure this state of affairs with a meeting for parliamentarians from NATO nations, both U.S. and European, in Venice recently. In particular, British, West German and Danish parliamentarians took the trouble to give a detailed explanation of the background to their respective countries' security policies. One of the Danish contributions made by the undersigned [Budtz], pointed out the following:

Denmark is not moving toward anything resembling neutralism (which is what many U.S. politicians are actually afraid of). It is a fact that there is a majority within the population and in the Folketing in favor of maintaining a Danish defense. There is a majority (which is also fairly massive) in the population and in the Folketing in favor of continued Danish membership in NATO. There is also a majority in the Social Democratic party, and no responsible politician, no member of the Folketing group has at any time in the Danish security debate proposed that Denmark should withdraw from NATO.

The Danish Defense budget has not been cut--unlike the budgets of most other government departments--it has on the contrary increased from around 7.3 million to around 8.8 million [presumably kroner] as a result of index-linking and rising wages, and so on. Nor has any reduction in the budget been proposed, but only a zero-growth solution.

If we suppose that we were to cut large sums from the social welfare or education budgets, for example, and give this money to defense, the undeniable broad popular support for Denmark's foreign and defense policy would very probably begin to shrink. This could lead to a situation where the stability and surrounding security policy and the other aspects of foreign policy would disappear. It goes without saying that th'- would not be in our own interests, nor indeed would it be in our allies' interests. We must strive for a stable policy which removes foreign and security policy from the day-to-day political debate, and this is one of the reasons why the Social Democratic Party and the government has always tried to achieve a broadly based multiparty defense agreement. [Budtz' Venice "explanation" presumably ends here].

It would have been possible to add that the social democratic parties' and the Nordic trade union movements' participation in the debate on a Nordic or, for that matter, European nuclear-free zone is an attempt to make a contribution to the creation of a trend toward a situation with fewer nuclear arms in Europe.

It goes without saying that the ideal objective would be that no more medium-range missiles be deployed in Europe, and that the existing missiles be dismantled. It would be all too naive to believe that this could be done without ther being some sort of bargain struck between East and West, and we can at least try to fix a ceiling for this part of the arms race. This is the reason why the Danish Government is trying to get the superpowers to understand the necessity of negotiations on the medium-range missiles (TNF) [Theater Nuclear Forces] and that these should be started as soon as possible. Delegations to the talks held between the social democratic parties in the smaller NATO nations have also given expression to the same views at the three sets of talks so far held.

U.S. criticism of the Europeans is often massive, even though there are of course in the U.S. administration people who have a good grasp of the background and the motives for the Europeans' views, but the nervousness among U.S. politicians has grown since Mitterrand's victory and the results of the Netherlands elections. However, the Europeans have never considered abandoning their cooperation with the United States. Nor have the Netherlands Labor Party of the French Socialist Party under Mitterrand's leadership. At its national congress, the Labor Party adopted a resolution on continued NATO membership, and Mitterrand's thoughts are directed more to closer cooperation with NATO than to a looser involvement.

The average U.S. politician does not know enough about this--perhaps because he does not take suffiecent interest in it because of his enormous burdens of work. Therefore, we should talk to him and his colleagues as often as possible. We in the United States and in West Europe have differing priorities. We prefer different methods. But we share the desire for security.

AFTENPOSTEN EDITORIAL ON 'BACKFIRE' INCIDENT

[Editorial: "Soviet 'Flying Visits'"]

[Text] The Soviet Union has other ways of influencing Norwegian public opinion than having President Leonid Brezhnev write letters to Prime Minister (and Labor Party Chairman) Gro Harlem Brundtland. A short shile ago MS Harlem Brundtland received a letter from Moscow in which the Soviet leader stressed the need for detente and disarmament, but a few hours earlier the Soviet Armed Forces had paid a "visit" in the vicinity of Norway which bears witness to a completely different attitude.

Nine Soviet hunter bombers of the type to which NATO has given the name Backfire were observed off the Lofoten Islands. This is the first time this sophisticated aircraft has been observed so far south along the Norwegian Coast. The episode has rightly attracted much attention in Norway and among our allies.

The Soviet Union's motives for this demonstration are unknown. At best it will be a one-shot event and a reminder that Norway finds itself in a very vulnerable military position. The episode speaks of a world of reality which will not be altered by peace marches. At worst, permanent deployment of the Backfire aircraft at the base on the Kola Peninsula and regular patrols penetrating far south over Norwegian waters would change the balance of strength in the north to the detriment of Norway and NATO. This would be a trend that would have to be taken very seriously, not least in Norway. With Backfire aircraft on the Kola Peninsula the Soviet threat to Norwegian territory would be even greater.

The nine aircraft belong to Soviet naval aviation. In the event of war, their mission would be to attack targets in Norway and in the Norwegian Sea. This means that they would in particular hit troop and supply convoys from the United States to Norway and other NATO nations. Up to now, the Soviet Union has had Backfire aircraft in the Baltic area and they have also operated as far north as the Barents Sea. The aircraft are equipped with nuclear missiles, and their speed is twice that of sound. If it turns out that the Backfire excursion along the Norwegian coast represents a new pattern in the military buildup on the Kola Peninsula, the Russians will have considerably reinforced their military strike capacity only a few kilometers from Norwegian soil. This would make the fact that Norway is a neighbor of the Soviet Union across the border in the north even more unpleasant, and our connection to the Western alliance even more important.

It is comforting to be able to state that Norwegian military surveillance in the north is so effective that the Russians were not able to move their aircraft unseen to a position off Andoey. The visit was immediately detected by the Norwegina surveillance system. Those responsible for the Soviet Union's military activities in northern areas have learned that they are being closely followed by Norway. It is Norway's duty as a member of NATO not to allow the Soviet Union to play a military game in the northern waters which could end in a surprise for joint Western defenses.

POLL SHOWS GREATER WILL FOR DEFENSE AMONG POPULACE

LD161638 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1030 GMT 16 Jun 81

[Excerpts] The will to defend Sweden, if we are involved in war, has increased strongly in the last 6 months. This is the conclusion of the national psychological defense planning committee in a study presented today. According to the committee, the will for defense among the populace has not been this high since 1975 when this kind of poll began. Now, for instance, 9 out of 10 persons have a positive attitude toward the draft, and an increasing number of people want us to resort to armed resistance if Sweden is attacked. According to the committee, the enhanced will for defense is due to the fact that an increasing number of people feel that the risk of war has increased. Many feel great anxiety at the political tension in the world, and especially at the crisis in Poland with the threat of a Soviet invasion of the country.

But even if the will for defense has increased, confidence in the present armed forces is not particularly strong. It is true that rather more people now than last autumn believe that the Swedish Armed Forces could resist an attack, but (?almost) 2/3 of the Swedes do not believe that. An unusually large number--that is, one in five--people believe that the forces must have more money, which is the highest figure ever registered by the committee which deems this remarkable, taking into account the difficult economic situation.

THATCHER, JAPANESE PRIME MINISTER HOLD TALKS

[Text] London, 17 Jun (KYODO)--British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher expressed the strong hope Wednesday that Japan would open its market further through tariff reduction and abolition of the non-tariff trade barriers.

In a 90-minute meeting with Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, who is visiting London in the course of his six-nation tour of West Europe, Thatcher said protectionist pressure in Britain will rise if other countries do not open their markets to enable Britain to maintain the free trade principle. She proposed that such problems be solved before the Ottawa summit of Western industrialized nations in July so that they will not be taken up at the summit.

Suzuki denied that the Japanese market was a closed one as pointed out by Thatcher and cited concretely the low tariff rates of Japan.

On the British request that Japan import more manufactured goods from Britain, Suzuki hoped that substantial discussions on the matter will be held with Rokusuke Tanaka, minister of international trade and industry who is currently visiting European countries. In connection with this, Japanese officials accompanying Suzuki believed that Britain, in the discussions to be held with Tanaka, will press for reduction in tariffs for biscuits and scotch whisky.

At their meeting Wednesday, Suzuki and Thatcher also confirmed the cooperative structure among Japan, the U.S. and Europe.

Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, who also attended the meeting, said that the NATO countries were increasing their defense spending and exerting efforts to aid Third World countries. He hoped that Japan also would increase its assistance although he was aware of constitutional restrictions.

On the auto trade issue, Suzuki told Thatcher that the Japanese Government will make efforts so that no inconvenience will be caused to Europe.

Suzuki also briefed Thatcher on the results of his meeting held with U.S. President Ronald Reagan in Washington in May. He said he and Reagan agreed that Japan, the U.S. and Europe should work together to cope with the Soviet military buildup and its intervention in Afghanistan. He also said agreement was reached that the respective countries should exert efforts in respect to security in accordance to the capability and the situation of the respective countries.

Suzuki said that if the Soviet Union intervenes in Poland, Japan will take joint actions with the Western countries.

Suzuki on Defense

OW180033 Tokyo KYODO in English 0015 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] London, 17 Jun (KYODO)--Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said Wednesday night that anyone who thinks Japan is neglecting its own defense efforts is wrong.

In a speech at the Royal Institute of International Affairs, the prime minister said some people think Japan is using its postwar constitution as a pretext for relying almost completely on the military deterrent provided by the United States and for neglecting its defense efforts.

"This is simply not correct," he said. "Japan adopted its constitution committed to peace because of its experience in World War II as the first nation in the world to suffer nuclear attack, and because the Japanese people made a deep and solemn commitment never again to repeat the errors of militarism," Prime Minister Suzuki said. "It is our fundamental national policy that Japan's defense posture should be a purely defensive one," he added. "We are determined not to become a major military power which may be a threat to neighboring countries, and we firmly abide by the three non-nuclear principles." He said that Japan is steadily improving its defense capability and pointed out that the average rate of real increase in Japan's defense expenditures from 1971 to 1979 has been about 7 percent per annum.

He also said that Japan "must take the initiative in fulfilling our international responsibilities befitting our national capability." Prime Minister Suzuki said Japan is determined to make a contribution to the cause of world peace and stability in consonance with its capability and policies.

He said his current trip to Europe and his exchanges of views with European leaders on economic relations between Japan and Europe "brought home to me once again various economic problems now confronting the nations of Western Europe."

"I can well appreciate the painful choice faced by the leaders in dealing with this situation," the prime minister said. "At the same time, I am deeply concerned about the tendency to seek a way out of these difficulties through protectionism. I think it is obvious that protectionism would, in the final analysis, be nothing short of a suicidal act, its only outcome would be the loss of vitality and the stagnation of the free economic systems of the West. The combined economic capacity of Japan, the United States and Western Europe at present amounts to more than half that of the entire globe--if this were to collapse, the human race would be plunged into dire distress. Our responsibility to maintain and develop our economies is indeed an awesome one."

'Slip of Tongue'

[Excerpts] London, 17 Jun (KYODO)--Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, in what appeared to be a slip of the tongue, said Wednesday night that his conservative government will extend "administrative guidance" to the Japanese automobile industry in order to maintain its orderly exports to Britain.

In giving the remark, the prime minister's sense of diplomacy was also questioned as he gave it not to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher but rather to her political foe, former Prime Minister James Callaghan. Callaghan, who was among those in the front row, stood up and threw at Suzuki what appeared to be a provocative question when he said it would become difficult for Britain to contain demand for protectionist trade if the Japanese and British auto industry fail to keep the agreement it has had. The British former Labor Party leader said he wanted Prime Minister Suzuki to respond to his question, acting as if he were a representative of the Japanese automobile industry.

The prime minister said his government would exercise administrative guidance [to ensure] that the Japanese automobile industry would maintain orderly exports to Britain.

Both the Japanese and British Governments have thus far maintained the position that the auto issue be settled privately in a gentleman's agreement between those who are concerned with it. Prime Minister Suzuki's remark appeared to have contradicted the official position.

MINISTRY PLANS TO USE CIVILIAN PLANES FOR NATO

LD171221 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 17 Jun 81 p 5

[Air Cdre G.S. Cooper report]

[Text] British Airways and European airlines are involved in a plan to overcome NATO's shortage of military inflight refuelling aircraft by forming a civil tanker reserve force. Boeing sources suggest there is a European shortage of over 300 tankers.

The Defence Ministry confirmed yesterday that the whole question of supplementing the capability of the RAF with civil aircraft was under review.

An article in the monthly magazine DEFENCE, published this week, says the benefits to NATO for both offensive and defensive aircraft would be considerable because tankers act as "force multipliers." But how the civil tanker force would be manned remains a matter for speculation.

In the RAF's case, it is suggested that volunteers for civil tanker duties could be absorbed into the RAF Volunteer Reserve or Royal Auxiliary Air Force.

Boeing says NATO has 2,314 combat aircraft capable of being refuelled in the air. Assuming six aircraft per tanker, Boeing sees a need for 380 refuellers.

The RAF is expanding its tanker fleet to 32 aircraft, but even with French and United States support the maximum number available to NATO comes to fewer than 70.

In a presentation to the RAF, Boeing suggested a 44 million pound programme to enable the 757 airliners being delivered to British Airways in 1983 to be used as tankers in war.

Modification of the 39 aircraft on order would cost 8 million pounds, flight refuelling pods would add 5 million pounds, two new 757's to be bought for RAF training would cost 29 million pounds, and the remaining 2 million pounds would be for spares. The costs were at 1980 prices.

A further suggestion from Boeing proposed the setting-up of a NATO civil tanker force (on a similar basis to the NATO Boeing E-34 early warning force) by converting at a cost of 30 million pounds 140-737 airliners owned by European airlines.

In addition Boeing proposed a 16-aircraft NATO 737 tanker force for training and test work, costing 115 million pounds.

KIPRIANOU: NO U.S. BASES TO BE ALLOWED ON CYPRUS

JN181118 Doha QNA in Arabic 1050 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] Dubayy, 18 Jun (QNA)--Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou stated that his government will not allow U.S. military bases to be established in his country in return for achieving a solution to the Cypriot question.

He said the presence of an Israeli Embassy in Nicosia is inherited from the past, but that it is not an obstacle to Cyprus' support for and friendship with the Arabs and for its support for the Palestinian people's right to its homeland and to set up an independent state.

In an interview with the newspaper AL-BAYAN, published in Dubayy today, he expressed his government's pride in its strong relations with the Arab countries. He emphasized Cyprus' condemnation of the Israeli attack on the Iraqi nuclear reactor.

On the Cypriot problem, he said his government awaits a solution in the light of a group of proposals, including a federal solution based on establishing two federal states in regions. He added that the possibility of achieving an early solution to the problem depends on Turkey. He said that disarmament throughout the island is the best guarantee for all Cypriots. He welcomed the presence of a UN police force to supervise the situation when a solution is reached until trust between the Turkish and Greek communities is reestablished. He also welcomed any Arab effort within the context of the United Nations to solve the Cypriot issue.

TURKMEN, FINANCE MINISTER ADDRESS OECD MEETING

TA172102 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 17 Jun 81

[Text] The annual meeting of the OECD ministerial committee, which has been held in Paris for the past 2 days, ended today. Yesterday the foreign ministers of the OECD met, while today it was the finance and economy ministers of the 24 member countries.

AKAJANS reports that Finance Minister Kaya Erdem addressed the meeting and talked about the problems facing the world economy as well as Turkey. He pointed out that besides the high rate of inflation, unemployment and the difficulties in the oil market, the restrictive policies adopted by certain countries were exacerbating the world economic situation. Noting that the economies of developing OECD countries, such as Turkey, were being specially affected by these conditions, Erdem added that Turkey, which was an oil importing country, was being greatly harmed by the oil crisis as well.

Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who attended the first day of the OECD meetings in Paris, returned to Turkey at 1700 today. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport, Turkmen said that the economic difficulties encountered by the developed as well as developing countries were discussed at the meeting. Turkmen said that at the meeting he explained the aims of the economic stability program being implemented in Turkey. He noted that the delegates at the meeting discussed the dialogue between developed and developing countries. He added: This dialogue recently broke off. A system of global negotiations to restart this dialogue is being investigated within the United Nations. There is no full agreement about this issue among the OECD countries. We defended the view that global negotiations must start as soon as possible. Turkmen recalled that during his stay in Paris he held bilateral talks with the ministers of OECD countries. He said that during his meeting with the French foreign minister, he raised the issue of Armenian activities and the attacks against Turkish diplomats and he conveyed Turkey's complaints on this issue. Turkmen added that the French foreign minister told him that his government would not tolerate illegal activities.

EANES SPEAKS AT MACAO GOVERNOR'S INAUGURATION

LD171544 Lisbon in Portuguese to Timor, Macao and Australia 1000 GMT 17 Jun 81

[Excerpts] In Lisbon yesterday Commander Almeida e Costa was sworn in as governor of Macao, succeeding Gen Meld Egidio who is now the chief of the Armed Forces' General Staff.

At the end of the ceremony, President Ramalho Eanes said in a speech that Macao's stability, development and security remain the unchanging responsibility of the Portuguese administration. He added that if, on the one hand, our cultural and economic presence keeps open an area of opportunities for Portugal's economic interests, it is also, on the other hand, the expression of a specific aspect of our foreign policy.

He pointed out that Portugal's presence in the territory makes an outstanding contribution to the stability of our relations with the PRC and other Far Eastern countries, adding that the last few territorial governments, apart from promoting remarkable social and economic developments, have contributed to a harmonious relationship between the local Portuguese and Chinese Communities.

In reply, Almeida e Costa said: In general terms, one of the main goals of the government's action for the immediate future will be the promotion and management of the territory's development which, by virtue of the prevailing circumstances in that part of the Far East, must be all but instantaneous. This development must benefit, first and foremost, the inhabitants themselves, but it can and should extend to and have repercussions in the neighboring regions. It can receive significant and prominent contributions from various Portuguese sectors of activity, and I will be striving to make it so.

With regard to relations with the Chinese population of Macao--and it should be kept in mind that it comprises 97 percent of the total--and with the people and authorities of the neighboring PRC, I will be happy enough to follow the footsteps of my illustrious predecessor whose policy merits the greatest praise and in many respects reflects the true dimension of the man's courage. I will unhesitatingly pursue the same political course.

UNESCO MEETING ON THIRD WORLD TECHNOLOGY CONTINUES

NC161852 Paris AFP in English 1832 GMT 16 Jun 81

[By Gordon Bibby]

[Text] Paris, 16 Jun (AFP)--Norway was tonight chosen to lead an eight-nation team seeking ways to boost Third-World technology after an extraordinary behind-the-scenes power struggle which halted an international conference for two days.

The final election was by "consensus" after negotiations which began 40 minutes after the 35-nation UNESCO meeting opened yesterday morning and halted all other proceedings.

Much of today's struggle, conference sources said, involved the seven other team members being carefully balanced between Third World, West and East, and within the Third World between its four major regions.

The seven also unanimously elected by public consensus after the private wrangling were Mexico, Iraq and India (all vice-chairmen), Nigeria (reporter), and France, the Soviet Union and Benin (members). Their job, for two years, will be to shape a hopefully massive aid programme to give the developing nations a greater share in modern communications technology. The conference, lasting until next Monday, will discuss needs and priorities.

Today's hard bargaining, the sources said, involved Western insistence on a place in the team in addition to that of Norway. In the final event, France replaced Indonesia and the Soviet Union replaced East Germany, proposed earlier, with both West and East satisfied by the final mix.

Norwegian delegation chief Gunnar Garbo, his Foreign Ministry's deputy director-general, had insisted on maintaining his candidature, although at one time a total of five of seven Western nations were proposed as chairmen, the sources said. The meeting was continuing tonight.

Former journalist Mr Garbo, 57, a Norwegian Radical Social M.P. for 16 years before he joined the Foreign Ministry six years ago, called for the proposed aid programme to be given "concrete and practical direction." But the hardest part, he added, would probably be gathering the resources needed to make it a going concern. The idea is that these may take the form of money, equipment or services. The conference would have to avoid the "gulf between a wealth of words and a dearth of deeds" which had sometimes marked UN meetings in the past, Mr Garbo said.

His election by consensus in open session was proposed by Canada, backed by Venezuela, East Germany and China.

Norway, like a number of nations represented here, has had experience in Third World communications projects, among them aid for regional newspaper coverage in Tanzania and a radio service covering several African countries.

The conference later tonight appeared to be successfully heading off another potential problem when it decided to draft into proposed rules, at present mentioning only "majority" decisions, a reference to the need for consensus. Some Western delegates were said to have feared majority-only decisions could introduce a "veto" element into discussions. Under tonight's proposal, to be taken up again tomorrow, "majority" would only apply if consensus failed.

EC COMMISSION APPROVES JAPAN CAR EXPORT CURBS

OW171303 Tokyo KYODO in English 1208 GMT 17 Jun 81

[Text] Brussels, 17 Jun (KYODO)--Reversing its previous attitude, the European Community Commission Wednesday approved Japanese agreements to control car shipments to West Germany and the Benelux nations individually.

The EC executive Commission gave the approval when Vice Presidents Wilhelm Haferkamp and Etienne Davignon met with Rokusuke Tanaka, Japanese minister of international trade and industry, to exchange views on bilateral economic relations.

The EC officials told Tanaka that the Commission's basic policy is that negotiation through the Commission on trade issues is more desirable than talks with individual member countries. But the Commission has no intention to take issue with the car trade agreements West Germany and the Benelux countries negotiated with Japan recently, they said.

This marked a reversal of the EC Commission's previous attitude. It had insisted that Japan should hold negotiations on its car exports to the European Common Market with the EC Commission rather than hold talks with individual member countries.

Through the bilateral negotiations, Japan pledged to hold the 1981 increase in its car shipments to West Germany to below 10 percent of the 1980 total and also curtail 1981 car exports to Belgium and Luxembourg by a maximum 7 percent from last year's level.

It has also pledged to limit this year's car shipments to the three Benelux nations--Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands--to last year's level.

Japanese officials accompanying Tanaka on his current tour of European nations and Saudi Arabia said the approval given by the two top EC Commission men also marked the settlement of the thorny issue of Japanese car exports to the entire European Common Market.

Among other Common Market countries, Italy, France and Britain have already been restricting Japanese car imports while Denmark, Ireland and Greece are not seeking Japanese controls on car imports, the officials said.

The officials also expressed a belief that as a result of a series of talks by Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and Tanaka with government leaders of European nations, Japan has been able to settle all bilateral economic problems with the Common Market.

The Common Market had been seeking Japan's voluntary curbs on exports of not only cars but also picture tubes for television sets and machine tools, but it is no longer necessary for Japan to curb their exports because shipments of these items have been declining, the officials pointed out.

There are no longer any fears of Japan-EC economic relations deteriorating further, at least for the time being, they said.

GOVERNMENT SEEKS SYRIAN AID IN MURDER INVESTIGATION

AU171324 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 17 Jun 81 p 2

[Text] Beyond the information that a detachment of the Al-Asifah group is on its way to Europe to commit more murders, no new facts have come to the knowledge of Austrian authorities [investigating Heinz Nittel's assassination on 1 May]. This was stated by Interior Minister Lanc at a press conference following yesterday's cabinet meeting. In his opinion, he said, it should be possible to restrict the organizational basis of the Al-Asifah organization, which operates from Syria, provided that Syria genuinely cooperates. The Syrian foreign minister has already made a promise to that effect to Austria, but it has not been kept, Lanc said, adding that the Austrian ambassador in Damascus will not take official steps.

The leads pointing to the Al-Asafah organization in the Nittel murder investigation came from abroad, according to Lanc. The murderers themselves succeeded in escaping without leaving any clues. In addition to Al-Asifah's leaflet, in which the organization takes responsibility for the Nittel murder, the latest issue of Al-Asifah's monthly organ contains not only confessions to the crimes the organization has already committed, but also the announcement of more acts of terrorism, Lanc said, pointing out that such past crimes included the assassination of a number of PLO representatives abroad, an attack on a Jewish kindergarten in Belgium and the assassination of a lawyer in Spain.

The interior minister left no doubt about the fact that the activities of Al-Asifah in fact confirm the correctness of Austria's Middle East policy. After all, he said, the Al-Asifah organization has been expelled from the PLO and its leader has been sentenced to death. Obviously, forces are organizing that do not want a peaceful solution of the Middle East conflict. The official representation of the Palestinians is by all means in favor of a policy aimed at peace.

PVDA'S DEN UYL ON NATO, CRUISE MISSILES ISSUES

LD190851 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 16 Jun 81 p 5

[Bob Groen article: "Beggarly Den Uyl in Moscow"]

[Text] The Hague--"To bring closer a nuclear-free Europe." This is the rationale behind the Netherlands Labor Party (PVDA) rejection of NATO's decision for a nuclear arms modernization program and the deployment of 48 cruise missiles in the Netherlands. However, a gesture of rejection is not enough to achieve the praiseworthy objective of a Europe without nuclear arms. That could only be the outcome of extremely complicated negotiations between Washington and Moscow, in which the presence of "barter items" is necessary if results are to be reached.

Former Prime Minister Den Uyl is not only the PVDA parliamentary party leader and negotiator in the government formation talks; he is also a member of the Palme commission, which busies itself with disarmament and security questions. In this latter role he was in Moscow last weekend for talks with Cyrus Vance, the Russian Georgiy Arbatov (one of Brezhnev's top advisers) and his West German kindred spirit Egon Bahr, among others. And in this connection, nuclear arms modernization (the deployment of 572 cruise and Pershing II missiles planned by NATO) and the Russian medium-range SS-20 missiles were discussed.

In a telephine interview with the newspaper TROUW yesterday morning, Den Uyl let it be known that a new Netherlands Government would have to reconsider the possibility of deploying the cruise missiles not on land but at sea and that The Netherlands should not reject joint responsibility for such a "solution" to NATO's controversial modernization decision. The PVDA congress resolution and its campaign on the issue (a "no" to modernization) seems to have been called into question by Den Uyl. His statement to TROUW still points to the possibility that the PVDA "no" to modernization is being modified. And this could be useful during the government formation negotiations.

At a news conference after his return from Moscow, Den Uyl rejected this notion, as Stemerdink--the PVDA defense specialist--had done. Den Uyl's argument was that he was only interested in the recent interest shown by West German Federal Chancellor Schmidt in basing such cruise missiles at sea. Schmidt's remarks about deployment at sea must be seen in the context of West German developments, not as a boost to the PVDA campaign.

In itself, the deployment of cruise missiles at sea is not a particularly appealing idea. It has already been put forward with some force because the U.S. Navy, like the Army and Air Force, wants to have this weapon at its disposal. What Washington is interested in is that The Netherlands should be prepared to shoulder political responsibility for the modernization decision and in this way contribute to the formation of a NATO modernization front which would strengthen a negotiating position vis-a-vis the Soviet Union.

The pressure from Washington and the government formation rumors in The Hague of a possible breakdown in the negotiations for a coalition of the PVDA, Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) and Democrats '66 (D'66) (an unconditional PVDA "no" to modernization) overshadow a third aspect here.

This third aspect is that at meetings like that of the Palme commission in Moscow the PVDA essentially has no "barter items," something which can be just as much of a liability at informal meetings at this level as it can in official negotiations. In Moscow Den Uyl can use his party's "no" to modernization to impress upon the Russians that they would also have to do a great deal about their SS-20's. On the basis of the zero-option advocated by Den Uyl (no Eurostrategic arms on either side) he could only attempt to foster a sympathetic response in Moscow to his proposal that the SS-20's also disappear from the European stage.

Egon Bahr of the West German SPD is also an advocate of the zero-option. But Bahr has sufficient room for maneuver to be able to say that in the event of a failure in the East-West negotiations on this point, there will have to be discussions about maintaining sophisticated medium-range missiles at as low a level as possible. Den Uyl does not have this room for maneuver. The PVDA has almost no alternative. And this does not make Den Uyl's position in the Palme commission any stronger. Zero cannot be "stretched," not even at sea. And very probably not in the process of government formation either.

JAPAN'S SUZUKI, VAN AGT HOLD FIRST ROUND OF TALKS

OW181329 Tokyo KYODO in English 1253 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Excerpt] The Hague, 18 Jun KYODO--Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and his Netherlands counterpart Andreas van Agt agreed here Thursday on the need to maintain a dialogue with the Soviet Union while at the same time strengthening western military defense. The two leaders were meeting for their first round of talks here on the fifth leg of Suzukis European tour. On the world situation, the two agreed that the Soviet Union had outstripped the West in military strength and that this was the background to developments like the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. They agreed that the West must hasten efforts to strengthen its defenses in response to Soviet military power, while at the same time promoting detente and disarmament by keeping up avenues for dialogue with the Soviet Union.

Both prime ministers confirmed the need for concerted action by Western countries if the Soviet Union intervened in Poland. Suzuki later was received in audience by Queen Beatrix, after formally conveying an invitation to Van Agt for the queen to visit Japan in the near future.

Second Round

OW190039 Tokyo KYODO in English 0006 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] The Hague, 18 Jun KYODO--Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and Dutch Prime Minister Andreas van Agt held two rounds of talks here Thursday and discussed bilateral industrial cooperation andtrade as well as the international situation. Suzuki and his party later left for Paris, the last stop in their tour of six West European nations.

As a concrete example of industrial cooperation, the Netherlands prime minister said he hoped progress will be made in talks between Fokker-VFW B.V. and Japanese makers on joint development of a new commercial jetliner, code-named the "YXX." He said the Netherlands Government is giving all-out support to the project.

Suzuki refrained from giving a direct reply on the matter but said he will consult industry circles concerned following his return to Tokyo.

On Japan-Europe trade problems, Van Agt stressed his country's policy to observe the free trade principle to the utmost even under the difficult situation. He said European countries should not criticize the present state of the Japanese economy but regard its results as a lesson. He also said no restrictions against Japanese imports should be taken, in principle.

But the Netherlands prime minister requested that Japan exercise self-restraint in making exports in the weak European industrial sectors and that it open its market further, especially in respect to farm products.

Suzuki replied that efforts will be made so that surging exports to Europe will be avoided. He said both sides should make efforts so that European products can advance into the Japanese market.

On the political front, discussions centered on policies toward the Soviet Union. The two leaders confirmed that joint action should be taken in the event the Soviet Union intervened in Poland.

CHANCELLOR, DEFENSE MINISTER ATTEND EVANGELICAL CONGRESS

Schmidt on Disarmament

LD182220 Hamburg DPA in German 2108 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] Hamburg, 18 Jun (DPA)--In the view of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Europe's existence depends on "disarmament negotiations between the great powers, the USSR and USA, even if they distrust each other."

At a discussion as part of the 19th Evangelical Church congress at the Trinitatiskirche in Hamburg tonight, Schmidt emphasized that FRG policy is decidedly in favor of disarmament efforts. During the lively yet business-like discussion, the chancellor nevertheless defended the need to maintain the ability to defend oneself. He said that "anybody who cannot defend himself will suffer the fate of Afghanistan." When others increase their armaments and missiles are aimed at your cities, one cannot simply trust in God for protection. This kind of argument doesn't grapple with the real issue. Schmidt emphasized, however, that different political opinions can be defended from a Christian position.

At the same time, the chancellor spoke of the mutual fear of the USSR and the Germans after the bitter experience of the Hitlerite troops' attack on the USSR and the events at the end of the war. This experience made it necessary to talk and to listen to one another.

Apel on Soviet Threat

LD191235 Hamburg DPA in German 1148 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Hamburg (DPA)--Federal Defense Minister Apel warned against the threat to peace posed by the "imperial" USSR. Speaking at a discussion meeting held as part of the 19th Evangelical Church congress in Hamburg today, the SPD politician defended the West's armament efforts as a guarantee that peace, freedom and justice will not be lost as a result of the hegemony of a foreign power. "Nobody must mistake the Kremlin for the Vatican," Apel told his audience of approximately 7,000.

At the turbulent meeting which was repeatedly disturbed by a small group of demonstrators who threw eggs, jeered and blew whistles, peace researchers criticized the "madness of the arms spiral."

According to Apel, defense readiness is the precondition for making a peace policy credible. "Our security also rests on politicians guided by reason working for peace in Washington and Moscow." "Arrogant" reliance solely on human rational thinking is however a serious mistake. Every effort must be made therefore for arms control and a dialogue. The 36 years of peace in Europe since the end of the World War II are largely the result of the mutual deterrent, whereas the rest of the world has experienced more than 100 wars with 20 million dead. The future situation in Europe will be influenced more than hitherto by the increasing danger of war from the Third World. The present development in Poland, which was unthinkable 20 years ago, is a success of the West's policy of detente.

FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS WITH CLARK, EAGLEBURGER

LD181746 Hamburg DPA in German 1638 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 18 Jun (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Genscher today received in Bonn U.S. Deputy Secretary of State William Clark and head of the European Affairs Bureau, Assistant Secretary Lawrence Eagleburger.

According to a spokesman at the Bonn Foreign Office, Clark informed Genscher about his visit to South Africa and Zimbabwe. Other subjects were the Middle East situation, East-West relations and the prospects for a conference on disarmament in Europe.

The spokesman said that the two U.S. visitors also informed Genscher about contacts by the U.S. Government with the USSR concerning preparations for negotiations on medium-range missiles. The U.S. side made it clear that these contacts are being continued intensively so that when Secretary of State Haig meets his Soviet counterpart, Gromyko, in September, the opening of negotiations could be agreed upon. Clark and Eagleburger stressed the serious resolve of the U.S. Government on negotiations with the Soviets on medium-range missiles.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON HAIG VISIT TO CHINA

DW190837 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 19 Jun 81

[From the press review]

[Text] LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN notes: U.S. arms soon will appear in the country of the red mandarins, since Secretary of State Alexander Haig has paved the way on the occasion of his Beijing visit. A new military alliance is in the offing which will basically change the current parallelogram of forces. In view of this development, the Soviet Union naturally will speak loudly of a threat. America's armament under President Reagan is simply a reaction to the Soviet demonstration of strength.

BADISCHE ZEITUNG of Freiburg states: The Soviets are probably most concerned by what is brewing along their longest border with the People's Republic of China--namely closer military cooperation than could be assumed not too long ago. Even if one assumes that the Soviets knew of the existence of the listening post, the fact remains that U.S. policy vis-a-vis the USSR has drastically hardened.

AACHENER VOLKSZEITUNG writes: It isn't quite clear what U.S. Secretary of State Haig has really promised in Beijing and what he has just said somewhat more clearly for the Russian ears. It is certain, however, that after many years of bidding and passing, the Americans frankly play the Chinese card and that, most of all, the Red Chinese are prepared to play that card. An alliance between the billions of people in the country of the yellow dragon and the world's strongest industrial and trade nation cannot leave the Kremlin unconcerned. It may incite its encirclement fear or it may open preparedness to begin a new phase of negotiations with the West. One must hope that the strategists of German future will realize what it means to belong to a great alliance and not to be ignored in an alliance of interests. In this way, the German card could also take a trick.

CHEYSSON ON PLO, BANI-SADR, ARMS TO SOUTH AFRICA

NC181640 Paris AFP in English 1628 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 18 Jun (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson today made it clear that if Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasir 'Arafat came to Paris he would not be received "as if he represented a people or, even more, a state."

Speaking at a Diplomatic Press Association luncheon, Mr Cheysson said that though the European Economic Community considered the PLO as representing the Palestinian people, the EEC had never said it was "the" representative of the Palestinians.

Asked whether France would grant political asylum to Iran's hard-pressed President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr if he requested it, Mr Cheysson indicated that Paris would accept him and "he would be protected."

Mr Cheysson stressed that France would restrict arms' exports to certain countries "where they might be used in a way contrary to the major principles to which France is attached."

"Not a shell, not a bullet, not a military screwdriver, not a nut, nothing military, or of military origin, will be supplied to South Africa. That is categorical," he said.

Asked about possible Communist participation in the government, Mr Cheysson said that what was important was "the policy of France, France's fundamental commitments, and the men with most responsibility for conducting this policy."

"There will not be a single minister in the government who is not whole-heartedly in agreement with the major principles" defended by France, he added.

"The condemnation of Soviet intervention in Afghanistan has been made and will be repeated in irreproachable terms," and "the right of the Polish people to speak up without interference has been affirmed and will be reaffirmed ceaselessly," Mr Cheysson said.

FRANCE RENEWS PLEDGE TO CONTINUE ROK NUCLEAR DEALS

NC182214 Paris AFP in English 2121 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 18 Jun (AFP)--South Korea has been reassured today that France intends to honor previous pledges, including those in the nuclear field.

Both sides reaffirmed their determination to continue their cooperation, particularly in the nuclear sector, at a two-day meeting of the joint commission which ended here yesterday.

As Seoul was asking itself about the new French Government's position regarding earlier undertakings, French Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert confirmed that they would be carried out in full. He was referring chiefly to two nuclear centres which South Korea ordered in November.

After former French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet visited South Korea in the spring, following this big 4,000-million-franc (about 714-million-dollar) contract, the French Socialist Party had "strongly condemned a government which gives its support to a dictatorial regime for purely commercial reasons."

This political objection having now been removed, the Korean delegation, led by Chin Choe-Kang, director at the Planning Ministry, and France's team, headed by Michel Freyche, director of foreign economic relations, surveyed the prospects for bilateral cooperation.

The French (the Alsthom Company) still want the job of extending Seoul's metro (underground railway), to build another Pusan, in the south (Sofretu) and to supply two water-processing units (degrement). Alsthom also hopes to win the supply contract for the traditional part of the nuclear centers (turbines and machine rooms); in this case, it faces competition from U.S. and British firms.

The South Koreans, meanwhile, outlined their 1981-85 state development plan, insisting on their need for foreign technology in such fields as nuclear energy, electronics, shipbuilding and the motor industry.

The Korean delegation took advantage of its stay here to meet leaders of French companies and members of the French Employers' Organization [CNPF), headed by Philippe Duseigneur. It was due to leave Paris today.

Two-way trade between South Korea and France increased sixfold from 1974 to 1979. But French exports fell abnormally last year, leading to a deficit in the trade balance.

EGYPTIAN MINISTER DESCRIBES TALKS AS 'SUCCESSFUL'

NC181530 Cairo MENA in Arabic 1155 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 18 Jun (MENA)--Egyptian Defense and War Production Minister Lt Gen Muhammad 'Abd al-Halim Abu Ghazalah described his discussions with French Defense Minister Charles Hernu and senior military men as most successful and fruitful.

In an exclusive interview with a MENA Paris correspondent, Abu Ghazalah said that the French defense minister showed a very good spirit, affirming during the meeting that absolutely no problems exist concerning all Egypt's requests from France.

The Egyptian defense minister said that Egypt and France are cooperating in the field of war industrialization and have agreed to develop this cooperation in the aviation field in particular and various fields in general, while discussions are underway for the manufacture of Mirage 2000 planes. The two sides also are discussing the industrialization of certain types of French helicopters in addition to their cooperation in air defense, armored vehicles and tanks.

Abu Ghazalah said that discussions are taking place between the two countries on credit facilities which France can offer Egypt, preliminary to determining the types and quantities of arms and equipment.

Regarding the situation in the Middle East, Abu Ghazalah affirmed that a strong Egypt guarantees security and stability in the area and said that developing the Egyptian Armed Forces will deter any military adventure aimed at the Arab nation's security.

In his interview with MENA, the Egyptian defense minister stressed that Egypt has not and will not give up its Arab responsibilities and said that the Egyptian Armed Forces are always prepared to receive the cadres of these forces [as received] and are prepared to send their technicians and training specialists to various Arab states to contribute toward the development of their forces. He also stressed that Egypt has always performed this mission.

Meanwhile, Abu Ghazalah emphasized the need to achieve Arab solidarity as a basis for Arab security and the need to pay attention to the strategic view of the Arab security question, putting aside the peripheral and temporary differences.

The Egyptian defense minister called on the Arab states to strengthen and preserve their defense capabilities to protect against adventurers.

Abu Ghazalah explained that Egyptian manpower represents a rich, able and influential wealth which can achieve a great deal for the Arab nation. He added that this manpower is Egypt's ammunition and is capable of achieving miracles not only for Egypt but also for the whole Arab nation. The Egyptian defense minister again noted that a strong Egypt contributes toward a solution to the area's problems.

MITTERRAND URGES JAPAN TO SETTLE TRADE ISSUES

OW180123 Tokyo KYODO in English 0107 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Tokyo, 18 Jun (KYODO)--French President Francois Mitterrand said Wednesday he hoped to visit Japan between late this year and early next year.

Mitterrand, in an exclusive interview with the Japan Broadcasting Corporation (NHK), Wednesday at his official residence in Paris, also called on Japan to take wise and quick action to settle the mounting trade friction between it and other countries.

The president warned that France would not sit idly by and watch its legitimate interests being impaired by Japan's competitiveness, since the government is under an obligation to safeguard such interests, the country's employment and export trade. Mitterrand said this does not mean the institutionalization of trade protectionism, and that he welcomes the beginning of a dialogue with Japan.

The French president said the government would make further efforts to help French industries build up their competitiveness on the international market, NHK also reported.

Mitterrand also said he would like to step up France's cultural exchange with Japan.

DELORS CRITICIZES U.S. ANTI-INFLATION STRATEGY

NC171405 Paris AFP in English 1315 GMT 17 Jun 81

[By Jan Kristiansen]

[Excerpts] 17 Jun (AFP)--France today sharply denounced the "cruel" consequences for America's Western partners and the developing world of the current U.S. strategy for fighting inflation.

French Finance Minister Jacques Delors told the annual ministerial meeting of the 24-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) the present U.S. policy stance was entailing a "pernicious weakening of the economies of (America's) allies." He asked whether there was not a "contradiction" between this and Washington's "legitimate concern about a firmer contribution from (its) allies to the defence of the Free World."

Mr Delors said he feared the U.S. policies would plunge Western economies into a cycle of "stop and stop"--successive phases of recession, recovery and recession anew--which could lead to even more important damage.

There was a danger of "social and political destabilisation" in the economically weaker regions of Europe and the Third World, he affirmed, noting that the total debt service of developing nations had risen from 13,000 million dollars in 1978 to an estimated 32,000 million this year.

Mr Delors fully recognized there was a need for curbing inflation in the United States and other countries, but called for a better balance between priorities that would also take into account the need to stimulate investments and job-creation.

PRI'S SPADOLINI SUBMITS POLICY PLATFORM

AU181933 Rome ANSA in English 1928 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 18 Jun (ANSA)--Italian President Sandro Pertini announced here today that Premier-designate Giovanni Spadolini, secretary of the Republican Party, agreed to set up a new Rome government.

Withdrawing the reservations with which he accepted the job one week ago today, Spadolini disclosed the key points of the policy platform he has submitted to prospective government partners for negotiation. Spadolini offered the following suggestions for dealing with Italy's major problems:

The P-2 Masonic scandal: Legislation ordering the disbandment of secret societies according to indications written into the Italian Constitution.

Inflation: Moves between political parties, organized labor, business and the government to draft a plan of action designed to curb inflation, create jobs and investments, especially in the underdeveloped south, and trim public spending.

Terrorism: The creation of procedural devices to enable the courts and police to better fight terrorism.

Strikes: The enactment of regulations to govern civil servants' right to strike.

Referendums: A revision of 1970 legislation which allegedly paved the way for "a distorted use of the referendum system."

Civil Defense: The creation of a national civil defense commission answerable to the Premier's Office.

Energy: Endorsement of plans to go ahead with the construction of nuclear powerplants.

Foreign Policy: Confirmation of Italy's role as a Western democracy and its allegiances to NATO and the European Economic Community.

Bureaucracy: A reform of the Premier's Office.

Berlinguer Comments

AU181620 Rome ANSA in English 1545 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 18 Jun (ANSA)--One more step on the road to moulding a new Rome government is expected to be made today when Premier-designate Giovanni Spadolini formally withdraws the reservations with which he accepted the job one week ago.

Observers had the impression that Spadolini was ready to announce that he will go ahead and set up the first Italian post-war government not headed by a Christian Democrat after a series of meetings in Rome Wednesday with political party leaders.

Communist Party (PCI) Secretary Enrico Berlinguer voiced satisfaction yesterday that the Republican Party leader will most likely be Italy's next premier. But Berlinguer was quick to warn that the advent of a non-Christian Democrat to the premier's office was not enough to turn Communist opposition into support.

"...we want other conditions," he said, namely the removal of "the prejudicial exclusion (of) and discrimination against the communists." Some observers believed that Berlinguer's reference was to PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi's growingly anti-communist campaign style.

Craxi Support

LD181834 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] After submitting to the secretaries of the Christian Democrat, Socialist, Social Democrat and Liberal parties the outline of his program, Prime Minister designate Spadolini went to the Quriinal at 1800 where he dropped his reservations. Spadolini received positive indications in his talks yesterday and today. However, there are still some hurdles concerning the program and structure of the government and it is expected that from Monday the talks between the prime minister designate and the parties which intend to give birth to the government will be stepped up.

In a press conference today, Socialist Secretary Craxi confirmed his support for the bid being made by Spadolini and laid emphasis on the importance of serious programmatic negotiations to be carried out immediately after the administrative elections. Addressing himself to Christian Democracy, Craxi affirmed that it would be risky to say no to Spadolini.

In his program submitted to the parties, the prime minister designate lays out his political premises and, in four chapters, concentrates his attention on a number of priority topics: the moral emergency and institutional issues, the economic crisis and the fight against inflation, the social crisis and fight against terrorism, the international situation and currency upheavals. Finally, Spadolini points out that he intends to work in a spirit of programmatic continuity with the Forlani government.

Joint Communique

LD182110 Riyadh SPA in Arabic 1735 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Joint communique on visit of Saudi Arabian delegation led by King Khalid Ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz to Spain 15-18 June issued in Riyadh and Madrid on 18 June]

During the visit, his majesty had several meetings with his majesty the king of Spain and the head of the Spanish Government. Peripheral meetings also were held between the defense ministers, the foreign ministers, the Spanish economy and trade minister and the Saudi commerce minister, and the Spanish transport and communications minister and the Saudi posts, telephones and telegraph minister. These meetings were characterized by a spirit of cordiality and friendship. They covered bilateral relations and international matters of common interest. The two sides expressed satisfaction at the development of the excellent relations between the two countries in various domains, and particularly after the beginning of the implementation of the civil aviation agreement and the initialling of the agreement on cultural cooperation between the two countries. This makes relations between them grow deeper and deeper. The two sides discussed political and economic issues and showed determination to increase and strengthen cooperation in these fields, in the interest of the two fraternal countries.

The Spanish side reiterated its position on the unacceptability of seizing territories by force and the need for a peaceful, all-round settlement in the Middle East on the basis of the Israeli withdrawal from all Arab and Palestinian territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and the Palestinian people exercising its national rights, including the right to self-determination.

Both sides condemned the continuous Israeli aggressions in Lebanon and underlined the need for a solution to the Lebanese question on the basis of maintaining the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon, under the control of its national government.

The two sides strongly condemned the recent Israeli raid against the nuclear installations in Iraq as an act of aggression constituting a reckless violation of the most elementary rules of international law and posing a threat to international security.

At the conclusion of the visit, his majesty King Khalid Ibn 'Abd al-'Aziz expressed to his majesty King Juan Carlos and the head of the Spanish Government his thanks and gratitude for the warm welcome accorded to this majesty and the delegation accompanying him on the part of his majesty the king of Spain, its Government and people during this visit which reinforced and entrenched the cordial relations between the two countries at the official and popular levels in various domains.

Ministers' Comments

LD181714 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Dispatch from Madrid's Barajas Airport]

[Excerpts] At exactly 1110, the giant Saudi airways Boeing 747 took off from Barajas Airport, thus bringing to an end the visit by King Khalid to Madrid, which began last Monday.

Although political agreements were not signed during this visit by the heads of state, possible new agreements of a commercial and technological nature were put forward. At the end of the farewell ceremony, Spanish Economy and Trade Minister Garcia Diez said that progress was made concerning increased sales of Spanish cement and petrochemical plants and that oil supplies are assured.

[Begin Garcia Diez recording] I will specify the three points which I think are the most important at the moment. First, cement: We have arrived at the necessary agreements which will later be taken up by private concerns so that Spain will export up to 5.5 million tons of cement to Saudi Arabia in 1981. This will involve approximately $200 million.

Second, the petrochemical industry, in which the Saudis have some very ambitious plans, will be developed through the private sector and will lead to construction of dozens of petrochemical plants, not basic petrochemicals but (?those requiring greater processing). We also reached an agreement for a delegation from the National Institute of Hydrocarbons to go to Riyadh in the forthcoming weeks to study possibilities for cooperation in this field.

Then--and I am saying this now because I know you [journalists] are going to ask me--there is oil. As we told you the other day, we don't have problems with oil supplies in the short term. We have adequate supplies for the current year and the prospects for the coming year also are good. We agreed with the Saudi authorities to maintain the requests for stocks which we made to them in times of difficulty and to look at the situation at the end of the year to see if there is a need for additional supplies. [end recording]

For his part, Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs Perez Llorca said that there was almost complete agreement on international matters:

[Begin recording] Basically, there was Spanish reaffirmation of our basic viewpoints on the Middle East conflict, causing an in-depth explanation of the Spanish position; a very detailed Saudi report on the latest incident, specifically, the Israeli attack on the Iraqi nuclear center, on the enormous impact this has had among Arab countries; and the need for a clear line of action in the Security Council of which we are members.

We also spoke about other matters concerning the region in which Saudi Arabia is situated, that is, we spoke about the Iran-Iraq conflict, on which we received what I believe to be a very good report on the status of the conflict, on the situation in each of the two countries, on the council for cooperation in the Persian Gulf.

We then spoke about African problems, the (Maghreb) problem in particular. And we discussed the summit which is going to be held in Nairobi, which will be attended by Hassan II. I think there will be important talks between Morocco and Saudi Arabia before the summit, talks which could be decisive. [end recording]

The Spanish foreign minister said that in the coming days the Saudi and Spanish delegations will have important talks concerning the OAU conference and that there will be information on the struggle against terrorism.

The Spanish Government hopes for a comprehensive and peaceful settlement in the Middle East involving Israeli withdrawal from all Arab and Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem. The Spanish Government, according to the statement, supports the exercise by the Palestinian people of its national rights, including the right to self-determination.

PCE COMMITTEE REITERATES OPPOSITION TO NATO

LD181357 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 10-18 Jun 81 p 5

[Text] A meeting of the PCE Executive Committee's Standing Committee, chaired by Secretary General Santiago Carrillo, took place last Monday at PCE headquarters. Various aspects of the political situation were debated. As a result of the meeting, a communique was issued which reaffirmed the PCE's opposition to entry into NATO.

"But it believes that this declaration is insufficient," the communique states. "It is necessary to inform public opinion about the consequences which such a measure would have in the present Spanish and international situations."

"On the basis of the party's various work experiences in a number of provinces, the Standing Committee has acertained that the opinion exists in broad sectors of the country that this issue should be postponed or else put to a referendum. The Standing Committee has studied how party organizations can promote a task of information with respect to the masses and the latter's mobilization concerning the issue of entry into NATO."

MINISTER VIEWS JOB CREATION PROSPECTS

LD181259 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 14 Jun 81 p 41

[Joaquin Stefania Moreira interview with Spanish Economy and Trade Minister Juan Antonio Garcia Diez]

[Excerpt] Question: From the outset a distinction has been drawn between the psychological and the real effects of the national employment agreement. Mr. Minister, what are the main psychological effects?

Answer: One must indeed differentiate between the actual substance of the agreement and its psychological effects, the fact that an agreement exists among the government, the employers and the trade unions. It means that, when the country is confronted with difficult situations, it will respond well and that the institutions will jointly try to resolve the problems.

As far as the average Spaniard is concerned, the fact that we--and I use the plural to refer not only to the government but to all the interlocutors--have produced an agreement that was very difficult to negotiate, must give him hope.

Question: Is it this hope that has created a certain degree of euphoria over the past few days--and which is growing stronger with the improvement on the stock markets--in the country's economic circles?

Answer: Yes, I do believe that a number of positive successes have coincided and have allowed people to regain their lost hope. They have been reinforced by a figure who inspires respect and confidence, namely, Prime Minister Calvo Sotelo, and by a number of international factors that are not bad, especially compared with the past, such as the fact that oil prices will be stable or might even fall over the coming year, though personally I do not much believe that there will any major reductions. Every dollar off the price of a barrel is a major alleviation for us. Furthermore, the employment agreement is providing clear prospects in the economic field. Spaniards are now more optimistic than a week ago and I believe they have reason to be so.

Question: To return to the employment agreement and its direct effects, namely the possibility of creating 350,000 jobs. Why this figure?

Answer: The government's commitment is clear: to ensure that at the end of 1982 the overall salaried population is the same as now. It is estimated that this demands the creation of 350,000 jobs to replace the ones lost during this period. This is only an estimate, it might be possible to create fewer jobs if fewer are lost. The figure of 350,000 is the maximum forseeable loss of jobs. One cannot ensure in advance how these jobs are going to be created, but one can prepare an economic policy to facilitate it.

Question: What is this economic policy? How does it differ from the one pursued hitherto?

Answer: First, public investments laid down in the overall state budget, which is not yet complete, are expected to increase 150 billion pesetas, that is, about 23 percent more than in 1981. It must be borne in mind that we envisage a year with lower inflation, which means a larger increase in real terms. The agreement itself contains machinery designed directly to create jobs, for instance, subsidized contracts for the unemployed or training contracts for young people, on which specific agreements will be reached with the employers' organizations and the established machinery for retirement at age 64, which must be linked with the principle of replacing a retired man with another worker, and so forth.

Then there is what I consider the most important point: the private sector's capacity to create jobs, because we have created a more favorable framework than existed hitherto. The government is willing, though the text of the agreement doesn't say so, to make an economic policy commitment whereby credit to the private sector in 1982 will increase by 3 percent over forecast inflation, that is, there will be a 3 percent real increase in credit. This provides a very broad scope for private investment, which is in any case already reviving somewhat, though still at a modest level. We had positive gross capital formation in 1980 and the same will happen this year. To make possible the objective of a 3 percent increase in credit, it will be necessary to take action in various fields. The budget deficit must be kept at 3.6-3.8 of the GNP; we must also contain the growth in social security expenditure, to keep the increase below 14 percent, and if we achieve improvements in revenue collection that enable us to finance more spending, instead of the foregoing, we could lower the charges by more than the 1 percent which we pledged in the pact.

There is another point that doesn't appear in the text of the document and that is that in the new budget bill, we will introduce some tax incentives for saving and investment, specifically, a system of fixed-term savings accounts with tax relief for small and medium savers, which is a system that has been working in Germany for some time--and working quite well. Last, we will try to bring into line the various kinds of tax relief that currently exist for investors, which favor some kinds of investment much more than others. Of course, we will also try to ensure that the initial and final budgets are as similar as possible...

Question: What about financial costs?

Answer: At the moment, it can be said that January's unfreezing measures were not accompanied by a general increase in the cost of money. We believe that if a monetary situation such as the one envisaged is maintained, ther is not reason why there whould be any significant increases in the cost of money. It would be desirable for there to be a slight easing of the increase in interest rates, in which there is perhaps excessive competition to secure resources, which is exerting pressure on the system. But this easing must take place within the freedom of the market, without, of course, backtracking in the liberalization of the system.

Question: How is the public sector evolving with regard to job creation?

Answer: The public sector always creates jobs. It has created jobs in the administration and has created employment through direct and indirect public investment. It is most difficult to establish an employment figure, but what I can say is that, as a trend, considerably fewer jobs than are envisaged in the agreement will be created by direct public investment than by private investment. In fact, through subsidized contracts, we are talking in terms of tens of thousands of jobs...

FINLAND

SWEDISH PEOPLE'S PARTY DEFINES VIEWS ON DEFENSE

LD181315 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 15 Jun 81 p 8

[Excerpts] Karleby--The Swedish People's Party [SFP] gives its backing to the third parliamentary defense committee and its recommendations for how the defense forces are to be organized and funded. But at the same time the party stresses that foreign policy is nevertheless the main support for Finland's security. The party fixed its security policy position in the resolution approved by the party congress yesterday. This was a compromise based on the security policy debate which had taken place on Saturday.

The party also gives its cautious support to attempts to halt the export of arms, but for the time being the party is content to investigate the possibilities of reducing the trade in arms. Up to now the SFP has had the reputation of being one of the most important supporters of the armed forces and the defense committees. But this time, according to party chairman Par Stenback, the party was able to reach a less rigid position. "We were also able to bring out the peace policy nuances," he commented yesterday.

The intention had been to allow rank and file opinions to be expressed, because in the party leadership's view these had changed in recent years. And Stenback was satisfied with the outcome. "The views in the party were not as polarized as we had feared," he said. Now the SFP supports the ensuring of Finland's security principally through a far-sighted foreign policy. Armed defenses are the second ingredient in Finland's security policy, the party congress resolution states. The defense forces must serve Finland's independence and its international commitments. The resources which this requires must be proportionate to proven needs, according to the guidelines drawn up by the third parliamentary defense committee.

Without much discussion the SFP also reached a decision on the extension of the friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance pact with the Soviet Union. "The party congress stresses the importance of the continued maintenance of stable and secure conditions in the Nordic countries. The extension of the friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance pact is an intrinsic part of the work to maintain this stability. There is general agreement about this view. The extension of the pact can take place at a time agreed by both nations," the resolution states. The four major Finnish parties, the Social Democrats, the People's Democrats, the Center Party and the National Coalition Party, have already spoken out in favor of an extension of the pact, which at present runs until 1990.

NORWAY

USSR ACCEPTS JAN MAYEN 200-MILE ZONE REGULATIONS

LD181023 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 13 Jun 81 p 26

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Jan Mayen Zone Accepted"]

[Text] The Soviet Union has dropped its reservations regarding the Norwegian decision to establish a 200-nautical-mile economic zone around Jan Mayen, Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund told NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA. Frydenlund sees this as confirmation that the agreement Norway reached with Iceland last year on the establishment of the fisheries zone was necessary and correct.

The Soviet decision means that Norwegian regulations covering catches and other activities in the economic zone and on the seabed will be respected by the Soviet Union. As far as fishing is concerned, quotas and regulations will be discussed by the Norwegian-Soviet fisheries commission which deals with such questions as catches in the Barents Sea.

POLL SHOWS LABOR LEAD, SOCIAL DEMOCRAT DECLINE

LD181049 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 18 Jun 81 p 2

[Text] Labour's lead over the Conservatives has increased to 8 percent, compared with 3 1/2 percent last month. This is Labour's best figure since the Wembley leadership conference in January, according to the latest Gallup poll conducted exclusively for the DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The replies to Gallup's normal voting question were:

	Today	May	Apr.	End Mar.
Con.	29 1/2	32	30	30
Lab.	37 1/2	35 1/2	34 1/2	30 1/2
Lib.	18	18	14	18
Soc. Dem.	12 1/2	11	19	19
Other	2 1/2	3 1/2	2 1/2	2 1/2

Replies to what is now Gallup's customary subsidiary question, in which those interviewed are reminded of the existence of the new party, indicated continuing decline for the Social Democrats:

	Today	May	Apr.	End Mar.
Con.	28	28	25	25 1/2
Lab.	33 1/2	29 1/2	24	24 1/2
Lib.	14 1/2	14	12	12
Soc. Dem.	23	25 1/2	32 1/2	36
Other	1	3	1 1/2	2

A similar decline is shown when people are asked how they would vote if there were an alliance between the Social Democrats and the Liberal, with a candidate from only one of these parties standing in each seat:

	Today	May	Apr.	End Mar.
Con.	27 1/2	25 1/2	25 1/2	25 1/2
Lab.	33 1/2	28 1/2	28	24 1/2
Soc. Dem./Lib.	37	40	45	48 1/2
Other	2	3	1 1/2	1 1/2

It can be seen from the table above that in a little over two months support for the alliance has fallen 11 1/2 percentage points, while support for Labour has risen by 9 points, though the alliance still attracts greater support than either of the two main parties.

All the above questions were asked before Tuesday's announcement of an agreement in principle between the Social Democrats and the Liberals.

The "approval index," based on people's views about how the government is handling various areas of policy, continues to be bad news for the government throughout, though the extent of unfavourability is lessening.

Replies to the question: "In general, do you approve or disapprove of the way the government is handling...?" Where a plus sign indicates excess of approvers over disapprovers and a minus sign the opposite, were:

	Today	Mar	Sept 1980	Oct 1979
Law and order	+5	+20	+9	+33
Immigration	-7	-16	-13	+8
Old age pensions	-10	-10	-26	+25
Defence and armaments	-14	-13	+14	+11
Common Market	-15	-14	-14	-11
Housing	-17	-33	-16	+8
Health service	-20	-28	-36	-30
Education	-22	-37	-39	-36
Strikes and labor relations	-24	-25	-25	-14
Roads	-24	-32	-22	-19
Economic and financial affairs	-35	-41	-27	-13
Taxation	-44	-48	-19	+6
Cost of living prices	-50	-65	-56	-46
Full employment	-65	-70	-62	-14

Satisfaction with the three main party leaders and the government as a whole shows little change since last month.

The survey was based on a nationally representative quota sample of 982 electors in over 100 districts between June 9 and 15. The "don't knows" excluded from Gallup's usual voting question amount to 10 percent.

Details of the standard "popularity" questions were:

"Do you approve or disapprove of the government's record to date?"

	Today	May	Apr	Mar
Approve	26	29	24	23
Disapprove	63	60	67	67
Don't know	11	11	9	10

"Are you satisfied or dissatisfied with Mrs Thatcher as prime minister?"

TRADE OFFICIALS MEET WITH JAPAN'S TANAKA

OW190321 Tokyo KYODO in English 0258 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] London, 19 Jun (KYODO)--Britain's Trade Secretary John Biffen claimed Thursday that Japan, Europe and the United States should discuss ways to establish a free and open trade mechanism, Japanese officials said here.

Biffen told Japan's International Trade and Industry Minister Rokusuke Tanaka that oil-triggered inflation, slow economic growth and the competition gap between countries put the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) under strain.

If the situation is left as it is, Biffen said, there may arise dissatisfaction in some regions.

The British trade secretary told Tanaka that leaders of seven industrial nations should take up the matter at their summit scheduled for July 20-21 in Ottawa, the officials said.

Tanaka, who is now on a 13-day tour of France, Britain, the Netherlands, Belgium and Saudi Arabia, arrived in Britain Thursday from Brussels.

The Japanese minister told Biffen that trade protectionism cannot bail the world economy out of the present slump and that advanced countries should speed up lowering tariffs in line with a set of agreements negotiated through the Tokyo round of multilateral trade talks, the officials said.

On specific bilateral issues, Biffen asked Japan to curb its share of the British car market to about 10 percent in 1981. Japan's share rose to 11.9 percent in 1980.

Biffen also asked Japan to reduce Japan's import tariffs on whisky, biscuits, chocolate and other items.

In reply, Tanaka told Biffen that the auto issue should be discussed at the industry-level meeting scheduled in July.

Tanaka promised his efforts as a politician to settle the tariff issue because it is out of his ministry's jurisdiction, the officials said.

In a separate meeting, Industry Secretary Sir Keith Joseph told Tanaka that the British Government is ready to provide total cooperation to Japan's Nissan Motor Co. which plans to locate a car plant in Britain.

Tanaka asked Britain to remove its mandatory requirements for foreign corporations to procure parts in Britain and to export some products to other countries, the officials added.

SFRY'S VRHOVEC MEETS LABOR LEADER, DEPARTS

LD171756 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1704 GMT 17 Jun 81

During the visit Vrhovec and his host, Lord Carrington, discussed the state of international political and economic relations and the development of bilateral cooperation. Vrhovec also had talks with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

The talks between Vrhovec and Lord Carrington and their aides have been assessed as highly successful and a contribution to an even better mutual knowledge and the strengthening and expansion of the two countries' cooperation. The two sides stressed the need for achieving a more balanced commodity exchange and diversifying economic relations with new forms and contents.

Before leaving, Vrhovec met with Peter Shore, member of the British Labour Party's inner leadership. They exchanged views on some current international questions.

Peter Shore expressed interest in Yugoslavia's development and, especially, in the situation in Kosovo and Yugoslavia's current relations with Albania. He also acquainted Vrhovec with the recent initiative of Labour Party leader Michael Foot for encouraging the detente in Europe and starting talks on disarmament.

PARLIAMENTARIANS TO MEET 'ARAFAT IN BEIRUT

LD171451 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 13 Jun 81 p 2

[Text] London--A British parliamentary delegation left London for Beirut today in response to an invitation from PLO London representative Nabil ar-Ramlawi to meet with PLO Executive Committee Chairman Yasir 'Arafat.

The visit is part of a series of visits made by British Conservative and Labor Party joint parliamentary delegations at the request of the PLO since last year to acquaint themselves with the situation and to explore the facts.

The delegation will spend 1 week there. It comprises Robert Hicks, Tommy Benyon, William MacKenzie and Alex Lyon.

It is worth noting that a BBC 1 television team is accompanying the delegation to Beirut where it will hold a television interview with Yasir 'Arafat. The interview will be screened within a film on the Palestinian issue on BBC 1 Panorama Program on 29 June, the eve of Britain's assumption of the EEC chairmanship.

Meanwhile, the Soviet ambassador in London yesterday visited PLO representative to the United Kingdom Nabil ar-Ramlawi for political talks and to congratulate him on becoming the dean of the Arab diplomatic corps.

DAILY TELEGRAPH WELCOMES U.S. ARMS SALES TO CHINA

LD171227 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 17 Jun 81 p 18

[Editorial: "U.S. Arms for China"]

[Text] Yesterday's announcement in Peking by Mr Haig, the American Secretary of State, that the United States has agreed to lift restrictions on its arms sales to China, must mark an important new development in American-Chinese relations.

The restrictions hitherto in force limited sales to "non-lethal" military equipment, such as trucks and transport planes, and to so-called dual-use equipment having both military and civilian applications, such as radar.

Lifting the restrictions means that China can now submit requests for "lethal" weapons, like fighter aircraft or tanks. Any such request, Mr Haig said, would be considered on a "case-by-case" basis. China had not yet made any requests. A Chinese mission headed by the deputy armed forces chief of staff will make a visit (the second such) to Washington in August.

Both Mr Haig and officials travelling with his party were at pains yesterday to play down the likely results of the new development. They saw no great appetite for Western arms in China, and in any case questioned whether China would have the money for substantial arms purchases at present. The Chinese might not even submit any specific arms requests, Mr Haig remarked.

All that may be very true, but the American move is highly significant nonetheless. Last April, Mr Weinberger, defence secretary, had hinted that restrictions on arms supplies to China might be lifted if Russia invaded Poland. Now Mr Haig has gone ahead and done it anyhow. This is another refreshing sign that Mr Haig, clearly with President Reagan's support, believes that power--within the rules--is there to be used, not merely talked about.

The question of American arms supplies to Taiwan was not clarified in Mr Haig's remarks. Previously, China had said it would refuse American supplies if those to Taiwan were continued. There is probably a certain amount of face-saving all round going on here. At any rate, Mr Haig gave the impression that his visit, which included a meeting with China's top man, Deng Xiao Ping had been a success. The Chinese leaders may be equally pleased, for their own inscrutable reasons. Russia will not fail to take the point.

I SIMERINI REPORTS PLANNED KIPRIANOU ATHENS VISIT

NC181623 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 18 Jun 81 pp 1, 11

[From the weekly supplement: "Athinaiki Simerini"]

[Excerpt] Athens (by our representative, Persefoni M. Andhreou)--according to our authoritative source, President Kiprianou will arrive in the Greek capital on 1 July on his own initiative. Authoritative government circles in Athens have informed us that it was President Kiprianou himself who requested to make this visit at this specific time. They even stressed that as yet they are unaware of the true reasons for which President Kiprianou requested talks in Athens.

The same circles have rejected the report that there is a new Western plan for promoting a solution to the Cyprus issue, that Kiprianou will specifically discuss certain fundamental details of this plan and that he will ask for the views of the Greek Government.

Greek Embassy Comment

[Text] The Greek Embassy in a statement says it has been authorized to announce the following:

Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, who was informed about the report in a Cypriot newspaper today on the forthcoming visit of Cypriot President Kiprianou to Athens, stated that the content of this report is inaccurate.

President Kiprianou's visit to Athens is being undertaken on the expressed desire of both sides within the framework of regular contacts between the Cypriot and Greek Governments and specifically in order to examine prospects opening up for the Cyprus issue. The date was agreed after consultation between the two governments and specifically between Mitsotakis and Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

KIPRIANOU MOSCOW VISIT SEEN FAVORABLE DEVELOPMENT

NC190650 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 19 Jun 81 p 5

[From the comments column: "Kiprianou's Visit"]

[TExt] The finalization of President Kirprianou's visit to the Soviet Union has been an important development. This development, beyond the importance of Kiprianou's visit to Moscow itself, proves one thing: The postponement of the visit planned in the past had nothing to do with the Soviet attitude toward President Kiprianou. Regardless of how much the extreme rightwing and its organs tried to describe the postponement as they liked and to heavily exploit it, the finalization of the visit now overturns the extreme rightwing propaganda in the most categorical and official way.

Irrespective of what has preceded, the Cypriot people look to President Kiprianou's visit with optimism and expect that it will prove useful for the national cause. It is well known that the Soviet Union has always been a faithful ally of Cyprus at international forums, and it has courageously supported our just cause. During our difficult times as a state in the last 20 years, the Soviet Union has always stood on our side. We believe that in the future it will still more energetically help promote a fair solution to our problems. President Kiprianou's visit will definitely contribute decisively in this direction. Thus we shall await the results of his talks with the Soviet leadership with the certainty that something good will result for Cyprus.

Beyond the political significance of Mr Kiprianou's talks in Moscow, it is expected that his contacts will strengthen and develop the already multifaceted relations between the two countries, particularly in the economic field.

[Text] A statement released by the Central Committee of the socialist party EDEK says that it has expelled from the party some leftist and extremist elements which, as a result of their fractionist activities, have been causing damage to the party for some time.

The corroding activities of the expelled members, the statement says, have been particularly intense recently despite the efforts of leading organs of the party to make them come to reason.

Within this framework, Patrikios Pavlou and Nikos Kokkinos have been expelled from the party.

Included with the above are those others who have publicly stated their withdrawal from the party.

GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES SUSPENSION OF BASES TALKS

NC181208 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] The following government statement was issued at 1330 today:

The government decided today to suspend the negotiations toward concluding an agreement between Greece and the United States on the U.S. military facilities in our country. As is known, the government has taken a stand in favor of maintaining these facilities in Greece for the purpose of serving our national and allied interests. At the same time, however, it has sought to update their status, which is based on the 1953 agreements. In achieving this purpose, it has been necessary to confront many difficult and complicated problems of a political-military nature, which has led to arduous negotiations lasting many months.

The government statement continues: During these negotiations, the government exerted every effort to safeguard national interests--to establish a firm basis for our country's defense cooperation with the United States. However, the objective time limits being set by the term of the Chamber of Deputies, which has to ratify the agreement, have not allowed the negotiations to be completed and to reach a conclusion, although both sides have shown good faith and good will, and a considerable rapprochment between the positions of the two sides has been achieved. For this reason, the decision has been made to suspend the negotiations.

The government statement adds: The government would like to stress once again that it continues to attach particular weight to the continuation of defense cooperation between the two countries within the framework of the North Atlantic alliance. The status of the U.S. military facilities in Greece will continue to be in force until the government deals with the issue after the parliamentary elections. As a secure basis for Greek-U.S. defense cooperation the government will have at its disposal the guiding principles that were agreed upon between the two countries in April 1976 and that provide for the revision of the existing status.

Before issuing the government statement, the Government Committee met under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Rallis. According to information from reliable sources, both the decision to suspend the negotiations and the text of the statement were unanimously approved by the Government Committee.

Mitsotakis Comments

NC181927 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] Answering questions from newsmen, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis has stated that the decision to suspend the negotiations was made unanimously by the Government Committee. The foreign minister denied once again that there had been any disagreement and reiterated that the contents of the government statement had also been approved unanimously. He also said that he informed U.S. Ambassador in Athens McCloskey bout the government decision and assured him that the present status of the bases will be in force until the elections. Mr Mitsotakis added: There is no committment for the future government, because the preliminary negotiations on the agreement constitute documents and not commitments for any government or given facts for the future.

Mr Mitsotakis then made it clear that the time limits did not allow the continuation of negotiations, because the Chamber of Deputies, to which the agreement would have been submitted for ratification, would have been obliged to extend its work until the middle of July, a fact that would not facilitate the discussions in the middle of the [summer] heat. Moreover, Mr Mitsotakis made it clear that the negotiations for the new agreement will open after the elections from the beginning without taking into consideration any data from the negotiations that have been suspended.

In conclusion, the foreign minister said that, despite the suspension of negotiations, the defense cooperation between Greece and the United States as well as [U.S.] military aid to Greece will continue in conjunction with the request for the 7-10 ratio. He also expressed the conviction that there will not be any more general repercussions on the friendly relations between the two countries.

Mr Mitsotakis concluded: The Greek Government has made its decision guided by the national interest which dictated it.

Papandreou Reaction

NC182150 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] In a statement on the bases issue, the leader of the official opposition party, PASOK Chairman Papandreou, mentioned that if his party becomes the government then it will not recognize any obligations derived from negotiations conducted by the present Greek Government. Papandreou also mentioned that withdrawal of foreign bases from Greece can pass through some stagnation phase. This means, he added, establishment of a time-table for their withdrawal and guarantees that no aspect of Greek defense potential will rely on foreign bases.

Papandreou also mentioned that the Rallis government has the additional duty to proceed to an abrogation of the agreements which are in force today so that the new government may be given the opportunity for a new and totally different bargaining framework for the solution of the vital issue of foreign bases in Greece.

DEPUTIES RAISE ISSUE OF GREEK AREA OF ALBANIA

NC181540 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 18 Jun 81 p 10

[Text] Mr Kh. Ioannou, government party deputy for Ioannina, submitted a question in yesterday's session of the Chamber of Deputies which raised the issue of northern Ipiros [part of southern Albania composed of the provinces of Gjirokaster, Vlore and Korce]. In his question, the government party deputy requested that the government "reaffirm in every direction" Greece's immutable determination to realize its national rights in northern Ipiros and to take the appropriate measures to restrict the uncontrolled Albanian propaganda activities, both in the Greek and international sphere, against the Greek interests.

At the same time, New Democracy Party Deputy Kodhris submitted a question in the Chamber of Deputies in which he asked what specific action the Greek Government had taken to safeguard for the Greek minority living in Albania the application of the provisions on the protection of fundamental human rights of the UN Charter which until now have been violated.

In addition, the Association of North Ipiros Residents has issued a statement protesting the well-known report of the Albanian News Agency about the forging of the "great Albania" map by Yugoslavia. The association also considers it an outrage that Albania publicly denies its organized anti-Greek activities. The Association's statement notes that Albania continues to maintain 6 prisons for political detainees, 9 concentration camps for political detainees and 14 areas to which Greeks of North Ipiros are banished.

DE VOLKSKRANT SEES PROGRESS IN TALKS ON GOVERNMENT

[Own correspondent report: "Government Formation Progress"]

[Text] The Hague--Government formation leaders Lubbers and De Koning and the party leaders of the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA), the Labor Party (PVDA) and Democrats '66 made "considerable progress" on Monday [15 June] in their talks on a government accord for a new cabinet. In the negotiations on an important part of the paragraph dealing with financial, social and economic issues, which are expected to be completed today, Van Agt, Den Uyl and Terlouw reached substantial agreement on combating unemployment and on industry policy.

Another issue which came in for special discussion was the question of minimum wages and minimum social standards. Their retention is of particular importance to the PVDA. As yet the negotiators have not made any statements, but it seems that there will not be any insurmountable difficulties in the talks. The minima were discussed under incomes policy, and will probably be dicussed again when "social security" comes up.

The guidelines for Monday's talks were a protocol written by the two CDA negotiation leaders on the basis of the three prospective coalition partners' election programs. The CDA program stressed the difference between real minimum standards (for people who must support a family on one income) and individual minima (people who have to live alone on a small income). Like the CDA, the PVDA wants to preserve minimum incomes, but the Social Democrats do not want to make a distinction between real and individual minima.

The negotiation leaders' protocol based on the three parties' election programs leaves all avenues open for the party negotiators to reach agreement. The "exploration" stage, which was still going on last week, has ended; the talks are now aiming at reaching real results.

MILITARY COOPERATION WITH SURINAME TO CONTINUE

LD191533 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 12 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] Paramaribo, 12 June--Netherlands military experts will continue to travel to Suriname for short periods to give assistance to the army. Military attaches will be added to the staff of the Suriname Embassy in The Hague. These are the results of talks held in Paramaribo by a delegation from The Netherlands.

On 22 April, Suriname, much to The Netherlands' surprise, terminated the agreement on the basis of which a 10-man Netherlands mission was stationed in Paramaribo. However, Suriname has repeatedly indicated that it does not want to end military cooperation with The Netherlands.

The Hague, it would appear from the communique published yesterday, has affirmed its willingness to send instructors and other military experts to Suriname for short periods at the request of Suriname. Two other agreements, which date from 1976, covering the supply of military materiel and training in The Netherlands are still in force.

SCHMIDT COMMENTS ON STATIONING MISSILES IN FRG

LD201852 Hamburg DPA in Germany 1649 GMT 20 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 20 Jun (DPA)--In the words of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, the Federal Republic is and remains ready to agree to the stationing of new medium-range missiles on its territory and thus contribute to achieving a military balance.

At a European-American conference on current questions of security policy organized in Bonn by the Friedrich-Ebert-Gesellschaft, which is closely aligned with the SPD, the chancellor stressed on Saturday that the peace debate in the Federal Republic "has practially nothing to do with being neutral". He compared this conflict with the situation in the American states Utah and Nevada, where there is violent opposition to the intended stationing of new MX missiles.

Schmidt pointed to the necessity of military balance as the foundation of peace and emphasized that the Germans will contribute more than just words to this question. The Federal Republic will make its full contribution to this balance, both military and political. However, a precondition for agreement on the new weapons is that the Federal Republic isn't the only nonnuclear country of the North Atlantic alliance in which these weapons are stationed. "We don't want our country alone to be presented on a platter", the chancellor told the conference participants, among them several high-ranking security experts from Washington.

Schmidt stressed that military balance has to be complemented by a policy of cooperation with the East. He has the conviction that this idea is shared by the leaders of the other Western states, including U.S. President Ronald Reagan. Occasionally other tones are heard "from the sixth or seventh rank" of the U.S. administration. Sometimes it is necessary that this is made clear "by the first rank."

Referring to the 40th anniversary of the German attach on the Soviet Union, Schmidt said that Germany has the greatest responsibility to make sure that lessons are drawn from World War II. Germany will remain a source of argument and alternatives, the chancellor said in view of the critical debate on the NATO twin decision. But he is sure that the Federal Republic will stand by that which it had signed. Debate shows the strength of a deomocratic system.

SCHMIDT WRITES ON ARMS LIMITATION, USSR RELATIONS

LD191724 Hamburg DPA in German 1609 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 19 Jun (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has made it clear once again that the Federal Government energetically supports negotiations by the two superpowers on the limitation of Eurostrategic arms. In an article for SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG (Saturday edition), Schmidt wrote that he had known for 12 months that the Soviet head of state and party, Leonid Brezhnev, wanted to negotiate and for 6 months that U.S. President Ronald Reagan also was willing to negotiate. "We are pressing both sides to listen to us," the chancellor wrote.

Apparently in view of the increasing criticism on the security policy of the SPD-FDP government, Schmidt emphasized that "detente was and is a firm reference point for our peace policy." Protected by the anchorage within the Western alliance and in the European Community, the government and its allies sought cooperation instead of confrontation in relations with Soviet Union. Hence, it demanded controlled arms limitation and--whenever possible--lowering of the armament level. It was for that reason that the Federal Government supported the continuation of the SALT process. Without a dialogue between the U.S. and the Soviet Union, none of the smaller states would be able to make a general peace.

Schmidt recalled the German attack on the USSR 40 years ago which had brought unspeakable sorrow to the people of the Soviet Union. That which the National Socialist leadership of the German Reich tried to inflict on the Russians--dividing the state and dispelling the people--"subsequently, happened to our own people." These consequences and the memory of the war of attack started in the name of Germany still strain relations between the Soviet Union and the Germans. "There is still distrust and fear--on both sides," Schmidt wrote.

GENSCHER SUGGESTS EUROPEAN SECURITY COOPERATION

LD191520 Hamburg DPA in German 1357 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 19 Jun (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Genscher suggested in Bonn today that European cooperation should in future be extended from economic and foreign policy to include security policy. Genscher called for the creation of a "firm framework for the regular exchange of views on matters of security policy" so that the attitude of the 10 EEC countries also could be harmonized in this sphere and so that the European pillar of the Atlantic alliance could be strengthened.

Speaking on the occasion of the awarding of the gold medal "Fondation du Merite Europee" (Luxembourg) to Eberhard von Brauchitsch, the German industrialist and future president of the Federation of German Industry, Genscher added that the time is ripe for new initiatives toward achieving West European political union.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES PEACE OBJECTIVES

[Excerpts] Bonn, 21 Jun (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, on the occasion of the 40th anniversary of the 22 June 1941 German attack on the Soviet Union, reemphasized the Federal Republic's renunciation of force. He also made plain the Federal Government's determination to continue consistently on the path of detente and cooperation, which makes German policy calculable for all the states in the world.

Genscher said that the Federal Republic's objective is to safeguard peace through equilibrium at as low an armament level as possible. "Hence, arms control and disarmament are for us essential parts of our policy of actively maintaining peace." The foreign minister, on behalf of the Federal Government, appealed to all states to replace confrontation, polemics and striving for power with business-like dialogue, moderation and responsibility. The reuniciation of force and regard for the independence and autonomy of other peoples would have to take the place of the use of forces, a striving for hegemony and spheres of influence and the arms race.

The foreign minister also recalled the importance of the 1970 German-Soviet basic treaty, not only for relations between the two countries but also for safeguarding peace in Europe. It opened the way for the Federal Republic's treaty policy with its Eastern neighbors, for the 1971 four-power agreement and finally for the Helsinki Final Act. The hope of European peoples rests on the consistent adherence to and observance of all parts of this final act.

DIE WELT STRESSES NEED FOR U.S.-NATO COOPERATION

[Friedhelm Kemna commentary: "Insights"]

[Text] Caspar Weinberger's impressive vision of America's global military preparedness to act is outrageous to some people in this country.

It violates the doctrine which is popular in Europe that a worldwide containment strategy vis-a-vis the Soviet threat belongs to the vicious circle of the cold war; the Indochina war is being disrespectfully recalled in this connection. The theoreticians who claim that the North-South conflict is the reason for regional conflicts are irritated by the idea that Washington could be about to grab all the evil by its--supposed?--Soviet root.

That will inspire the spirit of the "peace factions" of the European government camps; maybe those who believe that Weinberger's dark diagnosis of the necessity to make up for the past 6 years with regard to military investments vis-a-vis Moscow was mainly motivated by domestic political urgency are right. Ronald Reagan's budget plans demand insight on the part of the legislative regarding the strategic necessity of military precaution, also insight that the ability of the U.S. Armed Forces is indispensable to face the Soviet power everywhere in the world.

The message to the allies is also unmistakable: America is determined to regain the respectful position corresponding to its world power role. It will play this role credibly only if it has sufficient military competence on all levels in a possible conflict. That means preparedness to avoid the conflict, to cut short Soviet or Soviet-triggered expansion attempts, be it in the Middle East, Asia, Africa or Latin America.

It isn't easy to implement such a program. Last but not least, the preparedness of NATO allies is necessary to add their own achievements reliably to the European "sector" of this strategy. A temporizing European attitude vis-a-vis America's playing a new world power role would be fatally dangerous and suicidal in the long run.

Mauroy News Conference

LD212221 Paris Domestic Service in French 2011 GMT 21 Jun 81

[News conference with French Premier Pierre Mauroy in Paris--live]

[Text] [Mauroy] [Passage indistinct] thus socialism remains true to its history. It has crossed the century at the [word indistinct] of the people, yet it has nearly always been in the minority. Never has it tried to achieve power by means other than democracy. History bears witness to this. Never will Socialists exercise the responsibility with which they have just been entrusted in any way other than by full respect for democracy.

Socialism's hour has come. We are heirs, but we are also to clear the path for the future. To be faithful to itself, the left must now bring into being all the commitments made to the country by Francois Mitterrand and ratified en masse by universal suffrage. So the presidential directions are clearly impressed on the leftwing parliamentary majority which has been elected this evening. They will be impressed in the same way on all those who wish or might wish to be associated in the actions of the government which has also just been approved by the country.

These directions have been debated for months.

The French people know what they are. First of all, it is a more united France, that is, the right to dignity for the poorest, for the worst off of our compatriots. It is a fairer France, that is, a country resolved to put an end to the privileges of another era, to economic, social and cultural inequalities which compromise its future. It is a powerful France, that is, a country grouping and reorganizing its economic forces and its production capacities. We have always said that this change involves the nation in mastering the financial and industrial means. This change will not be carried out in a day, but we are resolved, and I confirm this this evening, to start on it immediately.

It is a model France. Throughout the world the vote of the French people gives rise to a new hope. France has again found its true face, that of human rights. All together we will lay down the basis for a new citizenship. The republic will at last be the land of all. In its return to this initial truth, France will recover in the eyes of the people of the world its historical legitimacy as defender of human rights and champion of liberty and of citizens' responsibility.

For here we are seeing the renewal of democracy. Democracy is not only the institutions. First and foremost, it is a state of mind, a way of behaving, which subjects the state, the administration, the elected representatives and the citizens to respect for minorities. But is is also, as all French people know, respect for the law of the majority. We will be vigilant. No citizen, however powerful he may be, will be able to avoid the law.

The very scope of this evening's victory creates particular responsibility for the Socialists and for the left. We must be able to appreciate the strength of a victory, but also its limits. We are aware of this. To succeed in the great change which the French people have laid on us, we need the help of the greatest number. The republic which the French want will be a continuous creation. We have the will and the time for this. This is why I call for all those who wanted this evening's victory, and all those who want to be involved in the policy of renewal, which henceforth is that of France, to rally around President Francois Mitterrand.

[Question indistinct]

[Answer] That is a possibility. The Socialist Party and the PCF will discuss it tomorrow and each side will assume its responsibilities, which are part of the formation of policy. These belong to the president and to the person who will be appointed by the president as the premier of the next government.

[Question indistinct]

[Answer] I have just precisely outlined the responsibilities. [passage indistinct]

[Answer] Listen, the voters have just expressed themselves and thus I will be submitting the resignation of the government. [passage indistinct]

Jospin Statement

LD212038 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 21 Jun 81

[Statement by Lionel Jospin, first secretary of the Socialist Party, at party headquarters in Paris--live]

[Text] Ladies and gentlemen, the left, and with it the candidates of the new presidential majority, has just won an historic victory, a further victory. The Socialist Party is itself experiencing a great success since apparently it will obtain an absolute majority in the National Assembly on its own. Many other deputies of the left have been elected, and I would stress that the PCF apparently has obtained the maximum number of deputies to which it could aspire, following its results in the first round, thanks to what is thus a very remarkable transfer of Socialist votes. This result is going to provoke much joy in the country, but I believe that it should be known that beyond France it will have repercussions in Europe and in the world maybe just as strong as that of the 10 May presidential election. The French people have clearly confirmed and even amplified their vote of 10 May and their intentions as expressed in the first round of the parliamentary elections.

On behalf of the Socialist Party, I here thank the millions of men and women of all ages, of all conditions, manual laborers, intellectuals, men and women of the land or the country, tradespeople or craftsmen, who have by this vote given us their confidence. They have resisted the campaign of fear, the purely negative propaganda developed by the leaders of the defeated right. And after these two campaigns, the presidential and the parliamentary, following this long debate, we may say that they have made their choice in full knowledge, not in a [word indistinct] movement but, on the contrary, affirming a clear determination to desire a different policy for our country.

They have also, I believe, approved by this vote the initial measures taken by the government led by Pierre Mauroy in accordance with the commitments which were those of the president. Because of this broad majority of the left, we will have the means to act in time and in stability through the law on the basis of the assent of democracy. We will be able to apply the policy which is our own, that defined by Francois Mitterrand in his presidential campaign.

With the election of many new socialist deputies, a new political generation is being brought to the highest responsibility by the people. I believe that they will have the necessary qualities to assume that policy. In parliament, as in the country, we will give proof of the spirit of tolerance, of the desire for dialogue, which has always been a characteristic of the Socialists, not for some sort of political confusion, but with a sense of respect for the ideas of others. I hope that the new opposition will give proof of the same state of mind.

This evening there is joy again for millions of men and women in this country. Tomorrow, thanks to you, with you, we are going to work, act, transform, reassure maybe, but also involve you. You have expressed confidence in us: I think and believe that we will be worthy of that confidence. [applause]

PCF Statement

LD211950 Paris Domestic Service in French 1829 GMT 21 Jun 81

[PCF Political Bureau statement read by PCF spokesman Pierre Juquin at the party's headquarters in Paris--live]

[Text] The second round of the general elections has confirmed and amplified the results of the first round. The right has suffered a crushing defeat. The new National Assembly will include a large majority of the left and by itself the Socialist Party will have an absolute majority.

During the presidential election, the contribution of Communist votes was decisive to secure the election of Francois Mitterrand. In this round, once more these votes have made their contribution to the constitution of the new parliamentary majority. Everywhere the votes of the Communist electorate have gone to the candidates of the left in accordance with the national agreement reached between the PCF and the Socialist Party.

So now we have the conditions ready for the undertakings assumed during the election campaign to be honored, undertakings in the social and economic spheres, in the spheres of democracy, national independence, disarmanent and peace. The PCF reaffirms that it is determined to assume its rightful place, to assume all its responsibilities, in the implementation of the new policies. In this connection, the PCF once more declares that it is ready immediately to see Communist ministers sitting in the government.

Gentlemen: We have agreed that representatives of our party and of our Political Bureau will appear on all the television networks and at all the radio stations. They are now heading for these places and you will be able to question and talk with them.

Marchais Interview

LD212320 Paris Domestic Service in French 1909 GMT 21 Jun 81

[Interview with Georges Marchais, PCF secretary general, by Jean-Marie Cavada and unidentified journalists; Marchais is questioned during ongoing coverage of French election results--live in studio]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Marchais, is this a small victory or a medium victory for you personally and for the Communist Party?

[Answer] For me and for my part, it is a great victory. [laughter in the studio] Wait a minute. There is no doubt that some people don't realize that things have changed. I was 38 when I began the fight against the rule that has been defeated. That is 23 years, 23 years of unbroken struggle in order to put an end to a regime of personal power, to put an end to a regime that has led France to the bankruptcy that it knows today. I am not going to bore the television audience with the account of the policies of the majority; it is all too well-known by the men and women of France. Twenty-three years of struggle. Believe this: In my party, hundreds and hundreds of thousands have held meetings, organized gatherings, distributed leaflets and explained that it was necessary to beat this majority and to bring about some new policies. You must agree that the essential event for us, the decisive event of the era in which we live is to have beaten you, you Mr Bonnet [Christian Bonnet, who is also in the studio] of course, this is the main thing.

In today's victory, you must admit that the Communist Party made its contribution. Without our 4.5 million votes in the first round, Francois Mitterrand would not have been elected. Without hesitation, we called our people to vote. They heeded our call and contributed to the victory of Francois Mitterrand and to the defeat of Giscard. The same thing happened in the parliamentary elections. We have noted that based on the study issued by SOFRES a while ago, there was a gain of 1 percent between the first and second rounds in all the constituencies where we called upon the Communist electors to cast their votes for the Socialist candidates. Therefore, the Communist electorate has fulfilled its duty; I hereby offer my congratulations for this evening's new victory. I must observe that the conditions now exist for new policies to be implemented, policies that are desired by the majority of French men and women. In all spheres--in the social sphere, in the economic, in the sphere of democracy, in freedom, in citizens' participation in life at all levels, and finally in an international policy of peace, cooperation and disarmament.

With respect for our alliances, and this is something we have been saying for 15 years, the French Communist Party is ready. The Socialist Party has an absolute majority. This is clear, but we are ready to assume all of our responsibilities in the governing of France. We are prepared to assume our responsibilities in the government in order to bring about the policies desired by the majority of the men and women of France.

[Question] A meeting seems unnecessary before deciding on the Communists' place in a government?

[Answer] No, it is never unnecessary to discuss, but we must be agreed. We are Communists. I have explained that a hundred times; we want to remain Communists. We understand that they are Socialists; they want to remain Socialists.

[Question] Mr Marchais, precisely because of that, is there a sector of public action in which you feel more predisposed to have your share of government? For example, I don't know what.

[Answer] I will say this. Our two parties intend to maintain their own identities. We are Communists and we intend to keep our identity as Communists. On the other hand, it is a fact that there are differences on a certain number of questions between our two parties, different positions and attitudes. It's not surprising; it's in the nature of things. What matters is whether in the essential fields of the government--economic, social, democratic, foreign policy--whether there is enough similarity between our two parties, between the program that was proposed by Francois Mitterrand in his presidential campaign and by the Socialist Party in its parliamentary campaign, to allow us to govern together and to have an attitude of solidarity within the government--that is, to stand together, not because when you belong to a government (?you cannot only be in it for the things you agree with). So, can the problem of governmental solidarity be solved positively? The Communist Party's answer is yes.

[Question] Even in foreign policy?

[Answer] Even in foreign policy. Therefore, as far as we are concerned, we can see no obstacle to Communists participating in government. We are ready for this. Of course, our participation must be discussed [word indistinct]. That is obvious.

[Question] (?Will you be disappointed if you are not in it?) I don't mean you, Georges Marchais, but you Communists.

[Answer] I would be disappointed and I think there are millions and millions of French men and women who would be disappointed. Because without the 4.5 million votes, Giscard would still be in the Elysee. Without our votes today, you will still have the majority. So, the French would be disappointed if all the constituents of the left, if all the forces who contributed to your defeat and to the success of the left in order to create the conditions for setting up--and that is the crucial question--for setting up a new policy which will make it possible to solve the great questions being asked today. It is obvious that French men and women would be very disappointed if the Communists were put aside from managing affairs. Nor do I see why this should be done.

[Question] Mr Marchais, it seems that there is a problem today within the Communist Party because, between the two ballots, there was even talk among some of your leaders about a debate within the Communist Party. Well, what is going to happen in the Communist Party? And is your position of secretary general called into question and threatened today? Do you feel secure as secretary general of the Communist Party?

[Answer] My reply is to pay tribute to the hundreds of thousands of Communists and Communist voters who have fought within the framework of the presidential election, within the framework of the parliamentary elections, on the ideas and positions of their party as they have been democratically established at our congresses.

We shall allow neither the bourgeoisie nor its spokesmen, not the media, nor anyone else to intervene in the internal debate of the party, which affects the Communists. That is pluralism. I have never interfered in the internal life, I have never interfered in the problems affecting the internal life of other parties, whoever they may be. If one supports pluralism, one must respect it. I am for it; I respect it in others and I ask for it to be respected in my own party.

[Question] The question was whether you felt weakened this evening after having lost half of your deputies' seats, Mr Marchais. A month ago you had 86, this evening you have 43.

[Answer] That is the second aspect of the question. My reply to the first aspect of the question is this: We will have this debate; we will have this democratic debate on the foundation of the issues. We will examine our policy and how we are going to apply it. We will discuss what must be done to continue to go forward. But I am concerned, this democratic debate will be held in the absence of all external pressures. Everyone must realize this because otherwise there can be no pluralism.

[Question] Do you personally feel shaken by the fact that half of your deputies have been beaten? That is the question.

[Answer] I have a problem. [laughter] It is clear that we are going to examine the results and we are going to discuss them. We have already given the first part of a reply, but this first part of a reply is not new.

We have always fought against this constitution. We have fought against the election of the president by universal suffrage. Francois Mitterrand also fought against it in his time. We always felt that this system of elections leads to a regime of personal power and is profoundly antidemocratic, called into question the role of the executive--that is of the government--and called into question the role of the legislature--that is of parliament--and that it is harmful to the political parties. There is no system in Europe which is identical to that which we have here. This system only exists in certain countries in Latin America; it is a Machiavellian system which leads systematically to the elimination of the political parties. That is clear. Clearly, that system of elections does not explain everything. Consequently, we are going to have to discuss our policy. But it is my deep conviction that from the time of the 22d and 23d congresses, we have basically been pursuing a policy which it is fitting to implement, but to implement taking into consideration a certain number of facts about political life. That is the way I see things. As far as the secretary general of the party is concerned, I am elected by the party's Central Committee. The Central Committee can at any moment, if it so wishes, decide to change the secretary general; but that is quite secondary.

You prefer to speak about those things rather than about what seems to me to be the essential things: the defeat of the right, the victory of the left, the need for Communist ministers, and, above all, the implementation of a new policy which will allow an end to unemployment [words indistinct] that is the problem.

Chirac Statement

LD220609 Paris Domestic Service in French 1858 GMT 21 Jun 81

[Statement by RPR leader Jacques Chirac at party headquarters in Paris--live]

[Text] The results of the second round of the parliamentary elections are no surprise. The French people have confirmed the choice they made last Sunday. They have given a free hand to the president they elected on 10 May and he now has every means to conduct the policy for which he is now the only person responsible.

As for me, I have fought with all my might. I have given my aid to all those who wanted it, without taking any partisan considerations into account, and with no thought but the future of our France. But not enough French people heard our voice. The desire for change which I had felt for several years was stronger and it won over all other considerations.

Let us admit, the majority of French people have turned away from the ideas which for 20 years inspired our action for France. It was to better defend these ideas that I decided to take up public life. I will stick to this choice and this test will only serve to strengthen my convictions.

France has now set off down a path on which I am sure it will find only disappointment. Socialist methods will fail here, as they have failed, I fear, everywhere else. A period of the history of the Fifth Republic, notable for exceptional economic and social progress, has ended. Another period is beginning and, in this new situation, we shall manage to pass the test by still caring above all for the good of our country. We will do everything in our power to avoid compromising it and we will do so with the millions of men and women who voted for us and who will, I am sure, be even more numerous tomorrow, and to whom I want to offer my most sincere thanks this evening.

We must also draw lessons from what has happened. We will look for the causes in ourselves, not elsewhere, as some might be tempted to do. We did not manage to convince the French people that we could give them the change for which they hope.

All this invites us to reflection and to a profound renewal. We will devote our forces to this with resolution and for this we appeal without any bias to all those of good will. We will be all the stronger for being more open and more welcoming. By so doing, we will be able to look into the future with confidence. At this price, the French will again turn to us, I am sure, and we will be able to respond to their expectation. More than ever we hear and we will embody both courage and hope. Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you.

MITTERRAND EXPLAINS DOMESTIC, FOREIGN POLICY

OW191543 Tokyo NHK Television Network in Japanese 1208 GMT 18 Jun 81

["Exclusive" interview with French President Francois Mitterrand by NHK correspondent Hisanori Isomura on 17 June "on the eve of Prime Minister Suzuki's visit to Paris" at Mitterrand's official residence--recorded; interview conducted in French with summarized Japanese translations provided in subtitles on the screen; following translation is from original French text]

[Text] [Question] Could you first of all, Mr President, briefly explain to Japanese viewers the major bases on which you will anchor your actions, first in the domestic field and then at the international level?

[Answer] My election and that of a parliamentary majority favorable to my objectives allow us in effect to predict serious changes. First on the social aspect, I think that the French people need to feel nearer to the power, nearer to their representatives, nearer to the president. There was a kind of separation between the ruling class and the whole of the country. This posed a problem to communication and confidence. And, of course, this confidence will only be possible through legislative measures that will allow us to reestablish a greater equality among the social strata, among socioprofessional circles. This need for equality, at the same time, this need for freedom, for cultural expression, in the expression of thought in all forms, will be brought into play by my government. And they have already been brought into play since the first meeting of this government immediately after its establishment, that is, a great social effort, a permanent consultation with trade unions, workers, peasants, handicraft and commercial organizations, with family and agricultural associations and with credit unions against unemployment and inflation.

Inflation is a tax on the poor and a bonus for the rich. Surely this is not suitable. We are in the Western environment and the whole Western world today suffers from these serious ills. But I think that our national effort has not been sufficient. Therefore, the problem of social equality, the problem of a greater freedom of expression, the primary problem of the struggle for employment, of the struggle against inflation, independently from many other questions that I could deal with, mark the directions of my government.

On the external aspect, there will certainly be continuity on major questions. We are in the European Common Market. We will remain in it. We will even try to give a little more reality to the Agricultural Common Market. We are in an alliance, the Atlantic alliance, a defense alliance, and we will remain in it. We will seek to have good relations with our allies. We are not in an integrated military organization of the alliance; we will not join it. And we will look anew at the problems of the Near East because we are between our traditional friendship for the Arab countries and our concern for Israel's security.

From this point of view, we will maintain the major principles which have, moreover, been expressed by most UN resolutions. We have made contacts--I have made them myself--with China, and I would like--I will certainly talk about it in the course of the conversation--to have important points of contact and understandings with this great country, which is Japan.

[Question] Mr President, within what we call industrialized democracy the triangle formed by the United States, Europe and Japan, exists which has a side that is rather fragile and underdeveloped, that of Europe-Japan relations. Do you have any suggestions to make on this subject?

[Answer] That is true! Quite true! However, one needn't look for those who are responsible for this fault. Anyhow, it is advisable for Europe and Japan to find firm grounds for understanding. I will always appeal to Europe to follow this path. We have to protect legitimate interests. We have to protect our workers and their jobs and thus protect our exports. We should see to it that our trade will not be sunk by Japanese competition. This doesn't mean that we would want to organize protectionism. We ourselves within Europe, within our Community, which you know is privileged, simply have worked out protection clauses. This could be for textiles, iron smelting, some agricultural products, wine, within the Community. Why wouldn't you want us to have protection clauses, to negotiate protection clauses with countries outside the Community, particularly with friendly countries which must understand our needs? Therefore, I am all in favor of the establishment of talks with Japan on a European level, on the level of France, and we must talk seriously among ourselves so that one's interests will not be contrary to that of the others.

[Question] Perhaps you are aware of the fact that the cultural and trade exchanges between France, which is the fourth or fifth economic power in the world, and Japan, which is the second power, surpassing even the Soviet Union, have a value of only about 1 percent of their respective volumes? Would you comment on this subject?

[Answer] I don't think that our cultural exchanges could be confined to this modest percentage. I believe they are stronger in reality. I was very satisfied to note this during (?my recent trip to Japan). I have Japanese friends. I know many French people who maintain active relations with Japan. I believe that there is keen interest on the Japanese side in all forms of French culture and in the development of these exchanges. And I believe that a better understanding of Japanese culture is developing in France. I believe that the French-Japanese cultural relations are well above 1 percent. Still one must improve them.

As for trade, it is true great difficulty exists. One must also say that we are all desirous of ameliorating this situation, but we do not want to see ourselves succumb to the thrust of Japan's great capacity. This capacity has its own merit, but in the difficult period that we are in, we do not want to see our automotive or other sectors of our industry exposed to great risks because of exchanges with Japan that will develop. Thus, what I hope for is a wise and rapid approach, but I will meet your responsible officials and I will have the opportunity to talk with them in the best spirit. But, you will understand that my first concern is to defend France's interests.

[Question] On the Japanese side, there are people and there is a current of public opinion that are very concerned about the de facto protectionism adopted by France or a hunt for a scapegoat. [Mitterrand interrupts at this point]

[Answer] Yes, yes! The word protectionism is not accurate. One shouldn't mix protection with protectionism. Protectionism is a doctrine, a system. To protect, to assure safeguards, to see to it that our quite legitimate system for defending our interests is not overwhelmed. (?This) I do not want to make into a system. This means that I am ready to discuss with Japan, especially within the framework of Europe but also on the French aspect, all measures of compensation and equilibrium that will permit us to protect each other's interests.

[Question] Finally, Mr President, I have a very concrete question to ask you. Despite the relations maintained for more than a century between France and Japan, a president of the French Republic has never made an official trip to Japan. Would you wish to become the first to accomplish this historic voyage during your 7-year term and more precisely at the beginning of this one?

[Answer] I wish that without any doubt. I will certainly make this trip if they kindly extend an invitation. And if so, I hope to go there soon. The first months of my mandate will keep me in France for a little while. I already have some obligations that are mostly related to international conferences already decided by my predecessors. But, as soon as I have a free moment, this will be at the end of the year or at the beginning of next year, I should be very happy to go to your great country.

[Question] On behalf of all my viewers, I thank you very much, Mr President.

[Answer] It is I who thank you.

REPORTS ON JAPANESE PRIME MINISTERS' VISIT

Mauroy-Suzuki Meeting

OW191319 Tokyo KYODO in English 1229 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 19 Jun (KYODO)--French Premier Pierre Mauroy Friday strongly urged Japan to purchase enriched uranium from France and fulfill its original airbus 300 purchase contract.

Mauroy's requests were made to Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki when the two held a breakfast meeting in the French Premier's official residence. The French premier apparently made the requests to rectify the imbalance in bilateral trade between Japan and France. The imbalance in the bilateral trade, which was dollar 317 million in 1979, more than doubled in 1980 to reach dollar 726 million.

The airbus 300 request was made because Toa domestic airlines plans to refuse delivery of some of the nine airbus 300's it originally promised to purchase.

Suzuki, who arrived in Paris Thursday night on the last leg of his six-nation tour of West Europe, met Mauroy for about two hours over breakfast from 8:30 am Friday, prior to a meeting with French President Francois Mitterrand.

During the meeting, Mauroy said France: 1) Continued to attach importance to the Atlantic alliance; 2) Attached importance to the maintenance of peace, control of armaments and the north-south problem; 3) Upheld the principle of free trade; and 4) Planned to place greater importance on economic growth than in combating inflation and would attempt to increase employment opportunities.

The two premiers agreed in principle to establish a new committee similar to the wisemen's committee set up by Japan and the United States in order to strengthen economic relations between Japan and France.

Stressing France's fundamental diplomatic policy of safeguarding peace and freedom, Mauroy took up the Afghan and Poland issues. He expressed serious concern over the situation in Poland.

The breakfast meeting was attended by Japanese Vice Foreign Minister Masuo Takashima and French Minister of Economy and Finance Jacques Delors.

Mitterand-Suzuki Talks

OW191603 Paris AFP in English 1515 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 19 Jun (AFP)--Talks between Japan's Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and France's President Francois Mitterand were held here today in "an altogether excellent climate", presidential spokesman Michel Vauzelle said.

Mr Suzuki recognised "the disrupting nature of an unduly concentrated export effort involving a small number of products", Mr Vauzelle said, commenting on the working meeting and lunch between the two leaders.

Mr Mitterand told Mr Suzuki: "I admire your country but I am responsible for my own", the spokesman said.

Mr Vauzelle confirmed that three working groups will be established to develop cooperation between the two countries. Two of them, composed of eight officials, will be responsible for promoting trade and industrial cooperation. Mr Vauzelle said that development of maritime resources and the application of biotechnology were two items which received particular attention in today's talks. The third group will be set up at Mr Suzuki's suggestion in the form of a committee of "wise men" charged with examining "the long-term outlook of the two countries' economic relations".

The spokesman said that cultural questions were raised during the talks, adding that the two leaders "agreed to encourage their two peoples better to understand each other's language, civilisation and social evolution".

Mr Suzuki invited Mr Mitterand to visit Tokyo, and the French president agreed in principle to go during 1982, Mr Vauzelle said.

After the talks, France's Economy Minister Jacques Delors, who attended the lunch, stressed that "the Japanese want to work together with France ahead of the Ottawa summit". This summit of leading industrial nations is scheduled for the end of July.

Mr Delors declared: "We are ready for any concerted action with Japan on the effect of America's policy over interest and exchange rates, as well as on the establishment of new rules for the world economy".

Also present from the French side at the lunch were External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson, Overseas Trade Minister Michel Jobert, and Industry Minister Pierre Joxe.

International Issues Discussed

OW200105 Tokyo KYODO in English 0047 GMT 20 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Paris, 19 Jun (KYODO)--Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki officially invited French President Francois Mitterand to visit Japan during their meeting here Friday. Mitterand said he wanted to visit Tokyo in the not so distant future.

During the hour-long meeting, the Japanese and French leaders agreed on efforts for closer relations between the two countries.

President Mitterand briefed Suzuki about French diplomacy, saying that France continues to be a loyal member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Though France has a traditional friendly relationship with the Soviet Union, it will place priority on its partnership with Western allies and Common Market nations, Mitterand told Suzuki.

Regarding the Middle East, the French president said Israel's right to exist must be recognized. He stressed the importance of the Third World nations' economic development, saying that this problem would be taken up at the Ottawa summit in July.

In reply, Suzuki explained Japan's diplomacy putting stress on efforts for peace. Suzuki said that while keeping military balance between the East and West blocs, dialogue with Moscow should be continued. He called for tighter management of arms to lower the East-West military balance.

Mitterand did not make specific reference to trade friction between Japan and France. But he wanted Japan to see the trade friction from a political point of view. Suzuki said that Japan would avoid "a flood of exports" to France and other EC countries.

Later in the day, Suzuki met newsmen and said he believed that his tour of six European nations contributed to reinforcing Japan-Europe relations.

Touching on economic assistance, Suzuki criticized countries receiving foreign economic aid while developing nuclear weapons. This suggested that Japan would take much more care about its economic assistance to developing nations which show a move toward nuclear arms development.

Suzuki News Conference

OW210303 Tokyo NHK Television Network in Japanese 2249 GMT 20 Jun 81

[Report on news conference held by Japanese Prime Minister Suzuki in Paris--recorded]

[Text] Prime Minister Suzuki last night (Japan standard time) met with French President Mitterrand, thus winding up his scheduled six-nation European tour. Throughout his current European tour, the prime minister has succeeded somewhat in promoting intimate dialogues among Western nations. However, as far as economic relations are concerned, the European countries have shown a strong dissatisfaction, underscoring the necessity to make unceasing efforts to deepen mutual understanding.

[Begin Suzuki recording] All these countries hold the basic opinion that the free economic system must be maintained and further developed. They hold this opinion as a matter of principle. But when it comes to specifics, each of them has its own problems. For this reason, I proposed dispatching a large government-level delegation led by Inayama, chairman of the Japan Federation of Economic Organizations, this fall to Europe to discuss details of a wide range of problems--not only commerce and trade but also industrial cooperation, investments in various fields, technical cooperation, joint research and development. My proposal has been warmly received.

The first thing we have to do is to place a comprehensive ban on nuclear tests, including underground tests. I want to strongly call upon the United Nations, the Disarmament Committee in particular, to realize this ban. Another task is for Japan to take the lead in appealing to those countries which have not yet signed the nuclear nonproliferation treaty to sign it--the more, the better.

As for the auto issue, as you know, Japan recently adopted a measure to voluntarily limit its auto exports to the United States to 1.68 million cars in 1981. This figure is based on the actual number of cars exported in 1979. As for auto exports in 1982, Japan will discuss this with the United States to set the number, taking into account various factors such as the U.S. business trend in 1981 and the auto supply demand situation. Canada and the EC nations also made requests regarding Japanese auto exports. We have had ample opportunity to discuss the matter and this have reached a general agreement. Therefore, I don't think the auto issue will be taken up at the coming Ottawa summit.

I have just toured Europe, meeting with its government leaders to discuss basic policies. Throught these meetings, we have deepened mutual understanding. I believe this will be helpful in implementing our policies toward these governments. Under the free economic system, however, corporations and businessmen actually conduct trade and commerce. Therefore, I consider it important to realize private exchanges and contacts at all levels in addition to exchanges between leaders. I think it necessary to deepen mutual understanding and resolve misunderstandings through these exchanges and contacts. [end recording]

PRESIDENT SENDS MESSAGE TO ARAB LEAGUE OFFICIAL

LD201858 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 20 Jun 81

[Text] In a message that he sent to the secretary general of the Arab League, President Mitterrand stated that France remains convinced that the return of peace to Middle East necessitates a just and lasting overall settlement which would be acceptable to everyone including the Palestinian people. It is in this direction that France will continue to exert its efforts, especially within the EEC. France, concluded the president, knows that it can depend on the esteem and friendship of the Arab peoples to which it is bound by proximity, history and common interests.

COMMUNIQUE PUBLISHED ON FRANCE-SENEGAL TALKS

AB191143 Paris AFP in French 0949 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 19 Jun (AFP)--Senegalese Prime Minister Habib Thiam was received on Friday by his French counterpart, Pierre Mauroy, who assured him that France will honor all its committments toward Senegal.

The French official communique published after the talk stressed the exceptional atmosphere of cordiality which characterizes relations between France and Senegal.

The talks between the Senegalese prime minister and his French host confirmed that both parties hold a broad similarity of views on principal international issues, particularly those related to Africa and the Third World, the communique added.

Thiam enumerated the problems facing his country following the deterioration in trade terms, the very poor groundnut harvest and the high cost of energy; these problems include the balance of trade and the efforts to improve them being undertaken by the Senegalese Government, the communique said.

In particular, Senegal is seeking 30,000 CFAF [figure as received] in French aid in various forms.

Mauroy assured his counterpart that the French Government will honor its commitments resulting from the friendship between the two countries. To this end, a French mission will to Dakar in July, it was earned.

Thiam, who arrived in France on 14 June for a working visit, was received by President Francois Mitterrand, to whom he delivered a message from President Abdou Diouf.

CHEYSSON COMMENTS ON RELATIONS WITH SPAIN

LD182324 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Excerpts] What France wants at the moment is normal relations with Spain and not ambiguous relations as before.

This statement was made today in Paris by French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson, after having confirmed the 2 July visit to Paris by Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo. The French foreign minister also said that relations between the two countries will not be put right in a few hours, but they should be placed on such a basis that they embrace all kinds of subjects--not only day-to-day matters--no matter how difficult they might be.

On the question of extradiction, Cheysson said that this issue will not be resolved by the time of Calvo-Sotelo's visit because the French Government has 15 extradiction requests to deal with and not all of them concern Spaniards. He said that after each case is studied, an effort to resolve the matter will be made in 3 months.

DELIVERY OF IRANIAN PATROL BOATS TO BE COMPLETED

NC201230 Paris AFP in English 1216 GMT 20 Jun 81

[Text] Cherbourg, northern France, 20 Jun (AFP)--The last three of twelve patrol boats ordered by the late shah's regime will sail for Iran before the end of the month, sources said here today.

Three Iranian crews have already joined the vessels and though maritime authorities refused to comment or reveal a date they did not deny the delivery.

The three missile-launchers have been in dry dock since 1978, under guard to prevent the Iranians from "kidnapping" them as the Israelis did with similar French-built craft in 1969.

The first nine vessels were delivered on schedule but the three were held up first owing to indecision in Tehran, then financial problems and finally they were blocked indefinitely under the Western embargo called after the seizure of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

The three patrol boats, presumably to be thrown into the dragging conflict with Iraq, will first call in Spain for undisclosed technical reasons. The launchers are each armed with a 76-mm gun and four Otomat missiles, with a range of 160 kms (100 miles).

News Conference

AU191928 Rome ANSA in English 1915 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 19 Jun (ANSA)--Joint Western moves to resolve the monetary crisis sparked off by the soaring strength of the dollar will be one of the major planks in the policies of Italian Premier-Designate Giovanni Spadolini's proposed new government, Spadolini told foreign journalists at a press conference here today.

Spadolini, who also voiced optimism on his chances of knitting together a new government alliance, said other major policy goals were firmness in the battle against inflation and terrorism and confidence in achieving clean government in Italy.

In his press conference, the Republican Party leader also denied that, in discussing his mandate, he had ever spoken of forming a "government of technicians", or hinted that he planned playing down the role of the parties in the new coalition. Spadolini also announced that he would be seeking a "better relationship" between the government and the opposition, in particular the Italian Communist Party, whose "great respect" for his government-formation attempt, so Spadolini said, "I fully reciprocate." Spadolini added that his cabinet will be named after his consultations planned next week, but he said that the presence of both Christian Democrat and non-Christian Democrat forces was "essential and irrenounceable."

On the P-2 Masonic Lodge scandal, the premier-designate said he favors legislation to disband the lodge after agreement among leading jurists that it is a secret association and, as such, in conflict with the Italian Constitution.

RED BRIGADES SLAY POLICEMAN, CONTINUE' OFFENSIVE'

AU191958 Rome ANSA in English 1925 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 19 Jun (ANSA)--A group of six to eight armed assailants, including a woman, shot and killed the deputy police chief of one of Rome's largest suburbs today and seriously injured his driver. Forty-four year-old Sebastiano Vinci, married with no children, was riddled with bullets not far from the police station where he worked in the heavily-populated Primavalle quarter on the outskirts of the capital. His driver, Pacifico Voutto, was seriously injured and rushed to the hospital.

Two of the assailants manned the getaway car while the others surrounded Vinci's police car at an intersection and opened fire on the officer and driver. Nine cartridges and a bullet fired from a 357-magnum hand-gun were found on the pavement at the scene of the crime.

Men at the Primavalle police station reported today that graffitti threats against Vinci's life had appeared on neighborhood walls in recent days.

The slaying was later claimed by the Red Brigades in an anonymous phone call to a local daily describing Vinci as an "agent of counterrevolution," as the same urban guerilla organization made a further shooting attack elsewhere in the capital.

Two young men and a girl shot and wounded a lawyer, Antonio de Vita, in a downtown street. De Vita is defending turncoat Red Brigades member Patrizio Peci, who has turned state's evidence against his former comrades-at-arms.

In another ambush, the revolutionary communist armed nuclei claimed the kneecapping of Franco Giuseppe Nieri in his office, saying he was guilty of running an illegal "black labor" racket, while a police car in another Rome suburb was sprayed with bullets from a passing automobile.

Most sources saw these attacks, even though they were not all claimed by the Red Brigades, as forming part of that organization's promised spring offensive which started on April 27 with the kidnapping of the Campania region's Christian Democrat councillor in charge of housing and town-planning Ciro Cirillo.

On May 20, the Red Brigades nabbed Giuseppe Teliercio, director of the Montedison petrochemical complex at Porto Marghera near Venice, and on June 3, Renzo Sandrucci, a leading executive at the Alfa Romeo auto factory near Milan.

The last of the four hostages currently in the Red Brigade's hands is Patrizio Peci's brother, Roberto, who was kidnapped at San Benedetto Del Trono on the Adriatic coast on June 10. Today, at Prescara near this seaside resort, an anonymous telephone call from the Red Brigades said they had "tried and executed the spy, Roberto Peci" and left his body in a lake in the neighboring Region of the Marches. Roberto Peci was alleged by the Red Brigades to be "spy" and "collaborator" of the Carabinieri police. On June 17, a communique left in Naples said he would soon be "sentenced".

In other declarations, the urban guerilla group have made it clear that one of their aims currently is to "disarticulate" the authorities' plans to defeat them with the testimony of "repentant" terrorists like Patrizio Peci.

Politicians Condemn Terrorism

AU201400 Roma ANSA in English 0802 GMT 20 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 20 Jun (ANSA)--A new terrorist offensive has dramatically highlighted the need for solidarity among Italy's political forces as a weekend of local elections looms and the country seems but a step away from settling the government crisis begun May 26.

Administrative elections will be held Sunday and Monday in several large Italian cities, including the capital, and in the region of Sicily.

Italian political leaders voiced their condemnation of the new wave of terrorist actions. Head of state Sandro Pertini expressed his grief over the attacks but said he was certain that the terrorist offensive would not weaken Italy's determination to defend the state and the country's democratic institutions.

Outgoing Minister of the Interior Virginio Rognoni appealed to all of Italy's political forces to rally around renewed national solidarity in the face of the terrorist offensive. Christian Democratic Party (DC) Secretary Flaminio Piccoli said that the Red Brigades had set a trap to discourage all forms of democratic participation.

Socialist Party (PSI) Secretary Bettino Craxi spoke of a day of tragedy and bloodshed. The Communists (PCI) noted that the Brigades were holding four hostages (one of which they had possibly killed).

Giorgio Almirante, secretary of the "MSI" neofascists, said that this resurgence of terrorism was due to the country's "moral disintegration" caused by "the regime of parties". Republican Party Secretary Giovanni Spadolini, given a mandate to form a new government on June 11, has singled out the fight against terrorism as one of the important planks in his platform.

With the ballot scheduled in many major towns and the region of Sicily, the voting could shift present weightings between the parties. Only when this point is clarified with Spadolini be able to move to concrete policy details and the names of those who still serve under him, possibly achieving a full cabinet list by the end of next week.

POPE READMITTED TO HOSPITAL FOR 'INDEFINITE STAY'

NC211128 Paris AFP in English 1118 GMT 21 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 21 Jun (AFP)--Pope John Paul II, in a taped recording, addressed some 7,000 visitors to the Vatican today in an uncharacteristically feeble voice, as doctors at Gemelli hospital refused to rule out surgery to determine the causes of a fever that yesterday forced the pontiff's hospitalization. The pope, apparently weakened by the fever, even skipped some parts of his prepared text on the eucharist as released by the Vatican Press Office. He recorded the message yesterday, just before being admitted to the hospital.

There were several possible reasons for the fever, including a virus in the lungs and bronchial tubes or an infection in the liver, Dr Emilion Tresalti, medical director of Gemelli hospital, told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE. The liver may have been infected by a transfusion of three liters (five pints) of blood during a May 13 operation to remove a would-be assassin's bullet, Dr Tresalti said.

One theory, which earlier caused some concern, has been discounted: The pontiff is not suffering from an infection around the sutured areas of the intestines, which would have required an operation.

The pontiff is scheduled for an indefinite stay punctuated by several tests to determine the causes of the ailment, and may even remain in Gemelli hospital until a previously-scheduled operation takes place early next month, another doctor said. That already-scheduled intervention was to reattach the pontoff's colon, which was severed by the bullet. Doctors said they would prefer to have Pope John Paul II stay in the hospital until the date of the operation, so he might regain the necessary strength to undergo anesthesia.

Meanwhile, even the Roman Curia's leading prelates were refused permission to see the pope today, and doctors themselves limited testing to determine the reasons for the fever to allow the pope a day of rest. No medical bulletin will be published today, although Doctor Tresalti, prompted by Italian press criticism, promised to appeal to papal officials [and] colleagues to allow more information on the pontiff's condition and treatment to be released. Only Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, the Vatican's secretary of state, was allowed to visit the pope today.

AFP: TERRORIST DIES DUE TO HUNGER STRIKE

NC191622 Paris AFP in English 1612 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] Madrid, 19 Jun (AFP)--A member of Spain's extremist GRAPO organization died today at the end of a hunger strike lasting more than 3 months, informed sources reported.

The organization's full name is Anti-Fascist Resistance Groups of October First. The dead militant was Juan Jose Crespo, who had been fed by intravenous injections for the past week at Herrera de la Mancha Prison south of here.

GRAPO had threatened earlier it would resume armed struggle if Mr Crespo were to die.

Four other imprisoned GRAPO militants are still on a hunger strike, in protest against alleged mistreatment. One of these men, Pablo Fernandez Villabeitia, has been fasting for 57 days and was recently hospitalized in a state close to a coma.

The last GRAPO attacks resulted in the assassination in early May of General Andres Gonzalez de Suso and of a policeman in Madrid and of two members of the paramilitary Civil Guard in Barcelona.

CATALONIAN COMMUNISTS MAY DISMISS ARDIACA

LD191417 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 16 Jun 81 p 16

[Enric Canals report: "PSUC Chairman Does Not Accept His Party's Return to Eurocommunism"]

[Excerpt] Barcelona--The United Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] Executive Committee is prepared to propose to the Central Committee the resignation or dismissal of party Chairman Pere Ardiaca if the latter does not publicly accept the political line adopted by the party, and specifically the Central Committee's latest resolution which reaffirmed "the Eurocommunist nature" of the PSUC's policy.

During the Central Committee meeting held last weekend, Ardiaca, who is situated between the Leninists and the pro-Soviets, refused to accept the terms of that resolution and went so far as to state publicly that he is not prepared to make Eurocommunism an element of his political work. At a news conference PSUC Secretary General Francisco Frutos yesterday described Ardiaca's stance as "inconceivable." "The PSUC chairman," Francisco Frutos stated, "has placed himself outside the party's functioning."

It was Frutos himself who asked Ardiaca to clarify his stance on the party's political line. This had been set as a condition for the representatives of the social democratic or "White Flag" current agreeing to take part in the enlargement of the Executive Committee proposed by the party leadership. This enlargement meant bringing four "White Flag" people, and also three pro-Soviets and one Leninist into the Executive Committee.

Ardiaca's stance ruined the proposal. The "White Flag" people refused to take part in the enlargement, and the three pro-Soviets and the Leninist joined the Executive Committee (the Executive Committee now has a Leninist majority).

Executive Committee member Andre Claret stated yesterday that Ardiaca's stance was regarded as "illegitimate," both by the previous Executive Committee and by the new Executive Committee, enlarged by the pro-Soviets.

The PSUC Executive Committee members present at the news conference stated that the enlargement of the Executive Committee was a means of surmounting "the atmosphere of irrationality created in the party following the fifth congress, surmounting the tensions and ending the abnormal situation experienced throughout the party over the last few months."

In this connection Francisco Frutos asserted that he is in favor of proposing Ardiaca's resignation if the latter does not apply democratic centralism and accept the Central Committee's decisions and resolutions, thus allowing the so-called "White Flag" people's inclusion in the Executive Committee.

NORWAY

FOREIGN MINISTRY AIDE SEES CALMER TIES WITH USSR

LD191419 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 15 Jun 81 p 9

[Kjell Dragnes dispatch: "Holst: Norwegian-Soviet Relations Calmer"]

[Text] Moscow, 14 Jun--"We are able to state that relations between the Soviet Union and Norway are developing constructively and normally after Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund's visit," Norwegian Foreign Ministry permanent secretary Johan Joergen Holst told AFTENPOSTEN.

Holst has been in Moscow in connection with the meeting of the Palme commission, an independent committee for disarmament, at which he was represented Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland. A number of bilateral talks with the Soviet Foreign Ministry had been planned originally, but Holst's arrival from the United States was delayed and so he only had time during his stay in Moscow for informal talks with the Soviet Foreign Ministry's Scandinavian Department Chief Georgiy Farafonov.

One of the possible reasons why the relations between Norway and the Soviet Union are now more normal after the criticism of Norway in the Soviet press and directly by Soviet leaders, which lasted throughout the spring, is that the issues which the Russians wanted to stress are now behind us, Holst said. One of the issues which came in for special critizism has the contingency stockpiling of U.S. arms and equipment. Norwegian listening stations have also been pointed out as one of the contributory factors to tension in the Nordic countries.

In this connection it is worth pointing out that all those involved in the Palme commission are of the opinion that the control arrangements used today to check that the signatories adhere to the terms of the arms limitation agreements ensure confidence between them.

[Question] Does this mean that the Soviet Union, despite its criticism of Norwegian listening stations, admits that they are important for the agreement?

[Answer] What the two sides admit is that it is necessary to base surveillance on national technical resources. They also have the right to enter agreements with third countries on cooperation to ensure effective surveillance.

Norway is interested in reducing tension in the Nordic area and even though the Nordic countries form part of a larger international context and the present situation is tense, Holst thinks that it is possible to do this in relations with the Soviet Union. "Of course the international political climate also has an effect on the situation in the northern areas and it is for this reason especially important that bilateral relations are so handled that the climate is not made worse," he said.

PAPANDREOU, RALLIS CLASH OVER U.S. BASES ISSUE

NC192120 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 19 Jun 81 pp 1,7

[Text] PASOK Chairman Andreas G. Papandreou has made the following statement:

"We have stressed that the Rallis government, which is on its last legs, does not fundamentally have the right to 'conclude' agreements of such importance to the country's future as the new agreement on the U.S. bases in Greece, and that as a result it should have terminated relevant negotiations until such time that the people's mandate elected a new, peoples-supported government.

"Involuntarily, as a result of the unexpected (for the government) unyielding position of the U.S. side and despite the concessions and retreats, so dangerous to the country, undertaken by the government in its effort to have the new agreement signed, this government was, in the end and after endless negotiations, forced to make the decision to suspend the talks. This was because even this rightwing government was unable to accept the unbearable conditions set by the U.S. side.

"The government has a duty to announce to the Greek people the contents of the negotiations, the final positions of the government (in other words, what it accepted in the final stage of the negotiations) and the final conditions set by the U.S. side for signing the new agreement.

"According to our information, in the final phase of the negotiations the Greek Government did make concession and it did accept conditions that--had the agreement been signed--would have fundamentally preserved the status of concession-giving that prevails on the basis of the 1953 and 1956 agreements. I wish to stress that tomorrow's PASOK government will not recognize any obligation arising from these negotiations.

"The government, however, also has an additional duty; it must proceed to immediately abrogate the agreements that are in force today--so that time limits [for removal of foreign bases] may start (a time limit of 1 year is provided for.) In this way the new government that will emerge from the election will be given the opportunity to have a new and totally different negotiating basis for the solution of the problem of the foreign bases in our country, which is a very vital issue.

"PASOK's positions on the question of foreign bases are well known. Specifically, I have repeatedly stressed that removal of the bases from our territory can pass through a first phase of 'compartmentalization.' This, bascially, means two things: 1. The establishment of a timetable for their withdrawal (within the framework of a Greek-U.S. dialogue); 2. The guarantee that no aspect of our own defense potential will rely upon foreign bases.

"For as long as these bases continue to operate within this specific timetable, it is obvious that there must be effective Greek control. This control must guarantee that no U.S. military operation is likely to be supported by bases situated on Greek territory. At the same time, Greece will impose and maintain the right to suspend the operation of these bases whenever this may be dictated by our own national interest. It is understandable that Greece will have the right to purchase arms from the U.S. as deemed necessary by the armed forces for the country's effective defense--under conditions not less than those which apply for our 'neighbor' Turkey.

"The central and decisive issue for us is to fully guarantee the country's defense requirements and to preserve the high standard of preparedness of our armed forces. It is only in this way that we will be able to deal with the threat 'from the east,' thus contributing toward peace in the area. We sincerely hope our allies will understand these unyielding positions of Hellenism."

Late last night Prime Minister Rallis made the following reply to Papandreou's statement:

"The government is supported by the majority in the Chamber of Deputies. On the basis of the constitution it also has the right to negotiate on the base issue. At the same time, however, it also has the duty to try to revise the status based upon the 1953 and 1956 agreements in order to improve it. It is this duty that the government carried out.

"Since 1976 the 'New Democracy' governments have held negotiations on a new status. These negotiations stopped in 1977 for reasons that are well known to everyone.

"We resumed negotiations after first resolving the question over our return to NATO's military wing. The negotiations continued with success. A great improvement was achieved compared to the existing status. The obligation, however, of having to present the agreement to the Chamber did not leave much time for continuation of these negotiations at the present stage.

"We inform the chairman of PASOK that we defended our national interests, as we always do. We were neither 'dragged' nor were we forced to suspend the negotiations, nor did the U.S. set unbearable conditions as Papandreou alleges. His informants are not known for the accuracy of what they pass on to him. They are, however, known for their fertile imagination and for their inventiveness.

"We are not going to announce any plan for negotiations nor the 'final conditions' of the U.S. side, because the negotiations have no future binding character either on Greece or the United States.

"I do stress, in any eventuality, that the Greek Government made no concessions. It is our custom to defend our national interest with firmness. In this case we remained, once again, firm to our custom.

"At this moment we will abrogate no agreement because the bases do not operate solely in the interest of the alliance but also in the interest of Greece. When, after the election, we once again form a government based on the people's mandate and on the Chamber's majority, we will continue negotiations on the bases with the same feeling of national responsibility. At that time, with greater ease, we will conclude an agreement that will absolutely guarantee both our country's interests and the defense of NATO.

"Our proposals spectacularly improved on the agreements of 1953 and 1956, which are in force today and which Papandreou describes as 'conciliatory.' If he truly believes in the descriptions he uses today, then we have the question: Why is it that in his capacity as minister in his father's government--from 1964 to 1965--he did not attempt to have these agreements abrogated and revised.

"Papandreou has set certain conditions for the future operation of the bases. I inform him that our proposals incorporate not only these very conditions but many others which guarantee both the Greek character of the bases and the country's defense.

"The 'New Democracy' governments are proud because during the past 7 years they guaranteed that the defense armaments of our armed forces allows them to repulse any threat, no matter where it may come from."

In a counterreply to the prime minister's statement, PASOK Chairman Papandreou stated:

"I regret that the country's prime minister does not speak the stark truth to the Greek people. It happens that I know of the progress of the negotiations, a progress that I described in summary in my statement tonight. The prime minister compares the 'achievements' of the government in the negotiations with the status of 1953.

"It would have been better if he had compared them with the initialled agreement of 1977. I call upon the prime minister to specify the time for briefing the Chamber of Deputies so that I may have the opportunity to reveal to the Chamber and to the Greek people the magnitude of the concessions that the 'New Democracy' government undertook. I will await his reply."

ADDITIONAL REACTIONS TO SUSPENSION OF BASES TALKS

KKE-Interior Statement

NC191910 Athens I AVYI in Greek 19 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] The Executive Bureau of the KKE-Interior Central Committee yesterday released the following statement:

"After continuous denials and being pressed by the people's opposition against the U.S. bases, the New Democracy government has been led to the suspension of the negotiations. Thus, the futility of the Atlantic policy followed by the rightwing has become even more evident.

"It is imperative that our country rid itself of the Atlantic dependencies and, first of all, that the U.S. bases--both nuclear and nonnuclear--be withdrawn from our country's territory and seas.

"The democratic majority to emerge from the forthcoming elections has the obligation to seek the abolition of the bases and the country's disengagement from NATO. It is also necessary to develop the people's struggle in this direction. The present government must proceed with the suspension of the bases' operations until the new Chamber of Deputies elects a government."

Center Front Comments

C192022 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 19 Jun 81 p 7

[Text] In connection with the government statement, Center Front Chairman Yeoryios Mavros has made the following statement:

The suspension of the Greek-U.S. base negotiations puts an end, although temporarily, to a negotiations procedure on a very important issue that has been humiliating to our country and that has been conducted in complete secrecy and without the Chamber of Deputies and the public.

The lack of official statements to the people has been replaced by an orgy of rumors about a hard U.S. stand and about disagreements within the government that were settled at the last moment through the intervention of the president of the republic.

Today's government statement not only does not throw light on the doubts of public opinion but, on the contrary, increases the existing confusion. The statement does not clarify which are the points on which there has been agreement or whether the disagreements refer to the U.S. proposal to grant our country not modern but old and used military material.

We also point out the repeated attempts to downgrade the Chamber of Deputies. Instead of taking the issue before the Chamber of Deputies and responsibly informing both the Chamber and the people, the government preferred to exhaust the last three sessions of the Chamber of Deputies to pass a bill on raising the number of candidate deputies, a question that is not national but clearly an internal, partisan problem of the government.

I KATHIMERINI Article

NC201834 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 20 Jun 81 pp 1, 3

[By Nikos Emm. Simos]

[Excerpts] According to our information, the U.S. refusal to satisfy the Greek demand for a balance of power in the Aegean was the basic element that led to the Greek Government's decision to discontinue the bases talks and to reexamine the issue after the forthcoming elections for the new government.

Specifically, the four conditions U.S. Ambassador McCloskey conveyed to Foreign Minister Mitsotakis at noon on 16 June were:

One: The U.S. demand to separate the article of the main agreement that provided for the preservation of a balance of power in the Aegean from the relevant political letter referring to this article that doubly bound the U.S. side to keep its promise. In reference to this it is pointed out that this binding obligation was quite satisfactory. This is despite the fact that the Greek side accepted preservation by the United States of the balance in granting aid to Greece and Turkey based on pertinent U.S. legislation which provides for consideration of "other factors" in these aid grants (consequently Turkey's economic crisis could have constituted an adequate U.S. excuse to falsify this balance). The Greek side's argument was based on this double reference to the U.S. obligation and the counterreference of the two documents.

Two: The U.S. demand to erase from the agreement Greece's right to stop--only--certain functions of the U.S. bases whenver the Greek side considered this necessary for reasons of more general national interests and particularly whenever it ascertained that these functions possibly went beyond the agreement's provisions.

Three: The U.S. demand to erase a term in the agreement that the aid granted to our country is on the basis of what applies to our "other NATO allies."

Four: The U.S. demand that the agreement's chapter on commanders should be reworded--an alternation of extremely fundamental importance from the viewpoint of interpretation and meaning--to confine the Greek commander's authority only to the Greek section of the bases.

However, after the Greek side expressed its negative attitude toward these four U.S. terms, the United States attempted a negotiating maneuver with a "last-minute offer" by U.S. Ambassador McCloskey which attempted to satisfy a small portion of the Greek claim for a lump-sum payment. The offer consisted of a grant for a small number of military aircraft, but this was rejected because, according to reports, the aircraft were considered: A) qualitatively unsatisfactory, B) of a total value that did not cover the value of the lump-sum payment, C) granted not under the terms of free aid, but under terms only somewhat better than those the Greek side could have received on the free market.

After this last disagreement, which strengthened the Greek reasons for suspending the talks, caused by the four U.S. terms, the government finally decided that the solution of the deadlock be postponed until after the elections since the nearing time limit only contributed to the deadlock.

U.S. OBJECTS TO REPAIR OF SOVIET MERCHANT SHIPS

NC201904 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 20 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] The Greek Government has fundamentally rejected new USSR proposals for the repair of Soviet merchants ships in Greek shipbuilding and repair yards.

After the "freezing of the Neorion of Siros [repair yard] agreement, permission is now being refused to the Khalkis shipbuilding yard, owned by I. Karras, to proceed with repairs on one Soviet merchant ship presently in the sea area off west Evvoia awaiting permission to dock. The Ministry of Merchant Marine is not expected to grant this permission, despite the fact that the Khalkis yard has already concluded an agreement for repairs on this Soviet ship. [The cost of the repairs is estimated at between $700,000 and $1 million.]

Appropriate officials at the Ministry of National Defense who were questioned yesterday stated they are completely ignorant of the matter. By contrast, officials at the Merchant Marine Ministry said the question of repairs to the Soviet ship was in fact raised but that the Greek side "is not proceeding with the process, which it has actually ended." The same sources let it be clearly understood that the reasons for this fundamental Greek refusal are purely political.

A senior official at the Khalkis yard stated that bids for the repairs have already been submitted to Soviet shipping companies, but that the final decision on whether repairs will proceed rests with the Greek Government. These bids, this offical added, have already been accepted by the Soviets, but the Khalkis yard is waiting for the final decision of the Greek Government, with which it will comply. If, in the end, the Greek Government refuses to give a docking permit to such Soviet ships, then they will sail for shipbuilding yards in southern France or Italy that will accept them, with the result, the offical stressed, considerable foreign exchange will be lost.

It must be noted that last year the Khalkis yard carried out repairs to one Soviet ship without any special problems being created.

This time, by contrast, it appears that certain issues have arisen because clearly, but indirectly, the U.S. Embassy has informed the Greek Government that the possible repair of Soviet fleet auxiliary ships is unprecedented for a NATO member state. At the same time, a certain "comment" was made that it is not proper to provide facilities to the Soviet fleet, particularly at a time when the Greek Government did not proceed with the signing of the Greek-U.S. bases agreement.

The Greek Government has clearly demonstrated "conformity" with these recommendations because it does not want to further burden the already disturbed Greek-U.S. relations. On the other hand, interested Greek businessmen are reacting to this government policy because they are losing "valuable customers" and "good business." They point out that the numerous ships of the Soviet merchant fleet do not have any difficulty signing similar agreements with shipbuilding yards in other NATO countries, primarily in France and Italy.

Government Statement

[Text] Greece will not prevent any of the country's shipyards from repairing merchant ships. Foreign merchant ships can come freely and may be repaired in Greece. What remains is the definition of a merchant ship. Greece considers merchant ships those that are registered in Lloyds books.

DEFENSE MINISTER BAYULKEN RETURNS FROM U.S. VISIT

TA191711 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] National Defense Minister Umit Halik Bayulken, who concluded his official visit to the United States, has returned to Turkey.

In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport upon his arrival today, Bayulken said that during his visit, he held multifaceted and beneficial talks on the defense cooperation between the two countries with the U.S. Secretary of Defense and other officials. Pointing out that he attended briefings of two different aircraft companies in Washington on the future aircraft industry in Turkey, Bayulken announced that he also held a private meeting with UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim in New York.

Bayulken added: The new U.S. administration has said that it has evaluated the strategic importance of friendly and allied Turkey--which is situated in a most sensitive region in the world--and the contribution and sacrifices made by our country for joint defense within NATO. Therefore, it has noted that it will carefully study and determine our military needs, which we stated as joint defense needs, with a most positive mentality and in light of Turkey's significant contribution to the defense of the West.

Noting that the aid the United States will extend to Turkey will be increased, Bayulken said that there were great developments in the finalization of the projects included in the defense industry cooperation supplementary agreement signed in 1980. Bayulken announced that agreement was reached during the talks on the realization of various projects like tank modernization, the production of antitank ammunition, various high-quality caps, fuses, explosives and various rockets, overhauling aircraft and building military ships. The defense minister said part of the equipment connected with these projects has already been sent to Turkey and that another part is ready for shipment.

Bayulken added that the U.S. administration has adopted a rational and dynamic approach to all of Turkey's problems, including economic problems, and that he is satisified over the successful results achieved so far.

U.S. OFFICIAL VIEWS NEUTRALITY, SOVIET DANGER

AU221500 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 22 Jun 81 pp 1, 2

[Georg Possaner report: "Clark Warns Austria of Soviet Danger"]

[Text] Alpbach--Praise for Austria's neutrality policy but also a blunt warning not to underrate the dangers posed by the Soviet Union--this is what U.S. Deputy Secretary of State William P. Clark stated in an interview with DIE PRESSE. Clark, who, together with Secretary of State for European Affairs Lawrence Eagleburger is staying in Alpbach in Tirol on the occasion of the "Dialogue Congress Western Europe-United States" which opened on Saturday, also conveyed a personal invitation from President Reagan to Foreign Minister Pahr to pay an official visit to the United States in the early fall of this year.

Asked about the importance that the new administration attaches to Austrian neutrality against the background of the tense East-West relationship, Clark referred to Austria's "function as a link," "contrary to the neutrality of some of our West European friends," Austria's neutrality is "genuine." He hoped, Clark continued, that Austria "does not underestimate the danger of the threat from the Soviet Union and that it will continue its military and security policy efforts."

Secretary of State for European Affairs Eagleburger, who was also present at the DIE PRESSE interview, replied to the question about an eventual U.S. nuclear screen for Austria in case of an East-West conflict. He did not see why the United States should exclude Austria. One thing was certain, however: "Austria is even now benefiting from the U.S. nuclear deterrent, which has ensured peace to Europe throughout all the years."

In his first few statements at the congress opening in Alpbach on Sunday, Clark referred to a "fresh breeze in the United States" and ardently pleaded for conservatism. "There is a conservative breeze blowing in my country and I do not want to apologize for it; quite to the contrary, I am proud of it."

In Alpbach Secretary of State for European Affairs Eagleburger also warned West Europeans about reversing the NATO dual decision. "If this happens it is an indication to the Soviets that NATO decisions are reversible and that the alliance is not close." Eagleburger stated that arms control is not an ultimate end for the new administration but "part of a tactic to induce the Soviets to civilized behavior." Should the Soviets intervene in Poland, however, it would unambiguously involve the end of everything, beginning with the readiness for negotiations about arms control.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON MOSCOW VISIT

PM230922 Brussels LE SOIR in French 19 Jun 81 p 3

[Pol Mathil report]

[Excerpt] The Belgian foreign minister, who has just returned from Moscow where he spent 6 hours with Gromyko plus a 2-hour luncheon, does not feel very optimistic. The joint communique simultaneously published in Brussels and Moscow mentions a "frank" atmosphere, which in diplomatic parlance means that the two men agreed on all principles and disagreed on ways to implement them.

Nothomb believes that he effectively upheld Atlantic solidarity which, surprisingly, Gromyko did not seek to undermine. On the other hand, Gromyko showed "intense interest" in any reference to engaging in serious dialogue with the Americans. His expression did not change when the Belgian minister stated that he felt sure that on 1 October champagne would be drunk during a meeting, which, he believed, would be fruitful, between the U.S. secretary of state and the Soviet foreign minister in New York.

Meanwhile, Nothomb takes the view that his visit was useful--it is necessary to maintain contacts and it is a good thing that the Soviets are also aware of the views of the "junior" members of the alliance. Tricky problems--Poland and human rights (including certain specifically Belgian cases)--were mentioned only during private talks. Gromyko's visit to Brussels was announced in the final communique. The Soviet foreign minister, acquainted in the course of a very long career with all Belgian foreign ministers since the war, has not yet decided on the date of his trip to Brussels.

GOVERNMENT PRESENTS 10-YEAR DEFENSE PLAN

PM221541 Brussels LE SOIR in French 17 Jun 81 p 2

["P.B." report]

[Excerpts] The 10-year national defense plan recently approved by the Social and Economic Coordination Committee has been presented by [National Defense] Minister Swaelen during a briefing. In accordance with a political compromise within the government, the increase in military expenditure has been limited to 6 percent, in keeping with general price increases.

During an exchange of views which followed his report, the minister gave some information on the replacement of our Mirage-5 aircraft, which already calls for some decisions even though it isn't to occur before 1984. The minister confirmed that a study is being made by the Air Force General Staff in this connection, but added that it has not yet been concluded. He did not confirm the information given last week by Secretary of State Wathelet, who stated that a decision on the subject is to be adopted by the government before the end of July.

LE SOIR REPORTS ON BUDGET CASH FLOW PROBLEMS

LD221124 Brussels LE SOIR in French 13 Jun 81 p 2

[Guy Depas report: "Budget Nightmare After the Crisis--the Gap Is Continually Growing"]

[Text] The government is again facing its fundamental problems with relative political calm. The iron and steel industry or the budget? In any case, financial problems are its real Achilles' heel.

Reviving the economy, restructuring the industry and restoring full employment--none of these main objectives will be within reach as long as there is a lack of money. It is now increasingly difficult to find money in the treasury's coffers.

In fact, the finance minister was again disappointed last month--the gap between budget estimates and tax revenue actually collected has further increased, and considerably, moreover--by almost 5 billion.

Compared with the reevaluation of the receipts collected in October 1980, (1,055 billion instead of 1,104 billion) the gap is now approaching 22 billion [figures as published] according to the as yet provisional information which we have been able to obtain.

Coming at the very moment when technicians were about to announce with a view to working out next year's budget, that in addition to previously envisaged shortfalls it would be advisable to take into account an additional shortfall amounting to 17 billion for the entire year, this information has certainly created some commotion.... A tax deficit amounting to some 22 billion? Even if it is accepted that delays in tax collecting (mainly due to political circumstances which have delayed the dispatch of tax forms and, consequently, registration of taxpayers) have mainly been responsible for the situation, no one anywhere hopes any longer that it will be possible to make up lost ground in any significant manner either during or after the summer.

Obviously, as a result of unsatisfactory collection of taxes, the state's cash flow problem has become even worse.

The national debt has increased out of all proportions and--what is even worse--in a chaotic manner.

Taking recent operations into account, its increase, which was initially estimated at 50 billion, amounted to "only" 47.5 billion last year, that is 20.5 billion more than this time last year.

In the first 5 months of 1981, the score has therefore increased by 285 billion, that is by 85 billion more than at the end of May 1980. The situation has been made worse by the fact that, finding it difficult to negotiate public loans on the money market, the treasury has been forced to resort to expedients and to borrow money on a short term basis from banks. As a result, the short term debt in Belgian francs has increased by 175 billion since January and the foreign exchange debt by 105 billion. Undoubtedly, the product of the crisis loan--new funds--whose subscription started on Thursday, should make it possible to consolidate a proportion of this enormous mass of funds which the government borrowed by issuing some extremely onerous treasury certificates. But the requirement is so big that it would be rash to pin much hope on this.

From compromise to compromise, policy has become too expensive in Belgium even if ministers' imagination has occasionally managed to sidetrack the issue. In fact, what strikes any observer of government life whenever it is faced with an economic crisis and the diverse haggling in which the coalition parties have been indulging is that in our country there is a gap between the available means and ambitions and that this gap has been continually widening.

Will it continue to widen until the brutality of facts destroys illusions? Nothing is more painful than a dream when it comes to nothing in the face of reality.

COMMUNISTS WANT PARTIES TO DEBATE COOPERATION

PM221335 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 15 Jun 81 p 5

["Own" Reporter report: "Communist Party of the Netherlands Considers Time Ripe for Leftwing Cooperation"]

[Text] Amsterdam--The Communist Party of The Netherlands (CPN) intends to set in motion a debate on progressive cooperation. The CPN Executive Committee wants to see "a platform for cooperation and dialogue" in which the Labor Party (PVDA), Democrats '66 (D'66), the Pacifist Socialist Party (PSP), the Political Party of Radicals (PPR) and the CPN can exchange ideas on far-reaching cooperation.

At a meeting on Saturday [13 June], the CPN resolved to send a letter with these proposals to the executive committees of the other four progressive parties. According to the CPN, the time for change has arrived: "Every effort must be made to work toward progressive cooperation while still retaining and respecting the individual identities of parties and persons, but with the common desire to rise in support of the parties' goals." The time is ripe, the CPN said, because the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) and the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy (VVD) have lost their majority in parliament and because the VVD cannot and must not be tolerated in a government any longer.

The following were mentioned as points of agreement between the CPN, PVDA, D'66, PSP and PPR: the prevention of the deployment of nuclear missiles, the development of East-West dialogue, the closure of nuclear power stations, the protection of minimum incomes and social security and the promotion of job opportunities. According to a declaration from the CPN, it does not think of the platform as a clearly outlined framework, but as the creation of "an area of contact."

On Saturday, the CPN Executive Committee continued to "completely reject" Moscow's attitude toward Poland. CPN Chairman Hoekstra warned that a wrong move with regard to Poland would lead to a nadir in relations between the world's communist parties and the Soviet Union. "Intervention is the practice of imperialism and colonialism; it is an abomination to us," Hoekstra said.

LEADERS MARK ANNIVERSARY OF GERMAN ATTACK ON USSR

Schmidt Article

DW221205 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 20-21 Jun 81 p 9

[Article by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt: "Never Forget World War II"]

[Text] Only the older generation through its own experience can recall 22 June 1941, the very day 40 years ago when Hitler attacked the Soviet Union with extreme military force. The German aggression heaped untold sorrows on the peoples of the Soviet Union. No state had more casualties to lament at the end of World War II than the Soviet Union--more than 20 million people.

The severe consequences of World War II still burden all of us. We Germans also suffered terrible losses. What the National-Socialist leadership of the German Reich intended to impose on the Russians--partition of the state and explusion of the people--later happened to our own nation. At the same time, the structure of Europe was fundamentally changed. But foremost of all, it is all these consequences and the memory of the war of aggression started in the name of Germany which continue to burden the relations between the Soviet Union and us Germans. There is still distrust and fear--on both sides.

During the past 3 decades, the Federal Republic has undertaken many efforts to clear away the debris of the past. Konrad Adenauer began to do it. But it was only Willy Brandt and Walter Scheel who succeeded in changing the enemy image which the Soviets had shaped for themselves of the West Germans. It was only the Moscow treaty, the renunciation of force, which in August 1970 laid a new foundation for a continuous policy of conciliation of interests and cooperation.

Having been the successor to Willy Brandt and continuing his policy, I went to Moscow in 1974, 1979 and 1980. The most difficult visit for me was in 1980, not just because the then incumbent U.S. President did not deem it a good idea because of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. It was also difficult because we ourselves naturally were on the side of the Afghans and did not want to make any bones about it and because the Soviet leadership had said that it would not negotiate with the United States on the mutual limitation of the number of nuclear medium-range weapons. But it was this very receptiveness to negotiations which Hans-Dietrich Genscher and I intended to persuade the Soviet leadership to adopt. And we managed to do just that.

Detente was, is and remains a fixed orientation point of our peace policy. We are moored in the Western alliance and in the European Community. Still, with this as protection, we propose to continue to achieve a state of cooperation instead of any confrontation vis-a-vis the Soviet Union and its allies. Security policy is part of that. This is why we demand controlled arms limitation--and if at all possible a downward trend in armament. It is for this reason that we advocate the continuation of the SALT process.

It was possible to stabilize peace in Europe by means of this policy. The four-power agreement on Berlin and the other treaties with the East, the basic treaty with the GDR, and the Helsinki Final Act signed by all European states would have been inconceivable without the Moscow treaty. They are agreements leading into the future, agreements on the mitigation of antagonisms whose causes are attributable, above all, to the results of World War II. Yet, all these agreements had the prerequisite of the dialogue between Washington and Moscow, including the nuclear test ban agreement, the nonproliferation treaty and the SALT I agreement, meaning the mutually agreed limitation of the strategic nuclear weapons by the two superpowers. None of the smaller states can institute general peace without the dialogue between the United States and the Soviet Union.

This is why we keep urging Washington and Moscow to engage in the East-West dialogue--all the more so, and particularly, in a critical situation! Anyone being reluctant to listen to the other cannot, by the same token, comprehend the interests and anxieties of the other. Anyone failing to understand the other may well hurt or threaten him without really wanting to do so. Harm to one, however, may well be followed by harm to the other. This is how you can easily trigger a spiral of the dangers in a world which is armed to the teeth anyway.

Many Western and Eastern suggestions supported the idea of considering an arms reduction agreement as a detente policy initiative; that pertained, for example, to the Rapacki plans. According to all historic experience, the attempt of conciliation of interests and renunciation of force on the basis of a continued and uncurtailed balance between the East and the West should be made first to defuse existing tensions. This turned out to be right. We Germans just experienced one of the longest periods of peace in generations.

And yet there is fear. The fear is understandable. It was clear from the very beginning that the process of ironing out political antagonisms would very soon necessitate, through substantial military agreements,mutual arms limitations. Otherwise, cooperation between Bonn and Moscow particularly would be threatened by a setback.

We have, therefore, pressed earlier for a solution of the problem of mutual arms limitation. Particularly because of our insistent demands, supported by our allies, the MBFR negotiations were opened in Vienna 8 years ago, aiming for a decrease of the preponderance of conventional armed forces and simultaneously for a contractually agreed balance which should be clearly under the current troops strength on both sides. But no success has been achieved in Vienna as long as nuclear arms limitation has gotten stuck.

In past years, an alarming imbalance has taken place in Europe in the field of nuclear medium-range arms to the advantage of the Soviet Union. Here, too, it was the Federal Government which acted in Washington as well as in Moscow for this most alarming upsetting of the regional balance of forces by the new Russion SS-20 missles will not be simply offset by filling up the American arsenal. (It isn't by any means the Federal Republic which would increase its armament if need be, but the Americans).

We maintain in the West that the establishment of an approximate balance should be achieved through negotiations. The result was NATO's double decision of December 1979, which will lead in the fall of 1981 to negotiations between both world powers. In an ideal theoretical case, it could lead to the scrapping of the greatest part of the existing more than 200 SS-20 missiles (with three warheads each) by the Soviets. Then there would be no need for the United States to deploy new missiles in West Europe--for technical reasons, it cannot deploy its first new medium-range missiles earlier than in 2 1/2 years anyway. Even limitation not going as far as zero would be much better than a state without a treaty.

I have known for 1 year that Leonid Brezhnev wants to negotiate on this. I have known for 1/2 a year that Ronald Reagan wants to negotiate on it. We press both to do it seriously. We work with all our strength that both do it.

We Germans have learned from World War II war: will never again emanate from German territory. Erich Honecker and I agree on that. Both of us also know that due to the current security interests of both superpowers, it is inevitable that both German states must be firm parts of their respective alliance systems and that an approximate balance is necessary between both alliance systems to preserve peace.

But we also know in East Berlin and in Bonn that without the will on both sides for a compromise and the conciliation of interests, the balance will not suffice to stabilize peace. Moscow and Washington both know it. The one who wants to get along with the other must conclude treaties. To do that, he needs patience, steadfastness and understanding as well as patience!

We Germans of today are not guilty of Hitler's war, but we bear the main moral responsibility that the right consequences are drawn from Hitler's war. Nobody can expect us to risk our own security and our own freedom. We will certainly not do it--we have the alliance and the Bundeswehr for that. But the Jews, the Poles, the French, the Russians and everybody in the world can demand that we must never forget Hitler's crimes and Hitler's war.

Genscher Comments

LD221122 Hamburg DPA in German 1012 GMT 22 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 Jun (DPA)--FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said that the policy of nonaggression must be developed through confidence-building, arms control and disarmament. According to FDP spokesman Herbert Schmuelling, Genscher today told the FDP Presidium that confidence-building also includes the ability to recognize and take into consideration the security interests of the other side .

Genscher said that the policy of actively securing peace is a matter of the utmost urgency in heavily-armed Europe, but must not remain confined to this continent. Those threats which bring about the militarization and arming of the Third World must be countered.

The FDP chairman was speaking on the occasion of the 40th anniversary of the German attack on the Soviet Union which is a "day of sorrow and responsibility" for the Germans. The sorrow is for the millions of dead and the endless suffering which the war brought upon the peoples of the Soviet Union, upon the whole Europe and Germany. The Germans' rejection of fascism and their unqualified avowal of democracy fulfills the responsibility for peace. Genscher affirmed the Federal Government's desire to actively safeguard peace. It will do everything so that a war can never again emanate from German soil.

BAHR CITES SOVIET DESIRE FOR NEGOTIATIONS

LD201104 Hamburg DPA in German 1045 GMT 20 Jun 81

[Text] Hamburg, 20 Jun (DPA)--After his talks in Moscow, SPD disarmament expert Egon Bahr is convinced that the Soviet Union is prepared for "serious negotiations and serious concessions" on the question of the deployment of medium-range missiles in Europe. In an interview for WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN, published on Saturday, Bahr said he expects, above all, concessions concerning the number of Soviet medium-range missiles and the siting of their deployment. The SPD politician returned from the Soviet Union only a few days ago.

An edited version of the interview was made available to DPA.

SPD'S VOIGT DISCUSSES TALKS WITH EAGLEBURGER

DW221111 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1040 GMT 20 Jun 81

[Excerpts from reporter Lenz interview with Karsten Voigt, foreign policy spokesman of the SPD Bundestag faction; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Could Mr Eagleburger eliminate the doubts with regard to the preparedness of the Americans to negotiate?

[Answer] I really believe that Mr Eagleburger left no doubt with regard to the U.S. preparedness to negotiate. The United States is prepared to negotiate. This clarification was wise and necessary.

The preparedness to negotiate is clear and obvious to me because he has mentioned dates. In other words, he assumes that negotiations, and not merely talks, will take place this year. Naturally, some issues will remain which we must continue to observe, namely the problem of the negotiations' aim and emphasis.

[Question] Eagleburger stressed yesterday that the new Western medium-range missiles must be deployed in Europe. He said the United States wants to negotiate, but the zero solution Europe once had in mind has become just a dream.

[Answer] Mr Eagleburger said that both parts of the NATO decision should be implemented simultaneously and continously. I asked whether this means that the zero solution is out. The answer he gave was insufficient for me--I must frankly say--because it is important whether one considers the zero solution as before as most realistic. I have very, very great doubts. I am almost certain that it will not come, but there is a great difference between whether it will not be achieved because the Soviets are not prepared to make the necessary reductions--which are necessary to facilitate a zero solution on the Western side--and whether the West will rule out the zero solution as an aim of its negotiations. I must say that Mr Eagleburger's answer in this matter was not so clear to me that I could say that a zero solution would fail only because of the Soviet Union. I must assume that there are at least doubts on the U.S. side as to whether a zero solution would be a sensible aim of negotiations. We will have to continue our discussions on that matter, but I believe that despite this discussion we must realize that it will be most difficult to achieve a successful zero solution.

[Question] That indicates a lasting conflict in the Atlantic alliance?

[Answer] Not only that, in the past months, we had stressed much more the negotiations, the negotiations themselves and the emphasis and aims of negotiations. We stressed it much more than the Americans. Some rapprochement is in the offing here because it is obvious now that negotiations will begin. The Americans realize on the basis of discussions held here at the conference, [German-American Security Policy Conference in Berlin], on the basis of public opinion in the Federal Republic--such as the church rally--that the Federal Republic is continuously placing the greatest emphasis on the negotiations and that we will closely follow these negotiations and their results.

[Question] If I understand you correctly, this conference and the talks with Eagleburger have just shown that your fears and reservations regarding the success of the Western strategy to avoid war must have been intensified?

[Answer] Yes, I believe that both sides must be seen. First, Eagleburger's statement that negotiations will be pursued with emphasis is certainly a step toward the Europeans. This conference certainly has contributed to making it clear to the Americans that the successes of detente policy and the insistence on talks with the Soviet Union, on negotiations with the Soviet Union, is an aim for us which we will firmly hold. That has impressed the Americans. I believe on the other hand that this conference also has contributed to making it understandable that the Americans--as far as those present at the conference--are not people who would justify the impression that some sort of warmongers were present on the American side. These were people who try to avoid war with their policy. One must now discuss the means and how to imbed that in the conceptions for the negotiations. I believe that the advocates of the NATO decision overrate the security policy effect which will emanate from its realization. And I believe that the adversaries of this NATO decision overrate the risks involved. The discussion was touched off by the medium-range arms. But if the medium-range arms were gone, we would not be free of the risks of nuclear war and if these arms were deployed, all our security problems would not be solved either. I am sorry to go that far in my rational, but unfortunately there aren't just medium-range missiles, completely different and new arms systems are being planned in the East and in the West.

MITTERRAND ASKS MAUROY TO FORM NEW GOVERNMENT

LD221242 Paris Domestic Service in French 1000 GMT 22 Jun 81

[Summary] Premier Pierre Mauroy went to the Elysee this morning and tendered the resignation of his government, which was accepted. However, President Mitterrand immediately reappointed Pierre Mauroy to form a new government. On leaving the Elysee, Pierre Mauroy said:

[Begin recording] "The president has just appointed me premier. I feel very honored by the confidence he has placed in me. I will be coming back to the Elysee this afternoon at 1700 to discuss matters and government problems, the general line to be pursued and the structure of the government. I should like to add that as soon as the cabinet is formed and the National Assembly sits, I will present myself before the chamber to submit the government's program. There will be a debate followed by a vote." [end recording]

The premier refused to make any further statement or to reply to questions about who would be in the cabinet. Talks are to be held this afternoon between Lionel Jospin and Georges Marchais about cooperation between the Socialist Party and the French Communist Party. It is expected that the composition of the new cabinet will be known very soon, possibly even this evening so it can prepare for the regular weekly Council of Ministers meeting on Wednesday.

SOCIALISTS, PCF HAMMER OUT 'POLITICAL CONTRACT'

LD230920 Paris Domestic Service in French 0600 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] Marathon negotiations between the PS and PCF were held during the night. After 7 hours of discussion, a political contract was hammered out at the Rue de Solferino by the delegations of the two parties, at the end of which, PCF's Charles Fiterman said:

[Begin recording] The two delegations representing the PS and the PCF have just been discussing terms for a political agreement on government. They have decided to submit the results of their talks to thier respective leaderships." [end recording]

It now remains for the governing bodies of the PS and PCF to approve the joint text and, in all logic, this should result in Communist ministers in the government. Everything points to this, beginning with the agreement hammered out during the night. The whole process began yesterday afternoon at PS headquarters. This morning, the ruling bodies of the two parties are to meet separately, each in its own headquarters, to ratify this agreement which will be implemented in time to allow Communist participation in government. Francois Mitterrand and Pierre Mauroy will, of course, decide on the number of portfolios and the persons to whom they will be allocated.

The agreement reached during the night runs to four pages and Paul Quiles [PS official] was asked if the two parties had been able to agree on problems of foreign policy. He replied: I believe so. Therefore, it seems that there has been progress on the matters about which at the beginning of the month there was disagreement--Afghanistan, Poland, SS-20 missiles. But Paul Quiles stressed that both sides had agreed on defining the framework of government action and this is important because Paul Mauroy has always been at pains to emphasize that the first rule that has to be respected in government is that of solidarity and that there can be no question of having two policies within the same government team. So apparently these matters have been settled. Socialists and Communists seem to have reached agreement during the night on how to govern.

PREMIER OUTLINES SOCIALIST POLICY AIMS

[Interview with French Premier Pierre Mauroy; date and place not given]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mr Premier, France has been ruled by the conservatives for almost a quarter of a century. Now there is a Socialist state president and Socialist government. You have announced fundamental reforms to the nation. Do you think that these reforms can be implemented in view of the current economic crisis?

Mauroy: We expect to get the economy under control again in the next 2 years. That is the aim of a plan limited to 1982-83. Then some long term planning will follow with the aim of basically changing French society in the following 5 years. The head of state will hold office for 7 years, the parliament, with a leftist majority to emerge from the parliamentary elections, will stay for 5 years. We will have the time and the means to fulfill our task...

SPIEGEL: What will be the main point of your policy?

Mauroy: The creation of jobs, a most difficult task. The tendency toward even higher unemployment, left behind by the former government, is so strong that it will certainly last for some time. The French know it. With the election of Francois Mitterrand they have given us a threefold task: to revive the economy, to maintain and extend political liberties, and to develop social justice.

SPIEGEL: You will not be able to eliminate social injustice quickly...

Mauroy: We are determined to eventually end this social scandal, these gross injustices. In the past 30 years, France has fallen behind those West European countries where big socialist parties were in power, which formed the history of their countries.

SPIEGEL: Certainly, many kinds of reforms have taken place in countries ruled by socialists, but a basic social change has hardly taken place. Why should the French Socialists be successful where their comrades have failed elsewhere?

Mauroy: Because France is lagging behind. The former French governments implemented indispensable social reforms too late and in a limited way, reforms which would have put us just on the same level with the most progressive European partners. The economic realities, worldwide as well as European realities, which are an additional burden to the social backwardness, force us to take thorough measures. The old and excessive differences characterizing our social structures explain in part why our inflation rate is clearly higher for some years than that of the Federal Republic, for example. Good social policy is for us today a prerequisite for good economic policy.

SPIEGEL: But the financing of your social program could considerably heat up inflation.

Mauroy: Our economic policy is one unit. We are aware of the demands of an economic balance. For this reason, I took on 21 May the necessary measures for the defense of the franc, which are the indispensable basis for increasing living standard, for the security of savings and for the mitigation of inflationist tensions. We have taken measures to increase mass consumption by increasing the lower incomes...

SPIEGEL: Exactly, and that isn't supposed to have an inflationary effect?

Mauroy: No, in addition, we have decided to create new jobs, particularly in public service and particularly where the quality of life will be increased. We take measures to encourage firms to make greater investments, to increase the competitiveness of the French economy as well as the number of employed people.

SPIEGEL: French firms are under strong pressure because of recession and high interest rates...

Mauroy: That is correct, but we will be vigilant. We urge the people to be moderate regarding wages and prices in order to stop the price increase and to maintain the competitiveness of the economy. The wage increases are strictly limited to the lowest wage groups. Parallel to this increase, there is an offset payment for the firms so that the wage increase cannot effect prices.

SPIEGEL: Your program envisages the nationalization of 11 industry groups. Do you aim for this nationalization out of economical or ideological considerations?

Mauroy: The nationalization policy has naturally a symbolic value. It expresses the will of the government to break with an economic system that always considers profit more important than man and that considers unemployment, for example, as a "natural" means to regulate the economy. We never consider it permissible for private firms to make profit from arms production because the orders come from the state.

SPIEGEL: So it is ideological reasons after all...

Mauroy: No, our nationalization program is in no way based on simple ideological considerations. The government wants to be in control of the credit business and of certain industries. It will thus have the means to modify the French production apparatus. Such a modification is indispensable to the successful cranking up of the economy.

SPIEGEL: France is one of the world's leading arms exporters. According to the head of state, arms no longer will be supplied to racist or fascist states. How do you want to maintain those jobs dependent on arms exports?

Mauroy: French policy aims for peace and detente. Our country will therefore try worldwide to curtail and moralize arms exports. But the government has said that the signature of France is binding and that all earlier concluded contracts will be fulfilled. The change of our policy will be gradual. In any case, France will continue to have its own arms industry, guaranteeing its independence. And in any case, we will support those countries which approach us for the sake of their defense.

SPIEGEL: You said that the Plogoff nuclear powerplant in Brittany, as promised by the former government, will not be built, while simultaneously stating that the construction of nuclear powerplants in other regions would be quite possible in future. What is the difference between your nuclear policy and that of your conservative predecessor?

Mauroy: Up to 1973, our predecessors were placing all bets on oil, then they were fully devoting themselves to nuclear energy. We believe, however, that a balance must be found between all kinds of energy and that one must not rely on just one. We are determined again to activate our coal mining. We will continue to use oil, but we will economize very much. Naturally, we also will develop nuclear energy which will be decisive for the next 15 or 20 years.

SPIEGEL: The head of state announced in the course of the election campaign that the nuclear powerplant planned in Plogoff will not be built...

Mauroy: Yes, but all nuclear powerplants under construction will be completed. That is beyond doubt. Simultaneously, all planned nuclear projects will be frozen because we want to examine the plans and debate. Only once have all opinions been expressed. We will tackle our nuclear program and all other energy programs.

SPIEGEL: In the election campaign, you announced a plan for a most far-reaching decentralization. Will you really implement it? Will you admit that the central state power in Paris will delegate some power to the province and possibly lose control?

Mauroy: The French Republic, as our Constitution says, is an indivisible unity. French unity was achieved through a hard fight and it will be preserved. But we believe that the enormously concentrated power which the state has in our country and which had earlier served the national unity is harmful to it today.

SPIEGEL: No real change will take place in this field without a different distribution of power and responsibility in the state, the communities and regional responsibility in the state, the communities and regional administrations.

Mauroy: That is the main aim of our decentralization plan. In the institutional field, it will be the outstanding plan of the coming 7 years. We consider it most important that the 95 parliaments of the departments and the 21 parliaments of the regions should be elected by the people just as the 36,000 communal parliaments are being elected today. We want the presidents of these parliaments to implement the executive and not the prefect, as is the case today.

SPIEGEL: The head of state has implemented one more promise in the meantime, a promise he made in the election campaign. He has pardoned a man sentenced to death. Will parliament adopt a motion to abolish the death sentence?

Mauroy: The French leftists have demanded the abolishment of the death sentence for a long time. This demand was contained in the joint program of 1972 and in the Socialist Party program. As all other promises of the head of state, this, too, will be passed in due time as a draft to parliament.

SPIEGEL: Helmut Schmidt adopted a critical stance vis-a-vis Israel in the Mideast conflict, so far rejecting all invitations to Israel. Francois Mitterrand, however, has publicly called himself a friend of Israel, promising to visit. Don't you fear a negative reaction from the Arabs, particularly after the Israeli attack on the Iraqi nuclear powerplant?

Mauroy: Francois Mitterrand always said, before and after his election, that Israel is a friendly country with which France wants to maintain cordial and friendly relations in line with the traditional ties between the people. But that did not keep the French Government from condemning such an operation as that against Iraq and to regret the negative consequences of this act in view of the current tension in the Middle East. It can only complicate the search for a peaceful solution. It is natural for the French Government to maintain the trustful relations existing for a long time with all Arab countries. It will adhere to all commitments accepted and it will try to develop cooperation with these countries and to continue a dialogue with them, which is today more necessary than ever.

SPIEGEL: According to Helmut Schmidt, the deployment of Soviet SS-20 medium-range missiles is a threat to West Europe. Do you share this opinion with the chancellor and do you agree with him that the answer is the deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe?

Mauroy: The Soviet SS-20 medium-range missiles represent a new quality and are therefore a threat to the strategic balance between the East and the West. It is therefore logical and legitimate that this deployment necessitates a respective countermeasure of the West. We don't have to comment on the details of these countermeasures because they involve our allies who belong, in contrast to us, to the militarily integrated part of NATO. These are U.S. arms which are not supposed to be installed on French territory.

SPIEGEL: France said--not directly--that it was "shocked."

Mauroy: It indeed serves our own interest if the balance between the East and the West is maintained. On the other hand, however, we must watch out that our armed forces will not be included in U.S.-Soviet negotiations where we do not participate and where we cannot participate, because we want to keep our nuclear deterrence force independent. We want the balance of forces to be kept on the lowest possible level. In this respect, it would be the best solution if the Soviet Union removed its SS-20 missiles, thus making the deployment of additional U.S. nuclear arms in Europe superfluous.

SPIEGEL: As the opposition leader, Francois Mitterand condemned the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and what he called the lukewarm and too late reaction of Giscard d'Estaing How would the Socialist have reacted had they been in power at that time?

Mauroy: I don't want to engage in political fiction, but one thing is certain: Mitterrand would not have gone to Warsaw as Giscard did to meet Leonid Brezhnev after the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan.

SPIEGEL: And how would you react if the Soviets invaded Poland tomorrow?

Mauroy: That is hard for me to imagine. If such a hypothesis should become true, it would seriously jeopardize the so necessary and fragile detente--for a long time, I fear. Detente presupposes in any case respect for human rights and for the right of a people's self-determination. The head of state pointed out recently that a violation of the fundamental principle of noninterference would have serious consequences.

SPIEGEL: The French Communists, who might possibly be members of your government after 21 June, approved the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan. How do you want to overcome that contrast in your assessment?

Mauroy: All belonging to the majority which has elected Francois Mitterand can belong in principle to the government which has been commissioned to implement the directives of the chief of state. But a government can work credibly and in a lasting way only if all ministers regardless of their political affiliation will fully respect the government solidarity principle. Naturally, a government can pursue only one single, uniform policy.

SPIEGEL: That presupposes the existence of an unambiguous agreement between the government partners on political ideas.

Mauroy: So far the Socialists and Communists have not succeeded in finding a common basis, also not with regard to Poland, Afghanistan, Soviet medium-range missiles or nationalization. For us, it is clear, however, that the commitments accepted by candidate Francois Mitterrand, which have been approved by the French Majority, will bet the basis of government activity.

The French will now have an opportunity in the parliamentary elections to judge the political ideas of Socialists and Communists. I do not doubt that the French majority will again approve the suggestions of the Socialists. And then the Communist Party must know exactly which way it wants to go. It must give the answer.

SPIEGEL: Your party already has scored an historic success--the Socialists have reduced the Communist Party voters in the presidential elections to 15 percent. How do you explain this success?

Mauroy: Doubtless, the policy pursued by the Communist Party for 3 years has not been understood and particularly not approved. The breach of the leftist alliance, for which it must be held responsible, and the purposeful and permanent pointing out of the differences between the Communists and the Socialists, have made us forget everything we had in common. The consequence was that the voters had to decide between two political options. In the presidential elections, the voters decided in favor of Francois Mitterrand. In the parliamentary elections, they will confirm this attitude.

SPIEGEL: A marxist and reformist trend exists in the Socialist Party of France. Are you personally closer to the philosophy of the Social Democrats of the Federal Republic or of Scandinavia?

Mauroy: The specific situation in France is not suitable for a Social Democratic movement of a German or Scandinavian type, particularly because of the pluralism of the French trade union movement. The relations existing in our country between the trade unions and the political parties are not the same as in other European countries. I have followed with interest the practice of the Social Democrats of northern Europe and I have derived useful lessons, like all French Socialists. But our policy, even if it looks in some points similar to that of our German or Scandinavian friends, will necessarily be different because it aims for changing and reforming French society with its special rules and forms.

CHEYSSON CRITICIZES U.S. INTEREST RATE POLICY

PM221055 Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Jun 81 p 44

[Excerpts] The United States was in the dock right from the beginning of the OECD conference of foreign and finance ministers, which opened in Paris on 16 June. French External Relations Minister Cheysson immediately reaffirmed his opposition to the U.S. policy of high interest rates which, as far as European countries are concerned, corresponds to a "third oil shock." This policy of dear money and "a dollar floating in the stratosphere" has led, Cheysson stated, to a halt in investments.

Cheysson launched an appeal from the OECD rostrum in support of a "new planetary deal" in relations between industrialized countries and the Third World. He came out in support of "international consultations with which enterprises and trade unions would also be associated."

"I maintain," the minister stated, "that the implementation of a voluntary policy inspired by Keynesianism on a world scale would greatly help our economies to emerge from the present alarming crisis." Cheysson believes that three measures should be taken to implement such a policy: recycling of capital, increased investments by industrialized countries in the Third World and increased public aid since Third World economies possess a formidable growth potential which should be mobilized in a similar way as the potential of the weakest strata were mobilized in industrialized countries in the 19th century."

Finally, the foreign minister stated that Socialist France is "as much in favor of the preservation of an open economy as anyone else" and that it intends to observe the obligations entered into within the GATT framework. As for European Commission Chairman Thorn, he pleaded against any increase in protectionist pressures. "Let us be cautious, not to say realistic," he stated, "in our reactions to exports from developing countries because those countries' markets are of vital importance to us."

SOCIALISTS TAKE LEAD IN REGIONAL ELECTIONS

NC221836 Paris AFP in English 1805 GMT 22 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 22 Jun (AFP)--The Italian Socialist Party emerged as the major winner in partial elections held yesterday and today in various regions of the country bettering their score at the expense of both the ruling Christian Democrats and the Communists.

The results of the poll--considered the first test of public sentiment following the P-2 Masonic lodge scandal which rocked Italy and caused the fall of the government of Arnaldo Forlani on May 26--were expected to give Socialist Party leader Bettino Craxi better leverage tomorrow when he meets premier-designate Giovanni Spadolini to discuss formation of a new cabinet.

In the two-day vote, nine million Italians (one-quarter of the country's electorate) were called on to fill 193 municipal council and 182 provincial council seats and the 90-seat Sicily regional assembly. Overall voter turnout was 80.1 percent.

Improving their percentage since the last comparable elections by more than 50 percent in some areas, the Socialists' overall score ranged from 12 to 16 percent, initial results showed.

This trend was particularly sharp in Bari, the fiefdom of assassinated Christian Democrat Premier Aldo Moro. In the town, located in Puglia in the heel of the Italian boot, the Socialists scored 23 percent, an improvement of 12 points since 1979.

Both the Communists and the Christian Democrats showed losses in this year's poll. However, the Communist Party retained its relative majority at the municipal councils of Rome and Genoa, which it wrested from the hands of the Christian Democrats five years ago.

With results from the poll still being counted, the gains won by the Socialists seemed most significant in Sicily, where three and a half million voters were called on to renew the 90-seat regional assembly.

The Socialists won 13.6 percent of the vote (up from 10.3 in 1976), the Communists lost five points and the Christian Democrats were [word indistinct] about 41 percent.

[Excerpt] This afternoon the Ministry of Interior issued the final polling results in Sicily for the election of a new regional government. In the new assembly the Christian Democrats have 38 seats (39 in the previous elections); the Communists have 20 seats (24 previously); the Socialist Party has 14 seats (10 previously); MSI has 6 seats (9 previously); the Social Democrats have 2 seats (no change); the Republican Party has 5 seats (4 previously) and the Liberal Party has 3 seats (2 previously).

Record Low Turnout

AU222113 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 22 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 22 Jun (ANSA)--Sunday's and Monday's local elections in Italy attracted the lowest voter turnout ever registered in legislative or administrative elections in the country since the end of the Second World War. Only 80.1 percent of eligible voters went to the polls for the latest round of regional, provincial and municipal balloting, leaving an unprecedented 19.9 percent of absentees.

The elections for the Sicilian regional government, several city governments like Rome and [words indistinct] provincial administrations theoretically involved close to nine million voters, one-quarter of the Italian electorate.

The only other nationwide poll boycotted by a larger percentage of the voting public was on the occasion of last month's referendums when 20.4 percent of the electorate stayed home. But referendums customarily attract a much lower voter turnout than legislative and administrative elections. Abstainers from the last round of political elections in 1979 came to 9.6 percent of the electorate.

VATICAN'S PANCIROLI REPORTS ON POPE'S CONDITION

AU221922 Rome ANSA in English 1915 GMT 22 Jun 81

[Text] Vatican City, 22 June (ANSA)--Pope John Paul II was said here today to be "improving" from a "pleuritic-pulmonary inflamation" of his right lung. Vatican press chief Father Romero Panciroli told reporters that he got the news from the pope's Doctors at Rome's Policlinico Gemelli hospital. Panciroli, who opened the press office today to read a communique on the pope's condition, disclosed that the patient still had a temperature but it "tended to be dropping".

It will take a few days, and most certainly not tomorrow, before the pope's medical staff at the Gemelli polyclinic will have enough test results to issue an official bulletin on his condition.

According to Panciroli, the checks already made on the ailing pontiff showed that his lung condition was getting better. The Vatican press chief, who came forth with today's communique after newsmen complained about the 48-hour blackout which followed the pope's entrance into the hospital Saturday, warned reporters against taking unofficial accounts seriously.

Official bulletins are the only safe sources of information", he said adding, "all other reports which have been issued or may be issued in the future are neither authorized nor reliable." The warning was explained in remarks to reporters by the fact that international sources have spread stories that the pope was suffering from all kinds of serious diseases without any truth in them.

Hospital Report

NC221845 Paris AFP in English 1938 GMT 22 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 22 Jun (AFP)--The condition of Pope John Paul II continued to improve, but he is still suffering from something "that cannot be called pleurisy in the strictest sense of the word," the medical director of the Gemelli hospital said tonight. A small problem remains "but it is in regression," Dr Emilio Tresalti said. His statement contradicted an earlier announcement by the Vatican spokesman, who said that the pope was suffering from pleurisy.

The Pope was readmitted to the hospital on Saturday after a persistent fever hampered his recovery from the bullet wounds of last month's assassination attempt. Dr Tresali said the Pope's temperature had dropped and was now only a touch above normal. "The patient shows a distinct improvement," Dr Tresalti said. He ruled out the possibility that the fever indicated problems with the Pope's abdominal wound as was originally feared.

JUDGE LISTS CHARGES AGAINST P-2 LODGE MEMBERS

[Excerpts] Rome, 20 Jun (ANSA)--Rome Judge Domenico Sica today issued a broadside of charges against venerable Master Licio Gelli and 21 members of his P-2 Masonic lodge with accusations ranging from political espionage to political conspiracy, fraud, misappropriation of documents, and violence against private individuals. The lodge was recently declared unconstitutional as a secret association. Gelli is currently in hiding abroad is sought by Interpol in Latin America. Sica's charges are apparently against the whole summit of the organization, which is suspected of nefarious goings-on at all levels of Italian life.

Apart from Gelli, the charges were levelled against figures such as Admiral Mario Casardi, former head of the disbanded espionage service, SID, and another retired spymaster, General Gian Adelio Maletti, together with Casardi's aides, Colonel Antonio Viezzer and Captain Antonio la Bruna.

Others charged were retired General Vittorio Lipari, a former high-ranking official in the Interior Ministry's Reserved Affairs Section, financier Umberto Ortolani, Gelli's closest partner in his Latin American ventures, and former secretary-general of the Rome Lower House Francesco Cosentino, to mention only a handful.

The political conspiracy charge is levelled against all the leaders of the lodge with the exception of Admiral Casardi, who, together with Maletti, La Bruna and Viezzer, is charged with misappropriating a dossier on an oil scandal.

According to Sica, in order to carry out "criminal programs" and obtain reserved and secret information, Gelli and his 21 associates signed people up in the lodge without their knowledge. This system of "arbitrary" induction made it possible for the lodge to manipulate third persons into joining and to obtain new members, whence the charge of fraud.

According to Sica, Gelli and his friends were guilty of violence against private persons because of their threats against Christian Democrat Party secretary Flaminio Piccoli and Leonardo di Donna, serving vice-president of ENI, Italy's state-run fuels group.

According to the magistrate, Gelli threatened Piccoli that he would disclose his relations with bankrupt Sicilian financier Michele Sindona, who is currently serving a 25-year sentence in New York for his role in milking the coffers of the Franklin National Bank. Sindona is also serving a concurrent seven years for jumping bail and then faking a kidnapping to justify his absence from New York as he toured from Austria to Greece and Sicily in an attempt to save his situation.

According to Sica, Di Donna was threatened with disclosure of alleged irregularities if he refused to withdraw his charges against ENI's then president Giorgio Mazzanti, who was involved in kickbacks related to an oil deal between ENI and the Saudi Arabian company, Petromin, two years ago.

One side-effect of Sica's charges is the implication that he apparently regards most of the 953 names appearing as P-2 members as "untrue". This conclusion may not be shared by the Milan magistrates also examing the case, but it has important political implications.

After Sica's charges, Christian Democrat Guido Gonella, head of the commission examining the position of party members, told reporters that he is in principle not accepting the truth of the lodges acts.

On other developments, Radical Party Deputy Franco de Cataldo told the news weekly, L'ESPRESSO, that it still has to be explained why the investigation into Gelli has only been reopened two years after journalist Pecorelli's death.

De Cataldo, who represents Pecorelli's family in the case, pointed out that, in March 1979, after the slaying of Pecorelli, Sica had already had his hands on the secret dossier stolen from SID and on Pecorelli's membership card for P-2. How come then, asked De Cataldo, that he has taken two years to re-open the case?

LE MONDE Refuses Gelli Defense

AU191617 Rome ANSA in English 1550 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 19 Jun (ANSA)--Licio Gelli, the grand master of the Propaganda-2 Masonic Lodge suspected of a wide range of wheelerdealings in the upper echelons of the Italian establishment, described himself as "a victim of a monstrous conspiracy" last month in a paid advertisement never published by the French daily LE MONDE. Gelli composed his 14,000 dollar self defense for publication in the May 16 edition of LE MONDE, but editor-in-chief Jacques Fauvet refused to print the ad.

In three-and-a-half type-written pages, the Masonic chieftain tried to persuade Italian Premier Arnaldo Forlani not to release the documents confiscated by police in a court-ordered search of his central Italian villa two months earlier.

Gelli tried to discredit the documents turned over to the courts as mere "shapeless and anonymous pieces of paper", a pile of notes "with no value as evidence" in his unpublished treatise. These scraps of paper have turned out to be no less than 2,168 pages of formal documents, check stubs, receipts and letters written to or by Gelli between him and several leading establishment figures.

The P-2 leader cried that he was the victim of a "judicial assassination" and a "monstrous plot" (weaved by men in power seeking key positions in the world of economy and politics.)

JAPANESE TRADE MINISTER MEETS LORD CARRINGTON

OW191305 Tokyo KYODO in English 1241 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] London, June 19, KYODO--Japanese International Trade and Industry Minister Rokusuke Tanaka Friday told British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington that Japan would try to expand its imports from Western Europe.

During the meeting at the Foreign Ministry here, Tanaka said Japan was holding talks with the European Community (EC) nations to reduce exports of cars and other goods from Japan. This is one way of defending the free trade system, he said.

Japanese officials said Carrington called for increased Japanese investments in Britain.

Before coming here, he visited France, Belgium and the Netherlands. He leaves for Saudi Arabia Saturday on the last leg of his current tour.

CARRINGTON, CZYREK DISCUSS SIKORSKI REMAINS

LD191512 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1452 GMT 19 Jun 81

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Britain recognises the importance that Poland attaches to the return of the remains of General Sikorski, its wartime leader, Lord Carrington has told the Polish foreign minister, Mr Jozef Czyrek, who is on an official visit to London.

A decision is expected to be announced by the Home Office next week. But Lord Carrington's comment was seen as an indication that Britain is likely to grant the request to have the remains of General Sikorski, who is buried in Newark, Notts, cemetery, returned to Poland.

The Foreign Office said today that Mr Czyrek explained to Lord Carrington at dinner last night the reasons for the Polish Government support for the return of the remains. The foreign secretary, in reply, said the British Government was aware of the importance that the Polish Government attached to the request.

A decision was pending at the Home Office, Lord Carrington told his guest.

General Sikorski died in July 1943 and the Poles would like his remains returned by next month as a mark of respect to commemorate his death.

Indications in Whitehall today were that the government was generally favourable to the request. It seems that the Home Office receives about 200 requests for reburial every year. Most of these are granted as long as they are in accord with the wishes of the next of kin.

Mr Czyrek paid a further call on Lord Carrington today when they discussed developments in the Middle East.

PAPERS DISPUTE VALUE OF KIPRIANOU'S MOSCOW VISIT

I SIMERINI Derides Invitation

NC230932 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 23 Jun 81 p 1

[Editorial: "A Ticket to Moscow"]

[Text] President Kiprianou has now been given permission to enter the Kremlin. He is now not only not "unfit and impotent" but he is welcome to Moscow! Why is this? Why is it that after "he missed the train" in Cyprus he now gets an air ticket to Moscow? The people will never learn the reason for this. AKEL's leaders naturally will never dare tell the people how this Ovidian metamorphosis of theirs took place. At the same time, our president has absolutely no reason to explain to the people why his new embrace of the communists is "patriotic and salutary."

All these things are mere details. The large print says that Moscow will reward our president for his faithful ministering to communist interests in Cyprus and the area. Obviously, our president has never understood these interests and perhaps it is impossible for him to understand them, simply because what he so easily understands and tries to understand is only what relates to his strong desire to remain in authority. All the rest is unimportant, mere details; it is only for those who understand such things.

The press organs of the communist leadership have already started to mount their propaganda. They now want to tell the people that Kiprianou's visit to Moscow is an important historic development in the fate of Cyprus. It is nothing of the sort. This is nothing but a simple "tip" and a simple political handout to the president for what he has done and is continuing to do in support of communist plans. The president's political narcissism is well known and a simple visit to the Kremlin is enough to satisfy his political exhibitionism.

It is, however, possible for this visit to have some serious effects. This is not because the de facto partitioned Cyprus state with 600,000 inhabitants and three foreign armies will be taken into consideration by Moscow, but because the visit to Moscow will be considered as fostering dangers to the "imperialist West." As we know...this "unhesitating" West is not joking...in the very same way that Moscow is not joking in Afghanistan and elsewhere.

The existing states, the large and strong states can do whatever they feel like and they can make mistakes. They are not lost because they do what they feel and because they make mistakes. The small, the weak, the "nonexistent" states do not have such a privilege or such a luxury. They are obliged to think long and hard before they speak or before they act. Our own leaders, as a rule, only started thinking after the calamity, after their mistakes and after their inanity.

Cyprus is situated within an area that is being consumed by the flames of political uncertainty and repeated local clashes. If it could get involved in this situation to save itself, then this visit to Moscow could have had at least some political mysticism with probable political benefits. However, half of Cyprus is under Turkish occupation. It has NATO bases on its territory and as a state is is both politically and militarily weak and defenseless.

The visit to Moscow will take place. There will be no fundamental result to benefit Cyprus. What will take place will be a political caress to soothe the political complex of our president, who is being allowed to visit the Kremlin. Let it be so. Although there may be no benefit to be derived from this, it is probable that some others, allergic to the well-known story about the Cubanization of Cyprus, may decide some other tribulations for this long-suffering country. The president must never underestimate this, and he must never oversimplify or ignore this.

Calamity did not strike this country out of the blue sky. It was the result of 20 years of inanity and political arbitration. It is all this--as the interlocutor states--that has once again become the rule but not the exception.

[From the "Liberal" column: "The Visit to Moscow"]

[Text] The visit President of the Republic Kiprianou is planning to make to Moscow must be an important event in the development of the Cyprus problem as well as in the relations between the two countries.

The Soviet Union is interested in our problem and firmly stands on our side in support of our struggle. President Kiprianou will find the opportunity to express the thanks of the government and the people for this Soviet support and at the same time to explore, together with the Soviet leaders, ways for further strengthening our struggle and for more effective support because we believe that there are prospects for further support of the just struggle we are waging. For example, not only are UN principles being trampled upon in Cyprus but the provisions of the Final Act of Helsinki are also being ignored and the Soviet leadership is proud that the Soviet Union has been one of the protagonist forces in implementing these provisions.

At the same time, we expect an expansion of the conditions for further development of relations between Cyprus and the Soviet Union in the economic, commercial and other sectors.

KHARAVYI APPEALS FOR UNITY ON INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

NC200911 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 20 Jun 81 p 1

[Editorial: "For a Patriotic Unity of Action"]

[Excerpts] It is a general assessment that the Cyprus problem is in a critical stage and possibly at an important turning point. The long talks have not produced any substantive results, and Cyprus remains partitioned with the Turkish occupation troops on 40 percent of its soil and with 1/3 of its population refugees for 7 years.

This tragic situation in itself should have united patriotic forces in a common struggle for liberation. The great dangers facing Cyprus from imperialism's continuing conspiracy make patriotic unity and cooperation even more imperative. It is obvious that the United States and the NATO imperialists are strengthening Turkish intransigence and maintaining the faits accomplis of the occupation, the Cyprus Republic's de facto partition, to promote their own interests and plans. For 15 years the imperialists have been working persistently to subjugate Cyprus to NATO and transform it into an unsinkable aircraft carrier and missile base in the Middle East. For this purpose they have used Turkish chauvinism and their faithful NATO organs in all "Allied" countries.

We are on the eve of the resumption of the inter-Cypriot talks, and we need serious preparation. There should be rapprochement among political parties and a serious dialogue on the way to tackle developments in the Cyprus problem. We must understand that with a divided internal front there won't be any progress in promoting a solution of the Cyprus issue. We can be certain that Cyprus' enemies will exploit internal division to the utmost.

There is a basis for a broad patriotic cooperation to promote a solution to the Cyprus problem: The joint line of the national and ministerial councils that was charted under Makarios' leadership in 1977 and integrated in the two summit agreements between Makarios and Denktas and between Kiprianou and Denktas. It is the consistent line of the unyielding struggle for a peaceful, just and permanent solution of the Cyprus problem's internal aspect through the interncommunal talks and for a solution of the Cyprus problem's international aspect within the UN framework on the basis of UN principles and resolutions.

Consequently, a possibility for achieving a patriotic cooperation among all democratic forces on the basis of a common political and socioeconomic program exists. Existing difficulties are subjective, not objective. For this reason, they should be overcome by all. In such critical moments, the fatherland's interest, patriotism, should be predominant. It should be superior to our party and personal affairs.

We expect that, pondering their historic responsibilities, all patriotic democratic political forces, all parties, will actively work to achieve patriotic cooperation and unity of action for Cyprus' salvation. Through rapprochement, dialogue and active contribution by all, a common program should be adopted and above all, ways and methods should be found for steady cooperation; ways and methods that will, at the same time, implement the common program through common action. This is because in the current critical situation there is a preeminent need not only for a common declaration and program, but for a continuous, consistent, militant, persistent, unified action to implement common goals for Cyprus' salvation and progress.

PAPER CALLS FOR INCREASED UN INITIATIVE ON ISSUES

NC230838 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 23 Jun 81 p 3

[From the "Liberal" column: "Initiative From the UN"]

[Text] We classify ourselves among these who demonstrate strong reserve toward what, from time to time (and more frequently recently), is presented about new plans for the solution of the Cyprus problem. We attribute all this to attempts to sound out the situation and nothing more. This is because every time there is mention of a new plan, no matter what the origin, for the solution of the Cyprus problem we nearly always have an immediate official denial in Nicosia. It is unthinkable that a plan for the solution of the Cyprus problem should exist without it being officially known in Nicosia.

Only recently, Yeoryios Ioannidhis, who represents the Greek Cypriot side at the intercommunal talks, stated there is no such plan. The Turkish Cypriot side has also denied the existence of a plan for the solution of the Cyprus issue.

Since we are interested in a just solution of the Cyprus issue so that it may be viable and offer a correct way for handling the numerous problems of Cyprus, we say that the best way to help efforts toward a solution would be for the United Nations to undertake the necessary initiative. This must come from the United Nations and nowhere else, because the United Nations also has the mandate to lead the effort for a solution of the Cyprus issue.

The leaders of this international forum know the Cyprus issue in all its aspects, and the UN envoy in Cyprus is not new to it. He is fully aware of developments in Cyprus and he also knows the positions of both sides, even though on some of them like the territorial issue the Turkish proposals have not yet been submitted in any concrete form. If any initiative is likely to have the best prospects for success, such an initiative must come from the United Nations.

DENKTAS CRITICIZES EEC FOR DEALING ONLY WITH SOUTH

TA191632 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the EEC is brushing aside the TFSC and discussing subjects regarding the future of Cyprus with an administration that represents southern Cyprus alone could adversely affect the intercommunal talks.

Denktas replied this morning to journalists' questions on the inclusion of certain articles concerning Cyprus-EEC relations in the agenda of the European Parliament, which is currently meeting in Strasbourg. Pointing out that there are two separate and autonomous administrations, one in the north and the other in the south of Cyprus, Denktas noted: These two administrations are currently engaged in bilateral talks to determine the status of a bicommunal, bizonal and [word indistinct] Federal Cyprus Republic. Denktas continued: Consequently, the fact that the EEC is brushing aside the TFSC, which will have an equal status in the future Federal Republic, and discussing the subjects that concern the future of Cyprus--and therefore of both communities--with an administration that represents only southern Cyprus could yield undesirable results and adversely affect the intercommunal talks. It is our conviction that the EEC Parliament and Commission should discuss these issues with both administrations on an equal level. However, these talks should not be allowed to lose their technical aspect and be transformed into a political [words indistinct]. If this is allowed, its adverse effects will certainly be felt in the intercommunal talks.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON U.S. BASES TALKS SUSPENSION

TO VIMA Article

NC211706 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 21 Jun 81 p 7

[Text] By our correspondent St. Evstathiadhis: Washington appears to be sufficiently disconcerted by the suspension of base negotiations and, in relevant discussions and comments, authoritative government personalities do not limit themselves to expressions of disappointment but also proceed to clear hints on the future of these bases, and, at the same time, these hints also include a certain amount of alarmism. At the State Department, reaction is on a much lower key and is usually accompanied by expressions of confidence that "a very satisfactory agreement will, in the end, be signed," naturally after the election, while the Pentagon's expressions are far more revealing.

The U.S. military "at all costs wanted the base agreement with Greece to be in force before August." Indirectly, but very clearly, they criticized not only the Rallis government but also the State Department for its handling of the matter--a fact which demonstrates a new turn in the sideline war between the two departments. Specifically, the military argues that "3 months were wasted on generalities which serve no purpose," and they clearly state that "Rallis thought more like a party leader than like the prime minister of an allied country." To this, the State Department officials replied that, first of all, U.S. tactics during negotiations were jointly resolved in Washington and, second, that it was the Pentagon which was "mule-headed" and showed no flexibility on questions related to "the supply of material and equipment" to Greece.

The Pentagon's interest in having "an agreement before August" is due primarily to two reasons, naturally over and beyond reasons of general strategy.

The "plans for containment (of the Soviet Union) and of allied defense" which are now under revision for the great area stretching from the Sudan to Turkey and from Sicily to the Persian Gulf are in the last stage of preparation. These plans consider the operation of Greek bases as a fact "within the framework of NATO's operational area and the protection of the vital U.S. defense positions."

Naturally, a delay in the signing of the agreement does not alter these plans, but a delay in the case of Greece is considered dangerous by the Pentagon because the country is proceeding toward elections, the results of which will, at least, influence the fate of negotiations, as the State Department representative stressed the other day, if not actually the fate of the bases themselves and more generally relations between the two countries in the military sector.

The second reason why the Pentagon wanted the agreement signed before August is because it saw this agreement to be a "guideline" and a sort of influence on similar negotiations which will be conducted within the next few months with Portugal and, later, with Spain. A "precedent" established in Greece which, even with certain phraseological vague statements, would have raised no obstacle to the use of the bases for purposes beyond NATO, would have been helpful to make Portugal give in and allow establisment of new U.S. bases in the Azores to be used for airlifts from the United States toward the Middle East.

At the State Department, concern has purely political explanations and comments are more picturesque...including those who believe that "it is better that we did not sign the agreement in haste so that we will be able to negotiate with greater ease and more calmly." The prevailing general viewpoint, however, is that at the earliest, negotiations are not likely to start before January and, on the part of Greece, "there will now be demands of a military as well as a political nature."

At the State Department they are satisfied with last Thursday's government statement which gives assurances that after the election negotiations "will be resumed" within the spirit and the letter of the 1976 agreement. There is, however, an increasing opinion among U.S. diplomats that "after the election, the government in Athens will not be the same and, at the same time, political interrelations in the country will be of a different character."

Although, as a U.S. official told a U.S. journalist a few days ago, the possibility of a Papandreou government should "not possibly be taken as a written fact," it has gained considerable ground in Washington. Yesterday, in any event, the Washington POST explained that base negotiations "collapsed under the pressure of the election which may bring Andreas Papandreou to authority." It also noted that the latest polls in the Athens areas showed the socialists (PASOK) leading the Rallis conservatives by 39 to 30 percent.

For the State Department officials and others who followed the negotiations closely, the U.S. side is also responsible for their fundamental failure. Only the fact that certain newsmen were requested "not to get particularly involved with the issue" (up to the moment the request appears to be obeyed) is revealing in itself. At the moment of peculiar self-criticism a U.S. diplomat, who, together with many others, believed that "something would be done at the last moment and that the agreement would be signed," said the other day that with the exception of U.S. Ambassador McCloskey in Athens, "nobody else (in Washington) worked properly toward the signing of the agreement." McCloskey, who is ending his term of office in the Athens embassy very soon, would have liked to return to the State Department "at least with some basic success," but he has not had it.

Naturally, criticism is primarily directed against the Greek side. The U.S. officials say that they knew at every given moment and at every fold of the developments, not only the decisions of the Greek Government but also the individual views of each one of its members on the agreement, (and it should not be imagined that they learned this through some ultra-modern electronic apparatus). They, consequently, say that with the possible exception of Mitsotakis, "who was logical and interesting," the other Greek officials "evaluated the situation on the basis of the elections as a criterion." At the same time, we must take into consideration the recommendation of a U.S. official. This will be "pointed out" to the Greek Government very soon.

At the State Department, they also criticize President Karamanlis, who is blamed because "although at the start he showed enthusiasm" over the agreement he later became "a retarding factor." Certain U.S. officials even allege now "that it was Karamanlis who ultimately asked for the suspension of the negotiations." It is on this very point that the same officials criticize the "U.S. side" for not moving more actively and because "it did not send a letter from Reagan which could have cleared up everything."

At the same time, however, U.S. officials do not avoid referring to Andreas Papandreou as well. It may be of interest to note that although it was originally believed in Washington that "every wild cry from Andreas against the bases brings the singing of the agreement closer," they now place the main burden of responsibility on him for the collapse of the negotiations. It is most interesting that they recognize this with sufficient civility. His letter to Prime Minister Rallis a few days ago and his visit to President Karamanlis are considered by nearly everybody as the "key which changed the situation." They say that after the letter and this visit, Karamanlis "showed" that he agreed that nothing should be done to bind Greece for the future. At the State Department they allege that they have this "indication" from a U.S. source in Athens as well as from Western diplomats and the Greek Government itself. TO VIMA naturally is in no position to establish this.

I KATHIMERINI Editorial

NC192046 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 19 Jun 81 p 5

[Editorial: "More Benefits..."]

[Excerpts] There are more good aspects to the suspension of the Greek-U.S. talks on the bases, or "the suspension of negotiations connected with the U.S. military facilities in our country," as the government communique describes it.

In the first place, it is bad that their status, which had been created through agreements almost 30 years ago and consequently expressing the facts and conditions that were valid at the time of their signing, that is in 1953, has been extended. It is well known that realities of 1953 have very few things in common with present times. It is also bad that the suspense has been prolonged, which cannot but have negative influences on various sectors of our national and public life until a new agreement is concluded.

All the rest is good. First of all, the preservation of national dignity without any element of Don Quixotism.

Another good aspect of the suspension is that it will make our preelection situation clearer by eliminating from party conflicts an issue that because of its nature, offered itself to exploitation by the opposition more than any other.

Still another good aspect is that it will give the Greek people the opportunity to learn the position of the official opposition party on the issue of the U.S. bases.

Now, therefore, that with the suspension of the talks the issue of the U.S. bases has returned to 1976, that is, to the common recognition of the need to revise the aged agreement, it is all the more necessary for PASOK to absolutely clarify its position toward the problem since the government statement clearly declares that the government that emerges from the elections will have to deal with the problem from the beginning, that is, from where it has remained since April 1976, unless Papandreou declares that it is impossible for his party to form a government.

KKE RIZOSPASTIS Statement

NC191928 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 19 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] The Press Office at the KKE Central Committee yesterday released the following statement:

"At noon today the New Democracy government announced that it has temporarily suspended its negotiations with the U.S. Government over the renewal of the status of the U.S. bases, and that the negotiations will be resumed following the elections.

"These negotiations were not suspended because allegedly New Democracy is interested in 'safeguarding national interests.' On the contrary, until the last minute the rightwing government was bargaining over the price for selling out national independence and peace and the country's security.

"Besides, the Americans do not come out as losers from the suspension of negotiations. They are maintaining the bases, other military installations and their nuclear weapons in our country. They are maintaining the status of capitulations, colonialist privileges and immunity. The rightwing government did not have the fundamental sensitivity for the vital national interests to at least proceed with the suspension of the U.S. bases' operations as the least measure against the big dangers that are threatening our country.

"The pan-Hellenic, massive and united mobilization of the Greek people against the foreign bases and to thwart the signing of the new agreement have had their effect on these developments because the rightwing would have been burdened with a huge political cost had it proceeded with signing the treacherous agreement.

"The issue over the bases is now completely in the people's jurisdiction. Despite any postelection plans and machinations by the imperialists, new possibilities open today for our people to attain the abolition of the U.S. bases through their vote. The continuation of operations at the bases, in any form, for anything in return or under any pretext is inadmissible.

"A decisive contribution to the realization of the people's targets would be the clear committment by all the democratic forces that after the elections they will firmly support the immediate withdrawal of the bases and nuclear weapons from our country.

"The KKE categorically states once again that, both inside and outside the Chamber of Deputies as well as before and after the elections, it will struggle with all its strength so that this vital national and people's demand may finally be realized.

Additional Coverage

NC221801 [Editorial Report] Athens Greek-language papers have carried the following comment on the suspension of the Greek-U.S. talks on the U.S. bases in Greece:

Athens RIZOSPASTIS on 20 June carries a boxed editorial on page 1 entitled "An End to Subjugation," which declares that "the way in which the right presented the suspension of the haggling on the bases can only be described as a mockery and a provocation." The editorial claims that negotiations failed because no agreement could be reached on the amount of money that the United States was to have paid for the bases, but that the situation has not changed because "the bases always remain on Greek soil and their nuclear weapons steadfastly aim at the nation's future and existence" and that the people "will not be deceived by the right's demagogic speeches or U.S. maneuvers."

On the same date, RIZOSPASTIS carries a commentary on page 2 entitled "The Dismantling of the Bases" in which the paper notes that the Americans have no reason to be in a hurry to conclude an agreement on the bases, because the "status of capitulations that was imposed by the slavish agreements of 1953 and 1956 remains intact. The bases operate as if on U.S. soil and will continue to operate under the same term even after the suspension of the negotiations."

Athens AKROPOLIS on 20 June on page 1 carries an editorial entitled "A Courageous Stand," which praises the government's firmness in "defending the national interest." The editorial states that "on its side the opposition and, especially PASOK, lay in wait for the government to decide to sign the agreement on the bases so that it could attack it with the well-known arguments of permissiveness and compliance with U.S. dictates." The editorial concludes that "Rallis and his government again discharged their duty to the country to the full."

In a boxed page 2 editorial entitled "No Relapse," Athens TO VIMA on 20 June stresses that "the suspension of the Greek-U.S. negotiations on the bases for the postelection period does not rid the two sides of certain obligations during the intervening period, since, as has been explicitly stressed, until (and if) a new agreement is signed the current status will continue to be valid. The U.S. side--those in charge of the local bases and their U.S. personnel--should behave respectfully toward the host country, its laws, morals and rules of hosptiality; and the Greek side, when necessary, should enforce this with severity and always protect the country's sovereign rights."

Athens NEA PORIA on 21 June in a page 12 editorial entitled "Absurdities..." refutes Papandreou's arguments and the positions of his statement on the postponement of the talks for the bases. The editorial says that "therefore, the conclusion to be drawn from the PASOK chairman's reaction is that Andreas Papandreou opposes the government not only when he disagrees with the actions of the majority party but even when reality proves his prophecies of doom to be incorrect."

On 21 June Athens RIZOSPASTIS carries a commentary on page 12 in which it denounces the government for having tried to present the suspension of the negotiations on the bases as proof of its strong defense of the national interests. The newspaper notes that "the truth, however, is quite different, because, first of all, the government never, not for a moment, contemplated disputing the substance of the problem: the present as such of the U.S. bases on our soil." The commentary continues by saying that the U.S. bases will "continue to operate undisturbed, as was the case during the negotiations, under the colonialist status of the shameful agreements of 1953..." The comment stresses: "The servile position of the right has reached such a point that it does not have the rudimentary sensitivity to simultaneously suspend the operation of the U.S. bases and the talks." Then PASOK's position toward the suspension of the negotiations is taken up and the newspaper notes that in PASOK's reply to the government statement on the suspension of the talks "a tendency can be detected to sidestep the true problems that are linked with the nature and role of the U.S. bases whose 'presence as such'--as PASOK claimed in the past--does not 'serve the national interests.' Under the theory of 'compartmentalization' which PASOK is currently putting forth, a tendency can be detected to keep 'in suspense' the problem of the abolition of the bases and have its place taken by 'conditions', 'exchanges', 'stages', 'timetables', 'the need for the readiness of the armed forces' and so forth."

A 21 June Athens I KATHIMERINI page 9 editorial entitled "Many Things Have Changed" stresses that in 1953 when the agreements for the U.S.bases in Greece were signed "the most important, in any case, incentive for the signing of those agreements was the absolute identity of U.S. and Greek Government positions regarding the communist danger and the need for taking immediate measures for dealing with it." Since 1953, however, many things have changed in the world and especially in Greece. The most important change, however, is that "the Greek Governments obstinately claim the right to chart and exercise a national foreign policy; a policy that will be inspired by the effort to protect the national interests as we understand them and not as these would suit the international policy of a third, even though allied power!"

He added that the loans are extended for 15 years, with a 5-year period of grace.

The agreement envisaging the $250-million loan by the fund to Turkey was signed in 1978. Turkey has so far used about a third of the amount.

DELEGATION NEGOTIATES EEC FINANCIAL PROTOCOL

TA191510 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Turkish radio and television correspondent Nusret Ozgul telephone report from Brussels--recorded]

[Text] The talks between Turkey and the EEC on the fourth financial protocol started a while ago. The Turkish delegation attending the Turkish-EEC association committee meetings is headed by the under secretary of the Turkish mission at the EEC, Sonmez Koksal. The Community is represented by EEC Commission officials. If there is a mutual agreement at the end of the talks concerning the 600-million European monetary units to be extended to Turkey over a period of 5 years within the framework of the fourth financial protocol, then the text of the protocol will be initialled today. According to information received by official sources on this subject, an agreement is expected to be reached today over the text approved by the EEC Ministerial Council during its 19 May meeting. During their technical talks last night, the Turkish and EEC officials reviewed final details.

The fourth financial protocol, the amount and conditions of which were determined at the association committee meeting held at the ministerial level on 30 June 1980 in a bid to mutually revive the association relations between the two parties, is basically the same as the third financial protocol, which expires on 31 October. However, the EEC is now charging a lower rate of interest for the 325-million monetary units, which is being extended at special conditions, in view of Turkey's current economic difficulties. The rate of interest charged in the third financial protocol was 2.5 percent. This portion is now being extended for 40 years--with a 10-year grace period--at 1 percent interest. The 225-million loan, which will be financed by the European Development Bank, will be subject to the current market rate of interest. Another important aspect, which was mutually agreed upon, is that the 600-million loan will be extended to Turkey in large portions in the first 3 years rather than in equal portions over 5 years. Of this amount, 50 million monetary units will be extended to Turkey as a grant from the EEC budget. This amount is to be used in economic and technical cooperation projects.

According to information received, certain clarifying aspects requested by Turkey will be included in today's association committee document. In addition, a statement is expected to be issued recommending that the fourth financial protocol be ratified by the EEC Ministerial Council as soon as possible, published in the Community official paper and put into effect after being signed by the two sides.

Agreement Initialed

TA191735 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 19 Jun 81

[Text] The 5-year financial protocol between Turkey and the EEC, which is expected to go into effect on 1 November 1981, was initialed in Brussels today. According to our correspondent in Brussels Nusret Ozgul, the protocol stipulates that the EEC extend about $640 million loan to Turkey. Of this loan, some $240 million will be extended by the European Investment Bank at the current market interest rate. The remaining amount of about $400 million will be secured from the EEC budget. Of this amount, $53 million will be a grant and the rest will be extended for 40 years--with a 10-year period of grace--at 1 percent rate of interest. The $640 million loan will be extended to Turkey in large portions within the first 3 years after the financial protocol goes into effect. The protocol was initialed by the first under secretary of the Turkish mission at the EEC, Sonmez Koksal, on behalf of Turkey.

The fourth financial protocol has to be ratified by the EEC Minsterial Council and signed by the two sides before it goes into effect. The loans secured by Turkey from the EEC within the framework of financial protocols are used in financing projects to revive the Turkish economy and ensure the development of the association between Turkey and the Community.

LORD CARRINGTON PROPOSES UN MEETING ON AFGHANISTAN

LD231704 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1644 GMT 23 Jun 81

[By Geoff Meade, LPA staff reporter in Luxembourg]

[Text] The foreign secretary, Lord Carrington, today launched a major initiative designed to end Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. He is calling for a conference of the five permanent member countries of the UN Security Council, possibly in Islamabad, the Pakistan capital, in the autumn. The initiative has the full backing of EEC member governments, and a formal request for such a conference is expected to be made by Common Market leaders at their summit in Luxemburg next week.

Lord Carrington's move came at a meeting of EEC foreign ministers preparing for the summit which takes place next Monday and Tuesday. The big question, however, is whether the Soviets will agree to such a proposal. The Security Council permanent members--France, USA, Britain, China and the Soviet Union--would be joined by Afghanistan's near neighbours, Iran, Pakistan and India. Representatives of the Afghan authorities would also be invited to take part.

According to the proposal, the Common Market would not be expected to play a direct role in any talks, which would be followed by another conference of the nations involved sometime next year. It is to be expected that this second meeting would get down to the fundamental issue of finding peaceful ways of removing Soviet troops from Afghanistan in a form acceptable to all sides. Most of the countries which would be involved have already been approached, and it is understood a representative from the British Embassy in Moscow today visited the Kremlin to discuss the possibility of a conference.

The broad resolution, agreed in principle by EEC foreign ministers and to be discussed more fully at the summit, calls for an end to "external interference in Afghanistan". So far, there is no direct reference to Soviet forces currently in Afghanistan, although there may be calls for a stronger form of words when the issue is raised next week.

NETHERLANDS CHAIRMANSHIP OF EEC CRITICIZED

PM231447 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 18 Jun 81 p 5

[Text] Strasbourg, 18 Jun--Yesterday the European Parliament poured scorn on the Netherlands chairmanship of the EEC. "A distressing experience," said socialist group leader Ernest Glinne. Italian Communist member Fanti described the term of Foreign Minister van der Klaauw and Secretary of State van der Mei as "a low point in the history of the Community which we should forget as quickly as we can." The only Netherlands participant in the debate in Strasbourg yesterday, Christian Democrat Jean Penders, said that he only needed a few minutes to "pass a fairly spiteful judgement on the Netherlands chairmanship--not much has come of it."

Secretary of State van der Mei--who was standing in for Van der Klaauw, who was on his way to Manila at the time--had seen the storm coming. In his balance sheet of the Netherlands chairmanship, which expires 30 June and passes to Britain, he said: "In the last few months the Community--and therefore the chairmanhsip--has not had a favorable mind. Perhaps it would be better to speak of a headwind or of the dolorums, which have been well used for reflection about the future."

In his 45-minute speech Van der Mei made special mention of European political cooperation, the many trips by Minister van der Klaauw to the Middle East, and the organization of the so-called "jumbo council." The only participant in the debate who had anything kind to say was British Conservative member Sir Fred Warner. He said that Van der Klaauw had followed well the decisions of the Venice summit last year.

MANY MORE POLISH REFUGEES REQUESTING ASYLUM

[Peter Zehrer report: "Polish Refugees Rushing to Austria"]

[Summary] "The uncertain political situation in Poland has set off a run to the West, chiefly of younger Poles. Naturally Austria is the country of admission in the first instance. In the first half of this year the number of applicants for asylum from Poland increased almost 14 times compared with the same period last year. According to estimates, some 10,000 Poles are now staying in Austria and about half of them have applied for asylum."

"By 15 June 6,737 applicants for asylum had been registered and 4,045 of these are Poles. but the number of unregistered ones is at least as high." The International Committee for European Migration in Geneva mentions some 10,000 Poles waiting in Austria either for processing of their applications for asylum or simply for developments in their homeland.

"In the first 5 months of this year 3,366 Poles reported to the aliens' police, last year there were only 374. In May alone 991 Poles came (1980: 116) and 1,060 Poles applied for asylum in the first half of June alone."

Whereas a Vienna-based Polish-U.S. aid organization traces the boom to the fact that Polish authorities are almost throwing passports at those citizens who are willing to emigrate as a means of coping with Poland's economic difficulties, Ministry Counselor Dr Herbert Krizek stated that "since visas have been abolished between Poland and Austria the Poles evidently no longer have any particular problems with obtaining passports."

The majority of the applicants for asylum want to emigrate to Australia, Canada and the United States and some time ago Austria had appealed to those countries to increase their admission quotas.

Last year Austria spent 160 million schillings on refugee care and this year it will be 230 million, Dr Krizek estimates.

Austrian Interior Ministry officials expect events after 14 July, the day the PZPR congress opens, to show whether the rush of Poles to Austria will subside or continue.

GOVERNMENT FORMATION MAKING LITTLE PROGRESS

PM231400 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 20 Jun 81 pp 1, 3

["Own correspondent" report: "Government Formation Negotiations Founder"]

[Excerpts] The Hague--Negotiation leaders Lubbers and De Koning seem to be running into difficulties in their attempt to help form a cabinet embracing the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA), the Labor Party (PVDA) and the Democrats '66 (D'66). The question of the premiership, which was unexpectedly placed on yesterday's agenda by the negotiation leaders, appears to be "open to discussion," but agreement on this point is not in sight. The same is true of the important policy differences between the three parties (financial and socioeconomic issues, nuclear energy and nuclear arms).

On some points agreement looks possible, the negotiation leaders said, but only if agreement is reached on the others. Everything hangs together, it was said, and this makes it "incredibly difficult" to reach partial agreements on the various main sections of the agenda.

From the very beginning, the premiership and the composition of a new cabinet have been a troublesome issue in the present phase of government formation negotiations. The CDA--both its parliamentary faction and its party organization--has always assumed that as the largest party it should provide the prime minister in a new government and that this person would have to be its parliamentary leader Van Agt. The PVDA and D'66 are not especially opposed to a CDA prime minister, but are of the opinion that a cabinet with a different political complexion from the present one should be led by someone other than Van Agt.

The negotiation leaders said that they had put the premiership on the agenda because this should be done "in the middle of the negotiations" and they considered that the moment had come. However, at the beginning of this week it was said that the premiership would only be discussed if sufficient political willingness was shown to reach agreements on various points of policy. But not much political willingness has been apparent. Up to now, there has been no actual agreement on any of the main issues on the agenda.

Lubbers and De Koning consider that it is now time for the three parliamentary parties to be informed of the present state of affairs. This weekend the parliamentary party leaders should think about how they will bring their members up to date and which part of the "talks' repercussions" (Lubbers) should be made public. One possibility mentioned by the negotiation leaders is a document written by Lubbers and De Koning with a summary of points on which an agreement or a conditional agreement can be reached and the points where there are still differences of opinion.

The negotiation leaders said that it would be "wise" to inform the CDA, PVDA and D'66 parliamentary parties in greater detail of the progress of their talks with the parliamentary party leaders. However, the negotiation leaders yesterday used extremely vague terms to describe this progress. Lubbers said: "what is particularly noticeable is the willingness of all three parliamentary party leaders to look again at all the points on the agenda to see whether it will be possible to reach a joint conclusion;" and "nearing the solution of central problems step by step."

There are still a couple of major points on the agenda (transport and waterways, and health) which must be discussed next week. However, on Friday, troublesome points such as nuclear arms, for example, were discussed for the second time. None of the parties is keen to be made responsible for a possible breakdown in the talks. The negotiators are not agreed on a number of points, but none of the parties has thought that this means that a breakdown is inevitable. But optimism in The Hague about the continued chances of success in the government formation talks was not very great on Friday.

FDP'S MOELLEMANN COMMENTS ON ROSTOW STATEMENT

LD240944 Hamburg DPA in German 0830 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 24 Jun (DPA)--The speaker on security matters of the FDP Parliamentary Group Juergen Moellemann, called on the U.S. Government to finally make clear its stand on central arms policy questions. The deputy was referring to Monday's statement by the new head of the U.S. Disarmament Commission, Eugene Rostow, according to which disarmament negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union could start in March 1982 at the earliest.

Moellemann said in Bonn that the continual contradictions between leading representatives of the U.S. Government contribute to an atmosphere of uncertainty in the alliance and thus to difficulties in the realization of the NATO twin decision regarding medium-range missiles in Europe. The FDP politician underlined that the date for starting negotiations this year--as agreed between U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher--has to be kept.

The time for starting negotiations with Moscow was affirmed in May by U.S. President Ronald Reagan during the visit of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to Washington. With reference to the statements by Haig and Reagan, the chancellor and Foreign Minister Genscher have repeatedly rejected doubts of a U.S. willingness to negotiate.

LEADERS MEET WITH NEW ZEALAND PRIME MINISTER

Schmidt, Apel Talks

LD221330 Hamburg DPA in German 1158 GMT 22 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 Jun (DPA)--New Zealand Prime Minister Robert D. Muldoon had a meeting today in Bonn with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at the start of his 5-day visit to the Federal Republic. The joint exchange of political views centered on East-West relations and world economic problems, including questions of agricultural trade between New Zealand and the European Community. Last year, the Federal Republic came out in favor of New Zealand obtaining further facilities for its butter exports to the European Community.

Muldoon also met this afternoon with Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel who was in New Zealand in March of last year. The New Zealand prime minister, moreover, intends holding talks with representatives of German business, as New Zealand is interested in German investments. Muldoon intends to visit West Berlin on Wednesday.

Meeting With Genscher

LD231830 Hamburg DPA in German 1648 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 23 Jun (DPA)--New Zealand Prime Minister Robert Muldoon, who has been in Bonn on an official visit since Monday, met Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher Tuesday evening for an exchange of ideas on foreign and security policy problems. On Wednesday, Muldoon will fly on to Berlin after visiting Federal President Karl Carstens.

The New Zealand Government leader also had a longer talk on Tuesday with the president of the Confederation of German Industry, Rolf Rodenstock, and learned about methods of lignite mining in the Rhenish lignite area. New Zealand also has considerable reserves of oil and coal and is interested in cooperation with German businesses in energy exploitation.

DIE WELT ANTICIPATES SLOWER PACE IN TRADE WITH EAST

[Hans-Juergen Mahnke article: "Eastern Trade Without Illusions"]

[Text] German trade with the East this year did not keep pace with the general foreign trade development. Its role has decreased in both exports and imports. But this trend is not uniform. Thus, the goods exchange with the Soviet Union, Hungary and Bulgaria was overproportionately brisk. Traders with the East keep saying that consolidated trade is better than an excessively debt-burdened trade. After all, the German surplus over the state-trade countries dropped from nearly DM9 billion in 1975 to DM2 billion last year. What caused this in the first place was the purchasing reserve of the East.

During the first 4 months of this year and compared with the same period of last year, German exports to the state-trade countries increased by 4.1 percent to DM6.5 billion whereas total exports expanded by 4.9 percent. Imports from the East increased by 2.7 percent to DM5.6 billion, a rate which is not even half that of the overall imports, namely, 5.6 percent. These increase rates in the trade with the East probably were not even enough to compensate for the price increases. Just like in 1980, it was primarily the goods exchange with the Soviet Union, by far the biggest Eastern trade partner, which saw a favorable development. After an increase by 20 percent last year, the German deliveries increased by 11.8 percent to DM2.7 billion. Above all due to the higher prices for energy raw materials, the German imports increased by 5.1 percent to a level of DM2.4 billion. This price increase--the deliveries of energy raw materials already showed an overproportionate decrease last year--gives the Soviet Union the cushion it needs for intensified orders for machines, products of electrical engineering, pipes and foodstuffs from the Federal Republic.

Much higher in percentage, albeit on a much lower level, is the expansion of trade with Hungary and Bulgaria. In contrast, the goods exchange with Poland and Romania clearly decreased in both directions. The slump in the Polish economy was reflected by a decrease in deliveries during the first 4 months by 16.7 percent to DM671 million. The German exports dropped by 9.9 percent to DM740 million. German deliveries to Romania decreased by 13.6 percent to a level of DM527 million. Purchases from that country dropped by 14.2 percent to DM479 million.

Czechoslovakia, which in 1980 scored a surplus in trade with Germany for the first time, continued to briskly increase its deliveries by 12.4 percent to DM682 million. In contrast, the purchases from the Federal Republic showed a disproportionate increase by a mere 3.1 percent to a level of DM594 million.

The continued consolidation phase of the Chinese economic policy has led to a further decrease in German deliveries by 7.7 percent to DM806 million. Conversely, the imports which in 1980 had increased by 50 percent, once again skyrocketed by 33 percent to DM600 million.

There is no call for illusions about the further development of trade with the East. Important factors indicate a slower pace. Unlike the early 1970's no impulses may be expected from the political side. Instead, some retarding influences may emanate from the U.S.-Soviet relations. In this field, the second oil price shock still has a paralyzing effect. The growth prospects of the German economy have been corrected downward, which reduces the East's sales opportunities. But also the state-trade countries, for the plan period just begun, are not nearly as optimistic as they had been before. Generally, a restrained investment course is taking shape. The tendency is no longer expansion of the industrial apparatus but modernization of the existing installations. This is also the direction in which the difficulties within the East bloc are taking effect. On the one hand, the delivery commitments of the smaller states toward the Soviet Union increase as a result of the higher oil prices and, on the other hand, the aid to Poland has a burdening effect on exports to the West even now. If German trade with the East were able to retain the present level, many experts would be satisfied indeed.

SOCIALIST LEADERSHIP ENDORSES PS-PCF AGREEMENT

NC231313 Paris AFP in English 1255 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Paris, 23 Jun (AFP)--The Socialist Party leadership swiftly endorsed the agreement thrashed out last night between Communist and Socialist representatives following the Socialists' overwhelming victory in elections for the National Assembly.

The draft agreement being discussed stated notably that the parties would promote together the new policy decided by the French electorate in choosing Socialist Francois Mitterrand as president. Both parties will act in the National Assembly within the new majority and "in the government in unfailing solidarity," as well as in local and regional bodies, the proposed pact said.

"While reaffirming their attachment to the particular personalities and fundamental positions of each party," the two sides "will take as a basis in all fields the choice made by the country and the agreements reached in their discussions."

On foreign policy--the most delicate aspect of the negotiations, as the French Communists have so far backed Moscow almost unreservedly--the draft agreement said that both sides would encourage "respect for the right of self-determination for peoples, sovereignty of states, non-interference in their internal affairs and the right of each country to its security." These principles have "universal value" and in this respect the two sides "affirm the right of the Afghan people to choose their regime and their government and declare their support for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan and an end to all foreign interference," the statement said.

On disarmament in Europe and beyond, both sides "will support France's international action in respecting its alliances for peace and progressive disarmament with a view to the simultaneous dissolution of military blocs while assuring the balance of forces in Europe and the world and the security of every country," the draft agreement added. It called for "early international negotiations on the limitation and reduction of armaments in Europe, particularly with regard to the presence of Soviet SS-20 missiles and the decision to install (U.S.) Pershing II rockets."

On the Middle East, the proposed pact acknowledged the effects of the Camp David agreement and "reaffirms the right of Israel and all states in the region to existence and security, as well as the right of the Palestinian people to a homeland."

The draft agreement added, "the two sides have discussed the development of the situation in Poland and wish that the country and its people themselves lead to a successful conclusion the process of economic, social and democratic renewal in which they are engaged."

Both parties also expressed their solidarity in the economic and political sectors with the peoples of the Third World who, "as in El Salvador and Nicaragua, struggle for their national emancipation, development and democratic and social liberation."

On the home front the draft agreement backed a two-year recovery plan "to create the conditions for a new economic growth and an effective fight against unemployment." Both sides wanted a reduction in social inequalities, guaranteed and extended freedoms, the development of workers' rights and democracy in national life.

Sources in the Socialist leadership said after the approval of the pact that the compromise accepted by the Communists on Afghanistan, Poland, the SS-20 rockets and the Middle East--the most controversial points--was satisfactory.

The sources indicated that the negotiations had faltered over the question of Poland as the Communists had not wanted the name of the country to be mentioned as in their view there was no problem involved. Communist leader Georges Marchais himself was said to have personally drafted the text referring to Poland at the very end of the negotiations at about 2 AM local time today.

PAPERS COMMENT ON SOCIALIST ELECTION VICTORY

LE FIGARO Editorial

PM231501 Paris LE FIGARO in French 22 Jun 81 p 1

[Editorial: "The Blank Check"]

[Text] France has swung to the left. It has a Socialist president for 7 years and an assembly for 5 years in which the PS alone holds an absolute majority. In short, the left holds all the powers needed for achieving what it has been announcing from the start: the "Socialist transformation of society."

This is what the French people wanted: the legitimists who rallied to Mitterand because he is in power, the abstentionists who did not have the courage to decide one way or another, and the stupid people who chose to shut their eyes and close their ears and who are desparately trying to reassure themselves by declaring that everything will turn out right. And of course, there are the left's sincere supporters who see happiness and prosperity in the coming of socialism.

The democratic rule requires that we bow to universal suffrage. It doesn't force us either to rejoice or to sit back and say nothing. Since the beginning of this interminable election campaign, we have in this newspaper, called our fellow citizens' attention to the risks they were running. We thought that it would be preferable to see Giscard d'Estaing as head of state rather than Mitterand. We have not changed our view. We thought that it would have been preferable for France if the voters returned a sufficient number of deputies from the former majority to the assembly to counterbalance the executive. We have not changed our view.

The French people, with their gaze turned toward the blue horizon of Saint Tropez, chose differently. It must be admitted that it is difficult to send people into battle when they have no leader. Clearly the former majority did not have one. In that sense, its defeat is explicable and the left's victory is deserved.

What now? Anything is possible when a single political party controls both the executive and parliament without needing its allies' support. The French people can have no illusion about the general idea of the plan, about what they can expect. They were given full details about the measures which would be taken to "change society". Let's recall the main ones: nationalization of credit and the means of production; freezing the nuclear program; calling private education into question; real estate reform; increased fiscal pressure and so forth. We do not want the failure of the regime which has taken control of this country's destiny because over and above ideological commitments the good and the preservation of France must be considered. But we are acutely afraid that the "state of grace", the appeal to the spirits of great ancestors, Solutre [reference to prehistoric French settlement] and the miracle of the roses [play of words on Christ's miracle of the loaves and fishes] are inadequate remedies with which to tackle present-day realities.

These realities comprise increasing dangers in a cruel world, the economic crisis, fierce competition among nations, the problems of a country--our country--which above all needs order, work and efficiency.

The Socialists have won power. Montherlant wrote: "All that is achieved is destroyed."

LE MONDE Editorial

PM231412 Paris LE MONDE in French 23 Jun 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Almost Alone in Europe."]

[Text] The resounding Socialist victory in Sunday's election places France in an almost unique position in Europe. On the old continent, you very rarely find cases of a government and a president capable of governing their country with the support of their party alone, with an absolute majority of seats in parliament.

Britain, with its majority election system, is generally in this situation; but aside from the fact that alternation is the rule in that country, the very extremes of the single ballot majority election system and the tractable problems the country's facing have had the effect of eroding the power of the two big parties. The Labor Party, removed from power 2 years ago, has taken its divisions as far as a split.

Sweden, which ended 40 years of Social Democratic domination in 1976, nonetheless has not found stability; the pendulum could well swing back in the election scheduled for next year. Only Austria, which has been led by Chancellor Kreisky for more than 10 years, shows remarkable continuity in the exercise of power by a homogeneous Socialist government. This case is particularly remarkable since that country, like Sweden, elects its deputies by the proportional representation system.

Everywhere else, whatever the election system, stability is based on a difficult coexistence among several parties or expedient alliances which markedly limit the main government party's freedom of action. But guaranteeing that France will be an exception to the rule for at least 5 years at parliamentary level, Sunday's election certainly amounts to a "rebirth" for the Fifth Republic and confirms that the institutions bequeathed by General de Gaulle occupy a place apart in Europe.

The fact that the Socialists are benefiting from this, even though it is hailed as an "example" and a "model" by the "fraternal parties," does not necessarily have the general significance which some people lend to it. France has certainly frequently pointed the way to major historical developments to its neighbors--as it demonstrated from 1789 to 1968.

But it is clearly the question of Communist participation in the government which is attracting most attention abroad. Paradoxically, the scale of the Socialist victory will have had a reassuring effect in the most conservative circles since it was accompanied by Communist losses.

The other European Socialist Parties are, it is true, in a very different situation since, except in Italy, they have no partner on their left. European Socialist governments can only conceive of an alliance on their right.

LE MONDE LAUDS MITTERRAND'S MIDDLE EAST STANCE

PM231522 Paris LE MONDE in French 19 Jun 81 1

[Editorial: "Consistent Statements"]

[Text] Is the Middle East problem intractable? Mitterrand must be asking himself this question. Only a few days after his inauguration, here he is confronted with this crisis, which good will will not suffice to resolve.

The president's interview with the Washington POST on this subject reflects the frustrations that he is already feeling. Without at all denying his sympathies for Israel or his statements while a presidential candidate, Mitterrand issues a tough verdict on Begin, who is accused of having failed to trust in him. This verdict is entirely justified inasmuch as Begin has never concealed his mistrust of, not to say hostility toward the French-Iraqi nuclear agreement.

The destruction of the Tammuz plant even before the French president had a chance to examine the matter and possibly keep his promises constitutes on Begin's part a provocative gesture, to say the least, toward France. Indeed, it is tantamount to regarding all its president's undertakings as worthless.

Begin's electoral motivations in this matter are evident, though Mitterrand declined to discuss this aspect. Everything seemed set for the Likud party leader to win the 30 June general election: the impassioned accusations against Chancellor Schmidt and Giscard d'Estaing some weeks ago, the charges of "treason" leveled at his political adversaries and the increasingly systematic recourse to violence by his more fanatical supporters, to which we must now add an arrogant disregard for the former PS candidate's promises.

It isn't surprising that such behavior has shocked Mitterrand. The fact that he has not used it to justify a turnabout is entirely to his credit: Israel's future must not be dependent on the whims and provocations of a prime minister who seems to take pleasure in regarding as the supreme justification for his actions the reprobation that they engender, even and particularly when this reprobation is justified. Apart from Begin, it is the Israelis whom Mitterrand is clearly trying to address when he reiterate his opposition to any military application of civilian nuclear resources, his approval of the Camp David agreements (rare enough in Europe to deserve underlining), his rejection of sanctions against the Israeli "people" and his attachment to the existence and security of the Jewish state. The only "punishment," if one can call it that, which he will inflict on Begin will doubtless be to pay an official visit to Saudi Arabia before going to Israel.

It is to be hoped that the president's words will be heeded by those concerned. Too many heads of state and of government have never succeeded in discovering a tone of sincerity, even a modicum of warmth and understanding, toward Israel for Mitterrand's remarks not to sound like a welcome exception. Nevertheless, we regret that the president decided to grant these remarks first to a foreign newspaper. At election time, shouldn't the French people be the first to be informed of the intentions and aims of French diplomacy?

Party Leaders' Assessments

AU231107 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 23 Jun (ANSA)--Any political reading of Italian election results has always proved tricky because of the complexity of relations among the parties and the large number of forces in the field. This has proved particularly true for this latest round of local elections which involved around 9 million voters (almost one-fourth of the entire electorate) as differing and sometimes contradictory results were obtained in the south, and in the rest of the country, in the big cities as against the towns. The figures lent themselves to varying interpretations by the parties, who viewed changes in numerical relationships with an eye to possible political alignments.

Initial reactions to the election results tended to focus on the viability of various solutions for local administrations. Of course, it escaped no one's attention that the electoral showdown came at a critical time in national political affairs, smack in the middle of a government crisis with a premier-designate, Republican Party Secretary Giovanni Spadolini, involved in negotiations with prospective coalition parties.

The Socialists, who clearly improved their position at the polls, were already speaking of the demise of the bipolar grip the Christian Democrats and the Communists have had on the nation and an end to the attempts at a "historic compromise" that would have seen some ruling arrangement made between Italy's two largest parties (the DC and the PCI).

The Communist Party (PCI) saw the election results as a spur to the construction of a democratic alternative to alignments up until now hinged on alliance with the Christian Democratic Party (DC). PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer, in a televised statement last night, stressed that in addition to the good show made by his own party, the Socialist Party was strengthened and progress was made by the other lay parties.

Before the television cameras, DC Secretary Flaminio Piccoli claimed that voters turned thumbs down on the PCI call for a leftwing alternative. He also voiced the conviction that the results had strengthened the prospects for success of Premier-designate Giovanni Spadolini in his bid to form a new government.

Social Democratic Party (PSDI) Secretary Pietro Longo voiced satisfaction with this party's showing and that of the entire socialist and laic democratic front. He, like Piccoli, believed the vote would have a positive effect on Spadolini's efforts in that the results "should stabilize the political picture".

Liberal Party (PLI) Secretary Valerio Zanone said the election outcome had further lessened bipolarism and lent encouragement to the lay parties. Zanone was the only party secretary to note "the alarming increase" in abstentions (around 20 percent), a phenomenon in which it was not difficult to discern, among other causes, growing and dangerous disenchantment of the electorate, he said.

MSI-DN Neofascist Party Secretary Giorgio Almirante judged his party's showing as "moderately positive". He noted the success of minor parties which he claimed had been favored by Spadolini's being named premier-designate. (Spadolini's own Republican Party is a tiny one). Almirante added that these minor parties would need all the help they could get to protect them from "Craxi's caprices" which, the "MSI" leader asserted, could throw everything up for grabs in the next few days.

The Radicals, who did not put up any of their own candidates in these elections, had urged their sympathizers to abstain. They claimed today that the elections had been won by the abstention party.

With the election results in, the parties prepared to hold leadership meetings to evaluate the vote and to take a stand on the government platform proposed by Spadolini. The DC has already announced a leadership meeting for tomorrow.

Additional Comment

NC231303 Paris AFP in English 1242 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 23 Jun (AFP)--Final results of partial municipal and regional elections in Italy saw the Socialists gain 3.7 percent over previous local elections in 1976, while the majority Christian Democrats and their main rivals, the Communists, lost 2.8 and 1.7 percent respectively. The results showed that Socialist Party Secretary Bettino Craxi had gambled correctly in refusing to commit himself to Prime Minister-designate Giovanni Spadolini before the Sunday-Monday polls. Mr Spadolini, who took over the leadership of the tiny Republican Party after a distinguished career in university and journalism only a few years ago, was to resume his consultations today.

The Socialists cannot fairly claim the "landslide" some party leaders predicted after the polls closed. But with an average 14 percent of the votes in elections in Puglie, Latium and to municipal councils in several major cities, from Bari to Genoa, Mr Craxi is in a strong position to bargain with Mr Spadolini. The Socialists had seven portfolios in the last cabinet and are expected to improve their share in the planned five-party coalition. However, most observers view this as a temporary measure, before renewing a bid for a Socialist prime minister.

The five-party coalition Mr Spadolini plans to set up will add the secular-conservative Liberal Party to the outgoing coalition grouping the Christian Democrats, the Socialists, the Social Democrats and his own Republican Party. The Christian Democrats are expected to be malleable in this week's negotiations, and anxious to avoid early elections after their set-back in the regional polls.

The set-back, due largely but not exclusively to the preponderant Christian-Democrat role in last month's P-2 Masonic lodge scandal, was marked not only in municipal and provincial elections on the mainland but in elections on Sunday to Sicily s regional assembly. A traditional bastion both of the church and of conservatism, Sicily saw a clear drop in Communist votes but also evident dissatisfaction with the Christian Democrats.

However, despite the Sicilian flop, the Communists appeared satisfied with their overall results today, notably a strengthening of their control of the capital's Municipal Council. The Communists improved their score in Rome from 35.5 percent in 1976 to 35.9, ensuring that Communist Mayor Luigi Petroselli keeps his job. The Christian Democrats dropped from 33.1 to 29.6 percent, while the Socialists increased their votes from 8.3 to 10.2 percent.

Politicians of all shades of conviction appeared dismayed today at the record number of voters who stayed away from the polls. With abstentionists doubled from the usual 10 to 20 percent, observers interpeted this lack of interest in the poll as a further sign of the average Italian's disillusionment with his country's institutions, of which the Christian Democrats are the prime symbol.

POLICE ARREST RED BRIGADES SUSPECTS IN TURIN

NC231446 Paris AFP in English 1438 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] Turin, Italy, 23 Jun (AFP)--Seven suspected members of the Red Brigades have been arrested and an alleged terrorist hideout discovered, police said today.

A raid on the alleged hideout followed two weeks of intensive police activity in the Turin area. The seven suspects have been charged with belonging to an illegal armed organisation and possession of arms and explosives.

Among documents seized during the raid were the plans of a police barracks, false identity papers and personal details concerning two security officials. Several firearms and a large sum of money were also found at the hideout.

POLICE ARREST THREE ARMY OFFICERS IN COUP PLOT

NC232020 Paris AFP in English 2015 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] Madrid, 23 Jun (AFP)--Spanish police arrested three army officers and three civilians today after interrogating them about a possible rightwing plot against the state, an authoritative source said.

The suspects were said to have held secret meetings to discuss following up the unsuccessful 23 February coup. They included two women, two colonels and a major. A fourth civilian was released after questioning, the source said.

The men arrested were Col Antonio Sicre Canut of the Madrid military government, his brother Luis Sicre, Col Ricardo Garcitorena Salva, the aide de camp of a general whose name was not disclosed, and Major Ricardo Saenz de Ynestrillas of the Madrid military government who was already implicated in the "galaxy rebellion project" of November 1978.

Major Seanz was jailed six months last year along with Civil Guard Lieutenant Col Antonio Tejero for taking part in the "galaxy" project, which was allegedly planned to seize Moncloa Palace, the government headquarters.

Lt Col Tejero then led the civil guardsmen who seized parliament in the coup attempt last 23 February.

The two women under arrest were Mrs Maria Concepcion Villagrasa, a civil servant at the premier's office, and Mrs Maria Paz Perez Nieto.

The six were arrested after an investigation by a special police group set up on 5 June and called the "little anti-putsch brigade." A general whose name has not been revealed has been appointed a special judge to hear the case.

PSOE DOCUMENT VIEWS STATE PROBLEMS, SOLUTIONS

LD191525 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 16 Jun 81 p 13

[Text] Madrid, 15 Jun--The socialist party's Federal Committee approved a basic document on the state's problems and the solutions to them proposed by that organization. The top Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] leaders of regions and nationalities met in Madrid over the weekend and agreed to intensify a policy of consultation with the government, provided that guarantees of fulfillment and quids pro quo are observed. In various paragraphs of this 10-page document, the socialists describe this policy of consensus with the government as insufficient to strengthen the democratic system and emphasize the need to adopt government measures which will reform the state structure, defend freedoms and public safety, surmount the economic crisis and harmonize viewpoints on foreign policy. Concerning the lastmentioned topic, the socialists are in favor of intensifying efforts for Spain's entry into the Common Market and of reorienting our relations with Latin America and the Arab world. With respect to Spain's entry into NATO, they advise that this measure not be adopted because there is no unity among the parties on this issue. PSOE Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez tomorrow will hold a news conference on the contents of this document, a summary of which, supplied by the party itself, we reproduce below.

Transition Is Not Over

Some 4 years after the first democratic election, Spain, the youngest of Europe's democracies but one of its oldest nations, is experiencing difficulties which are threatening its future as a free society and the peaceful coexistence of its citizens. The historical enemies of the freedoms, helped by new forms of violent totalitarianism, have been intensifying their harassent of the democratic state over the last few months, attacking institutions and people to create tension and distrust on the basis of carefully planned destabilizing strategies.

The transition from dictatorship to democracy is not over. Democracy is weak and must be supported and strengthened until the threats looming over it are finally dispelled. Completing the transition is a necessary task to ensure that Spanish citizens need never again mourn for freedom after losing it. This requires an historic effort on the part of the political forces and on the part of all citizens. Spanish society today has within its grasp the possibility of ensuring its rights and freedoms and a democratic system of coexistence; a firm government can take irreversible steps which will finally establish us in the community of free societies.

New Approach

In addition to tackling and dispelling these threats of terrorism of every kind and the regressiveness which feeds on it in the form of conspiracies and attempted coups, we must consider again within the perspective of the last 4 years the scale of the tasks of transformation which have been undertaken and are still to be undertaken, as well as the challenge of the economic crisis which the world is experiencing and which is especially affecting Spain. It is a matter of taking stock calmly and hopefully of the distance covered by democracy, of current problems and of the great outstanding tasks. Confronted with the violent threats, the terrorist attacks and the attempts at regression, it is necessary to tackle them with determination and courage, and also to tackle firmly the real problems of the vast majority of citizens and of Spain as a nation.

One of the most pernicious effects of the violent minority groups' destablizing strategy is the paralysis which it seeks to create in political, economic and social decisions. There is therefore added to the atmosphere of confusion, anxiety and alarm resulting from these destablizing actions the disenchantment stemming from the lack of effective solutions and a dangerous fatalism in the minds of political leaders and sections of the public.

The defence of the freedoms gained over the last 4 years and progress in the process of building the democratic and autonomy-based state, as well as the surmounting of the socioeconomic crisis and the modernization of Spanish society, are aims which can have legitimate party interpretations. However, as long as democracy is fragile, these aims should be tackled jointly by all democrats, with flexibility and with clear awareness that the partial and temporary sacrifices of each political force's profound aspirations will mean the safeguarding of what is common to everybody and today requires of everybody their joint effort. Unlike most European parties, the Spanish parties have never had an already established democracy which would enable them to implement a policy confined to representing the interests of a section of society. The Spanish parties, and the socialist party in particular, must accept again at this time the priority of the struggle for democracy--a struggle which the socialist party regards as the only possible basis for being able to defend historically the interests of the workers and of the least privileged sections of Spanish society.

Democracy needs to strengthen its weapons to face up to the present attack by its enemies who will not yield spontaneously. This requires a strong state and an effective government, together with full freedoms, a solidary society and strong political parties and trade union federations. With clear awareness of this fact and of its requirement of democracy, the socialist party has offered its contribution to setting up a strong executive power which will implement a government program until the 1983 election with the support of the broad majority of parliament and of society.

Until this approach becomes a reality accepted by the present government itself, the socialists have expressed their clear readiness to negotiate with the executive power the resolution of the state's major problems in the badly termed "policy of consultation"--an inadequate alternative to the proposals which we have made.

We warn that this is an unsatisfactory course which entails concluding agreements difficult to monitor, with decisions which must mainly be implemented by others. Moreover, the negotiations are proceeding in an atmoshpere of confusion, without precise delimitation of issues and time limits for implementation, creating grave mistakes in the allocation of political responsibilities. Furthermore, the results have so far been scanty, the matters subject to agreements in government action not having been clearly defined except for the socioeconomic agreement.

The socialist party therefore believes that a government which wishes today to respond to citizens' needs and to meet the challenges currently confronting Spanish democracy should carry out a political action which will have these basic aims:

Public Administration

--the final democratization of the state, scarcely reformed since the dictatorship. This means modernizing the public administration, making it more open, more responsible and at the same time more efficient. Fundamental problems, such as a greater capacity for emerging from the economic crisis, by reducing costs and eliminating the current waste, and as the new organizational structuring of the state of the autonomies, depend on the reform of the administration. Meticulous building of the state of the autonomies will make possible the final consolidation of an effective and legitimate central government, as well as the surmounting, within solidarity, of historical wrongs to the communities comprising Spain. The political task of modernizing the state is an historic task which affects all the country's major problems.

Defense of Freedoms

--the defense of freedoms and of public safety, which constitute two mutually inseparable aspects. It is necessary to guarantee everyday peaceful coexistence, eradicating violence of every kind. And this should be achieved within strict guaranteeing of rights and freedoms. It is true that the liberticides unscrupulously exploit democratic freedoms and that freedoms must therefore be protected against those who misuse them to attack democracy. This protection of freedoms and of safety should be guaranteed by political and police actions.

Social Policy

--the modernization of society toward the levels of freedom and welfare enjoyed by the most consolidated democracies. In our country, we are still far from those levels, despite the fact that the economic level which we have achieved and its potential growth place them within our reach. Attention to the needy-the poor, the disabled, the elderly, the underprivileged--is highly inadequate in our society. Policy on education, housing or health still displays features which keep us remote from the European societies. Social policy should set itself goals of solidarity and generous humanitarianism. At the same time, civil rights are still greatly neglected.

Economic Crisis

--the surmounting of the economic crisis, which is far deeper than at any other time since 1929, with unemployment which could total 2 million at the end of 1981 and the liquidation of tens of thousands of small and medium enterprises. Spanish society has become relatively poorer--something which should not be interpreted from a fatalistic veiwpoint--and should tackle a thorough reindustrialization. Wages, productivity, industrial reorganizations, investment and employment consitute the package of interrelated issues on which trade unions, employers and government have reached agreement. The workers and their trade unions have so far been displaying a high degree of social responsibility, facing up to the costs of the crisis, only to be confronted with a govenrment which is not shouldering its responsibilities well. The current agreement must be fulfilled conscientiously by the government and employers to extricate the country's economy and citizens from the present crisis.

A policy of creating employment and of combating unemployment today constitutes a national challenge to ensure that Spain places itself on the international level which befits it and that Spanish society does not find itself riven with social tensions.

Foreign Policy

--clear definition of a foreign policy blueprint consistent with our domestic realities and our capabilities as a country. Improving our diplomatic service--structurally. politically and financially--is absolutely essential for the blueprint which should finally integrate us into Europe, increase our exchanges with Latin America and develop the existing opportunities with that continent and the Arab world. Spain's democratization has opened up a field of international opportunities which has not yet been exploited at all, surmounting the distressing isolation of the past. It would be unwise to bring into this stage of democratic consolidation external aims which would divide the political forces and society without constituing a priority with Spain, as is the case with the NATO issue.

Minimum Foundations

As on other occasions, we socialists are prepared to make the effort and the sacrifice of temporarily renouncing part of our party aspirations in favor of a policy capable of democratizing and modernizing the state and society. At the same time, we don't want people to make the mistake of believing that this attitude implies supporting government action without guarantees that a policy of real consolidation of democracy will be conducted, stringently fulfilling the requirements of the constitution. Guided by these ideas, we deem it necessary to make clear on 15 June 1981--commemorating the first democratic election of 15 June 1977--what the minimum foundations of the policy to be followed with respect to Spain's problems should be, and we demand that the government rapidly introduce them so that the immediate future will be clarified.

DENMARK

REPORTS OF REFUGEE PLAN CAUSE 'SURPRISE, CONCERN'

PM221131 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 18 Jun 81 p 1

[Bent Albrectsen and Christian Broendum report: "If the Russians Pursue Poles in the Baltic..."]

[Text] Reports in the U.S. press that Denmark is prepared to engage Soviet forces if, after a Soviet invasion of Poland, these forces pursue refugees across the Baltic, have caused mild surprise and some concern in the Danish Foreign Ministry.

The reports came after a group of U.S. journalists on a tour of NATO countries visited the Foreign Ministry. They quoted a "prominent official" as saying that Denmark expects between 50,000 and 500,000 military and civilian refugees from Poland in the event of a Soviet invasion. When asked what would happen if the refugees or military deserters were pursued, the official replied, according to the U.S. newspapers: "We would not extradite them. We would fight for them."

At the Foreign Ministry, it has been strongly emphasized that the official in question, Ambassador P. Dyvig, did not make the statement quoted in the U.S. newspapers.

Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen did not want to comment on the Danish position on the possible consequences of a Soviet invasion. "We are confident that the situation will not arise, but otherwise it is a Danish tradition to receive refugees as well as we are able, no matter where they come from," Kjeld Olesen said. He stressed that the Danish Government does not wish to make any contribution to an artificial exacerbation of the situation in Poland and that the government continues to expect that Poland can deal with the problems facing the country itself.

The U.S. reports of Denmark's readiness to cope with a possible stream of refugees from Poland come at an inopportune time for the government. Since the beginning of the crisis last summer, the Danish Government has consciously kept a low profile to avoid all charges of interference in other countries' internal affairs.

However, at the same time, the government assures that Denmark could receive a number of refugees if necessary and the navy has on several occasions intensified its patrols of the waters south of Bornholm.

FOREIGN MINISTER BACKS SPANISH NATO MEMBERSHIP

PM240852 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 21 Jun 81 p 10

[Ismail Kristensen report]

[Text] Denmark will support Spain's membership in NATO--not least because such acceptance would also mean direct support for the democratic forces in Spain.

This was confirmed at a dinner given by Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen for Spanish Foreign Minister Perez Llorca, who is on an official visit to Copenhagen.

In his speech, Kjeld Olesen said: "During our talks, we also discussed Spain's thoughts about joining NATO. The Danish Government understands the reasons behind such deliberations. But the Spanish Government must first decide its own position.

"If this leads to a formal request for membership, the question must be taken up here in Denmark by the Foleting, whose support is necessary under the terms of the Constitution.

"On the basis of a desire to strengthen the democratic forces in Spain and of the knowledge that Spanish NATO membership would not alter the military balance between East and West, the Danish Government would be able to support the views expressed by the other NATO nations."

FINLAND

USSR REDUCES PRICE OF OIL DELIVERED TO FINLAND

LD231358 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] The Soviet Union has decided to reduce the price of crude oil delivered to Finland. The matter was agreed on in negotiations between Neste [state oil company] and the Soviet export organization in Moscow yesterday. The price reduction will affect consumer prices so the prices of oil products will not rise, at least during the summer, as a result of the change. According to Neste, the recent strengthening of the dollar would probably in the near future have led to price rises, but thanks to the new agreement there will be no need for higher prices for the time being.

The plans to extend the activities of Neste were today discussed by the government economic ministerial committee. No decision was made. Neste has asked for a new definition of its activities, with special reference to the position of the petrochemical industry and shipping operations of the company. However, the centrist groups of the government have taken a reserved view of the project. The extent of Neste operations has repeatedly been discussed within the government, but has always been postponed.

SWEDEN

POLL SHOWS PUBLIC'S INCREASED DEFENSE WILL

PM221047 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 17 Jun 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Increased Defense Will"]

[Text] It is true that Sweden is not quite as good a country as it used to be, but it is still worth defending. This conclusion can be drawn from the National Defense Planning Committee's latest investigation of the state of the nation.

While a narrow majority--51 percent--thinks that Sweden is a very good country in which to live and the percentage is the same as last fall, it is still the lowest figure since 1974.

Only 15 percent are satisfied with society as it is; 22 percent want to change it in many respects and 4 percent hope for a total change. The average Swede is no more optimistic about the future than he was last fall. One interesting result is that highly educated people seem to have very great faith in our future prospects.

But we are not only interested in our own circumstances. Concern over the increased world tension shows a marked increase--76 percent are now greatly concerned over the political situation, as against 54 percent last fall. The average Swede still has a positive view of the United States, if somewhat less so than in the last 2 years. On the other hand, the Soviet Union's policies are judged to be extremely negative, if not quite so negative as last year.

A consequence of this has been that the Swedish people's defense will has been strengthened. Now 90 percent think that we should have defenses, as against 86 percent last fall. Faith in the defense forces' peace-keeping capacity has grown from 48 to 54 percent and faith in its deterrent capacity has increased to 37 percent.

Only a few people believe in guerrilla defense and civilian resistance, alternatives which have been put forward time after time. Now 65 percent give priority to military defenses, as against 52 percent last fall. This is bound to be the case when 79 percent of the poll's sample want to offer armed resistance to an attacker. Despite the poor times and despite Maj Wechselmann and Maj Britt Theorin, the proportion which considers that the strength of the Swedish defense forces is insufficient has increased from 22 to 31 percent--the highest figure recorded in this respect. And 23 percent of Swedish citizens--as against 17 percent last year--consider that defense spending should be increased--this figure is also a record.

The poll's conclusion shows signs of some surprise: "It seems that the more positive attitude to the defense forces, probably brought about by the Polish crisis and the concommitant threat of a Soviet invasion in Poland, has made a significant proportion of Swedes feel more positive toward increased defense strength and increased defense spending. It is remarkable that this should have happened despite the difficult economic situation."

It would also be remarkable if Sweden's politicians failed to draw the correct conclusions from the poll.

KIPRIANOU RECEIVES INDIAN HIGH COMMISSIONER

NC232004 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] President Kiprianou stated that the Cyprus issue is going through a delicate period and that it will soon be confirmed whether or not progress in the dialogue can be made.

In accepting today the credentials of the first resident high commissioner of India to Cyprus, Mr Hari Krishan Mahajan, President Kiprianou said that the progress in the dialogue depends exclusively on the Turkish stand, and that on our side we will exhaust all the possibilities with good faith. We are determined, he continued, to struggle for a just and lasting solution that will benefit all Cypriot people. We are struggling to attain a federal system and, simultaneously, a united state. Our goal, he stressed, is to achieve conditions of complete independence and sovereignty and to fully secure our territorial integrity, unity and the nonalignment of our country. We are striving for a demilitarized Cyprus without intervention, something that will be beneficial not only for the Cypriot people as a whole, but also will benefit international peace and security in this most delicate region of the world. Kiprianou particularly stressed India's consistent stand for the just cause of the Cypriot people and the efforts to achieve a just and viable solution to the Cypriot problem. President Kiprianou also praised the old bilateral ties of friendship and cooperation and stressed that the two countries' contributions in the nonaligned movement is important.

BULGARIAN OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON CYPRUS PROBLEM

NC232026 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 23 Jun 81

[excerpt] Georgi Yordanov, deputy chairman of the Bulgarian Council of Ministers, who is on a visit to Cyprus, has reaffirmed that Bulgaria is irrevocably in favor of a peaceful and just settlement of the Cyprus issue which will benefit the Greek and Turkish Cypriots and preserve the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus.

The Bulgarian official spoke this evening at a gathering held at the Soviet cultural center on the 1,300th independence anniversary of Bulgaria. Mr Yordanov stressed that Bulgaria's position is that the structure of the Cypriot state's domestic issue must be resolved by the Greek and Turkish Cypriots without foreign intervention. He also praised the traditional friendship and cooperation between the two countries that is continually extending, and added that this friendship is not dictated by selfish aims or temporary motives, but by the will of the two countries to live in peace and goodneighborliness.

PAPER REQUESTS INFORMATION ON ROLANDHIS' PRC VISIT

[Editorial from "My Opinion" colomn: "What Happened in Beijing?"]

[Text] While Foreign Minister Rolandhis was visiting the People's Republic of China, there was criticism against his visit both from the left and from the right. It was, for example, stated that the visit would serve no purpose, that it should not have been undertaken because China maintains a negative position on the Cyprus issue and much more.

We are in no haste to support all the negative reaction to the foreign minister's visit to a country that is considered to be a superpower but, at the same time, we do have the right to observe that this visit was not only allowed to pass completely unobserved but also that the people were not informed, on whatever they were allowed to be informed, on the results of this visit.

For any other country, the visit of its foreign minister to Beijing would have been an important political event and most certainly any government would have felt the need to inform its people on what was discussed, what was agreed upon and generally on the results of such an important visit.

Here, however, we resorted to triumph-mongering before the ministerial visit and fell to silence when it was over. We talked about "the first visit by a Cyprus foreign minister to China" (which was by no means the first such visit since Khristofidhis' visit preceded it). We informed the people about Rolandhis' touring activities at the ancient Buddhist temple and the botanical gardens, but we said absolutely nothing about the talks he had with the Chinese leaders.

Rolandhis' visit to People's China, however, was not a simple excursion. It was an important political visit to the capital of the superpower for the purpose, among other things, of discussing our great national issue with the Chinese leaders. No appropriate official, however, has volunteered to brief the people on the results of this visit.

What happened in China? What was discussed there? What were the results? What (if any) agreements were concluded? What did the Chinese leaders have to say to us? What positions did they express on the Cyprus issue and its solution? What did we ask for?

None of this has been revealed. The visit to China ended very quietly by contrast to the fanfare of its announcement. It is as if this was an insignificant visit to some far distant country instead of an official visit to a superpower.

There was no joint communique. Such communiques are usually issued when the visits are official while they are not as necessary when the visits are undertaken on an invitation, as was the case with the Rolandhis visit.

However, since this was "a first visit," as alleged by the government, of a Cypriot foreign minister to Beijing and because of the great political importance of this visit to Cyprus, the Cyprus side could have requested that a communique be issued that would have expressed the official Chinese position on Cyprus.

Unless, of course, we are to imagine that the failure to issue a joint communique and the darkness with which the government surrounded this important visit after its conclusion as well as the absence of any form of official statement are all because the visit was a failure, that it produced no results, or that the Chinese told us things which disappointed us.

However, if all these questions are to be cancelled out and if speculation is to cease, either the government or the Foreign Ministry must speak out. They must tell us, at long last, the results of Rolandhis' visit to Beijing. We are waiting.

I SIMERINI COMMENTS ON TURKISH EXPANSIONISM

NC200851 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 20 Jun 81 p 1

[Editorial: "The Aegean and Cyprus"]

[Excerpts] Which is the burning problem? Is it the Cyprus or the Aegean problem? And are there one or two problems, these two stories? Replies are a matter of assessment.... for us, the assessment of things has been clear for years now: The Aegean and the Cyprus problems are essentially the same problem. It is the renewed Turkish imperial idea, an idea conceptually identified with great Turkey and expansionism....

Currently, the great burning problem is the Aegean. It is poisoning relations between Turkey and Greece. It is directly endangering Cyprus' freedom and it is constituting a time bomb in NATO's southeastern wing.

These are all objective facts and are not moot or disputable issues. Therefore, what will happen in the Aegean? This problem will not be solved peacefully. Turkey does not accept such solutions, because the status of the Aegean cannot be changed peacefully in Turkey's favor.

And NATO? The allies? Can they not explain to Turkey that it cannot plan such developments? The answer is that they cannot, because Turkish chauvinism is uncontrollable and Turkey understands only the language of force.

The allies see but are unable to convince Turkey. Why? Because Turkey is blackmailing them. Why is it blackmailing them? Because the Kremlin exists. Turkey is the only NATO country that has common borders with the Soviet Union. The latter has huge interests to gain in Turkey It gives it money and multilateral aid. It smiles at it and embraces it. Ankara replies within the framework of its extortions of its allies, and, thus, it receives money and aid from all. At the same time nobody pressures it.

On the basis of the above incontrovertible facts, what are the current assessments? The West is concerned about losing Turkey. It caresses and satisfies it. It does not pressure or bring it to its senses. The East is interested in extracting Turkey from the West. It helps it formally, but substantively it is promoting "social revolution." How does Cyprus fit into this picture? Moscow does not care whether Cyprus is Turkish or Greek. Why? Because if Moscow wins Turkey, it will automatically also win Cyprus.

The issue is different for the West. The West already has military bases on Cyprus. If it loses Turkey, it can save Cyprus. Of course, the country's current government has not understood or cannot understand this difference, just as previous governments did not. For this reason, instead of asking the West for help, it abuses and stigmatizes it. Someday Cyprus will pay for this immature, inevitably fickle, politically primitive position with worse disasters...

BASE FOR RDF IN NORTH DECLARED IMPOSSIBLE

TA231559 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] It has been announced that it is out of the question for a base to be established in northern Cyprus for stationing any foreign troops whatsoever.

An official statement by the information office says that a Greek Cypriot report to the effect that a base would be established in northern Cyprus for the stationing of the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force was totally without foundation. The statement added that there is complete understanding between the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus and the motherland on this issue.

PAPER: PASOK CAMPAIGN SUGGESTS KARAMANLIS SUPPORT

NC211709 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 21 Jun 81 pp 1, 3

[Excerpt] "New Democracy" is strongly concerned over the fact that during recent weeks PASOK has intensified a whisper campaign, as well as actions, aimed at creating the impression that the official opposition party has, in some way, extracted the favor of the president of the republic for the forthcoming election confrontation. This attempt, no matter how illogical, unfounded and contradictory it may appear to be, is suspected of being an attempt to influence a portion of voters--particularly from the ranks of the undecided and, for this very reason, ways and means are being sought to neutralize this propaganda without, in any way involving the person of the president of the republic.

As establised, PASOK's whisper campaign is aimed in two directions:

One--To establish the belief that Karamanlis possesses all the necessary authority which will enable him to become a safety valve and a brake against any "political extremism" which PASOK may possibly attempt from a position of authority--an "extremism" which is condemned by the conservative voters who, however, may be tempted to "try" under some form of supervision or control from above, the change promised by PASOK.

Two--To diminish fundamental differences, particularly in the area of foreign relations, between the positions of the official opposition party and the directives laid down by the current president of the republic and which are followed by "New Democracy."

These are the two directions where an attempt is being made to cultivate the impression that Papandreou has recently restored excellent personal relations with Karamanlis or--at least--as close relations with him as the ruling party.

KKE-INTERIOR LEADER URGES NONSUPPORT OF PASOK

NC211903 Athens I AVYI in Greek 21 Jun 81 p 5

[Interview granted by secretary of KKE-Interior Central Committee Bambis Khrakopoulos to I AVYI political editor Levteris Mavroidhis; place and date not given]

[Excerpt] Question: There is a question now being asked by persons who favor the KKE-Interior and who cast their votes in villages. They ask: "Is it not better to vote for PASOK and get rid of the rightwing than vote for the KKE-Interior and thus give the few votes that we have in this or that village to the rightwing"?

Answer: I must stress that the strength of a party is not only determined by the number of its deputies. It is also determined by the strength of its votes. A party does not enter the Chamber of Deputies with its deputies only, but also with the strength that these deputies represent throughout the country. However, if the persons that you talk about believe that the KKE-Interior has a correct and just policy, they must understand that it is not enough for the KKE-Interior to get two to three deputies, but it must also endow these deputies with the greatest possible popular support.

If we, in every area where we don't have enough votes to elect a deputy, give these votes to another party, we make our party appear to be without a pan-Hellenic strength, a party with diminished political influence and, consequently, ineffective. In considering also that our party has to play a more general role after the elections, we believe that these three or four votes that we will have in this or that isolated village will be important. These three or four votes that we will have today will constitute the basis and may become tomorrow 10, 20, 30, 50 votes. A party that gives its votes to others will never be able to create enough followers to bring about victory. Each time a certain proportionate dilemma will crop up--today to bring down the rightwing, tomorrow to support PASOK, and so forth.

Should we therefore always vote for PASOK and thus finally play the game--and we must stress this--of the ruling class to create polarization and thus change the prospects of the deadlock or with its measures make a biparty system operational? We would then also give up the prospects of a continual development and the manning of a communist party such as ours.

We consider the change of rightwing votes toward PASOK and other democratic forces, as positive. But we consider that it would be utterly negative for leftist communist votes to move toward that end. This is because in such a case it would be impossible to develop in Greece a communist movement capable of expressing the historical role of the working class, including the communist entity.

PASOK CENTRAL COMMITTEE MEETS TO RATIFY PROGRAMS

[Text] PASOK's Central Committee met today to ratify the party's proclamation of its election and government programs.

In his preamble to the Central Committee, PASOK Chairman Papandreou underlined that the movement will take part in the election on its own strength because this is historically and politically a justified strategy that will give it the ability to form a self-supporting government.

RIZOSPASTIS DENOUNCES NAVAL PARTICIPATION IN RDF

NC211601 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 21 Jun 81 p 16

[From "Sunday's Radical" column: "A Dangerous Step"]

[Text] The participation of units of our navy in the Mediterranean naval Rapid Deloyment Force, which has been held within the framework of NATO's south wing, is yet another dangerous step--among many others--to involve our country in the adventures of U.S. imperialism. The aim of this force is to intervene everywhere--also in areas outside NATO's authorized geographical limits--wherever and whenever Washington's "paranoics" deem that the vital interests...of the "free" world of the West are being affected. This can happen any moment without even the knowledge of our country, because the force is under and takes direct orders from NATO's headquarters, namely from the U.S. Pentagon. The "New Democracy" government, in continuing the downfall of Atlanticism and that of subjugation, has neither the power nor the will to defend any of its demands. It does not care whether Greece becomes the target of many retaliations from those countries that will be attacked by the Rapid Deployment Force. The rightwing, which is subservient to the foreigners, is content, because a Greek admiral has been put as the head of this force and because this pirate squadron makes its first official appearance on the 30th anniversary of the establishment of NATO's southern wing, at the time when other Greek naval ships are on alert and follow closely Turkish warships that may violate Greek territorial waters. The "nationalist" rightwing and its government feel at ease within the wolf pack. The playing down of our national independence has no significance to the contemporary Graeculi. What is important is that "nationalist Greece" has managed to extend its "ideological borders" much further than Afghanistan where Mr Tsaldharis had left them. Let our fatherland turn into ashes and nuclear cinders!

BULENT ULUSU COMMENTS ON INVESTMENT POLICY

TA231142 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that the government investment policy seeks to eliminate the differences in the development levels in Turkey's various regions by securing the balanced distribution of industry throughout the country and modernizing agriculture.

In a speech at the cornerstone laying ceremony for the Zernek dam to be constructed over the Engil River near Van's Gulpinar district, Ulusu noted that the development of industry and modern agriculture depends on energy and irrigation resources. He said: Therefore, we must exploit all our rivers--regardless of the size--and increase the number of hydroelectric power stations and irrigation systems. We attach great importance to projects for dams, which constitute very important measures in lessening our foreign dependence in view of rising oil prices. Among these projects, there are big projects like the Ataturk dam, which is in the planning stage, as well as regional dam projects geared to meet the electricity and irrigation needs of the region. Van's Zernek dam is one of these regional projects.

SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON FRENCH CABINET COMPOSITION

LD241516 Hamburg DPA in German 1345 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 24 Jun (DPA)--The French leadership has informed the Federal Government that no security risk exists for France's EC and NATO partners by the inclusion of four Communists in the French cabinet. This information was relayed by Government Spokesman Kurt Becker today during a Bonn cabinet session dealing with this question.

Becker said that, for all practical purposes, the continued absence of NATO-member France from the military integration of the alliance excluded any security risk. Any comparison with the political situation in Portugal 7 years ago is not applicable, according to Becker, because the Communists in Lisbon had been "a ruling party" and Portugal, then as now, was fully integrated militarily in NATO.

According to the government spokesman, the cabinet stressed that the French Communists agreed with the West's positions on the NATO twin decision and on Afghanistan and had thus entered into a commitment. Apart from this, it was underlined that the Socialists, through their absolute majority, were not dependent on the support of the Communists. The formation of the French Government also pointed to great stability with regard to German-French relations. Finally, Becker said, the overall size of the government in Paris should be born in mind, as the Communists only hold four posts.

Schmidt Congratulates Mauroy

LD231820 Hamburg DPA in German 1711 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 23 Jun (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Schmidt congratulated Pierre Mauroy on his appointment as premier of the French Republic. The chancellor underlined that the French voters gave Mauroy and representatives of the French Socialist Party a convincing mandate. "You will draw confidence and trust from this for your future work." Schmidt stressed that he is looking forward to discussing questions of common interest with Mauroy in detail at the upcoming German-French consultations in Bonn and Paris.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON FRENCH, EUROPEAN ISSUES

DW241031 Hamburg Norddeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1012 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Reporter Burchardt interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date and place not given--recorded]

[TExt] [Question] We have a new French foreign minister with European experience, namely, Claude Cheysson who was European commissioner for a long time. Nevertheless, it must be expected that the French positions with regard to the policy of the European Community might be reconsidered or changed. Mitterrand has said, for example, that Europe will be socialist or nonexistent. Is that acceptable for the remaining European Community states? What could be behind it? What do you think?

[Answer] Well, I believe that one must recall first of all that the French Socialists always have been involved Europeans. That can make those who are concerned about Europe more optimistic. Then one will have to see how the new French Government will formulate its European positions with regard to individual problems after the parliamentary elections. I assume that a constructive beginning will be continued.

[Question] Can one expect a possibly stronger European engagement with regard to delimitation, also economic delimitation, vis-a-vis the United States? Claude Cheysson said that he hopes for German help in the discussion about curtailing the extremely high difference of interest rates.

[Answer] Well, the development of interest rates in the United States and the effect it has on Europe, this has kept us busy for quite some time. It has nothing at all to do with the French elections and a new French Government. It's not a matter of delimitation between the Europeans and the United States. It is necessary that European interests will be pointed out in an international economic-political discussion. That has been done in various meetings with the U.S. leadership and it will certainly be continued in Ottawa.

[Question] You are considered a most energetic advocate of a European disarmament conference with a special European component in this matter. Do you think that the government change in Paris will entail more dynamics with regard to the European disarmament policy?

[Answer] First of all, one must say about the European disarmament conference that all signatory states of the final document of Helsinki should be among the participating states, including the United States and Canada. I think that active arms control and disarmament policy will find the support of the new French Government. One must know that the suggestion of a European disarmament conference was made by the former French Government, a suggestion we have fully supported from the very beginning. We believe that the building of confidence in Europe is particularly important in these critical times because, without the building of confidence, one won't be able to implement on this highly armed continent urgently needed arms control and disarmament.

[Question] How would you assess the suggestion, which was also heard from the French side, to bring about as quickly as possible an intensive dialogue between Reagan and the European Community as an entire bloc or as a regional bloc? Cheysson recently was in Washington and he certainly brought back this idea.

[Answer] We have had most intense consultations in the alliance since the new U.S. President has taken over. We will continue them. I believe that one can see today that as a result of these consultations a high degree of agreement has been achieved regarding arms control.

[Question] One concluding word about the Mideast policy. The former French Government supported the Mideast initiative which you also initiated. Do you think that the new French Government will follow that course and that the irritation caused by the Israeli bombing policy will play a role?

[Answer] I believe that the French Government, as it is now, will continue to support this initiative.

[Commentary signed R.H.: "Good Nerves"]

[Text] Eugene Rostow, the future ACDA [Arms Control and Disarmament Agency] chief, has shown no concern for German illusions in speaking to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. SALT will be resumed, if at all, in 9 months at the earliest. This is not quite what the Federal Government pretends to hope for in Bonn. According to Rostow, the U.S. Government has not yet decided whether SALT II should be negotiated once more or whether one should handle SALT III immediately and forget about SALT II. In both cases, the new and, for the Germans, most important subject of negotiations would be the medium-range arms threatening Europe--whose inclusion in SALT I or II the Americans had unfortunately not insisted on in earlier negotiations with the Soviets. From the German point of view, it isn't a matter of labelling the talks SALT II or SALT III, but of negotiating as soon as possible on this problem that upsets the balance of deterrence in Europe. But the current U.S. Government relies much more on its good nerves than on the urgent advice of the domestically politically insecure Bonn government, on which such long terms have a depressing effect.

DEFENSE MINISTRY LOOKS AT MISSILES QUESTION

[Excerpts] Bonn, 24 Jun (DPA)--Replying to an inquiry from CDU Bundestag Deputy Todenhoefer, the Bonn Defense Ministry said today that if the counterarming decision is put into effect, the present ratio of 8 to 1 warheads of medium-rangs missiles in favor of of the USSR would be reduced to 2-1/2 to 1. If there is no counterarming, Soviet superiority would increase by 1985 to a ratio of about 10 to 1. Moscow presently has over 220 launch platforms in position for SS-20 missiles. These are capable of delivering more than 660 warheads. Over 160 of these missiles with over 480 warheads are threatening Europe. The ministry recalled that during recent years NATO has withdrawn 1,000 nuclear warheads from Europe. It is not known whether the Soviet side acted similarly.

Meanwhile, it became known in Bonn today that SPD Chairman Brandt has replied to the letter addressed to him by the Soviet leadership in May, calling for negotiations on arms limitation. Similar letters were sent by the CPSU Central Committee to other Social Democratic parties in West Europe. Nothing is known about the contents of the joint reply letter sent by the parties last week. In an interview with LITERATURNAYA GAZETA published in Bonn today, Brandt emphasized his desire for "serious and early negotiations" on arms reduction and an approximate parity of forces.

DIE WELT Commentary

[Wilfried Hertz-Eichenrode commentary" "Eight Times as Much"]

[Text] Unpleasant truth has difficulty in prevailing. The most unpleasant truth in Europe is that the Soviets already have eight times as many nuclear warheads for medium-range missiles as the Western alliance. The counterarmament planned by NATO could reduce this Soviet nuclear superiority to 2 1/2 fold. If counterarmament does not take place and missiles are not reduced on the Eastern side, Soviet superiority would soon be tenfold.

These are the hard military facts officially announced by the Federal Government. But who wants to hear them? Our country resounds with the categorical imperatives of those who claim the honorary title "peace movement' exclusively for themselves and who hold their morale against the Soviet warheads and the five letters of the word "peace." They do not speak of the SS-20 missiles, but they say that no new U.S. missiles may be deployed in Europe and that the Americans sabotage the only hope of Europeans and even of mankind, namely, thehope for negotiations with Moscow on the "zero option" of armament.

This "peace movement" is last but not least a product of the fatal threat which has come about through Moscow's exploitation of the detente policy period to achieve a strong armament superiority in Europe. It is a result of fear. Therefore, Moscow reacts with fearful indignation if Washington clearly represents the standpoint that the United States must pursue simultaneously: substantial disarmament and containment of the Soviet striving for expansion.

That some communist-inspired "peace movements' don"t safeguard peace, but the global balance of power between America and the Soviet Union is a fact hardened by experience. Reagan stated that he is willing to negotiate. But a balance of power is hard to achieve solely through negotiations. It must be guaranteed at any time by a balance of political and military potentials.

MITTERRAND ADDRESSES FIRST CABINET SESSION

NC241327 Paris AFP in English 1311 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 24 Jun (AFP)--Socialist President Francois Mitterrand, addressing the first meeting of the new French cabinet, today declared that France would remain "scrupulously faithful to its commitments and alliances."

Mr Mitterrand said that the cabinet of Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy--compromised of 39 Socialist and four Communist ministers--will be a government of unity and take into account the popular will and the forces of youth and work.

"Now that the country's unity has been consolidated, democracy broadened and France stands scrupulously faithful to its commitments and alliances, we will be able to act even more strongly for liberty, progress and peace," said the president, quoted by Elysee Secretary General Pierre Beregovoy.

"The adhesion of a large majority of our people to the policy I defined and which constitutes...the charter for governmental action, is a guarantee of its success," he added. The new government was announced yesterday.

The president also thanked the French electorate for the resounding Socialist victory in the general elections, which he said "gives us the means, in parliament, to put into practice the policy for which I was elected."

"Our people's hope is immense and our responsibility historic," he added.

"I hope--and I will do everything for this--that French women and men will want to regroup in even greater numbers around the new, ambitious and generous policy mandated by the May 10 and June 24 universal vote," he added.

At the two and a half hour cabinet meeting--the first in 34 years to include Communist ministers--Prime Minister Mauroy outlined the "individual and collective" duties of ministers and underscored the rule of collective responsibility within the government.

Mr Mauroy and Andre Labarrere, minister in charge of relations with parliament, also outlined the agenda for the first session of the newly-elected assembly, due to meet July 2.

The government is to submit four bills to parliament, which it hopes will be adopted before the holiday recess. The government is to ask President Mitterrand to prolong the legislative session in July to debate the bills.

The four bills include one on a presidential amnesty, one on the abolition of the State Security Court, a special jurisdiction tribunal which deals with political offenses, one on decentralisation, and one on special budget changes.

External Affairs Minister Claude Cheysson briefed his colleagues on the recent visit here by Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, and the cabinet welcomed today's visit by U.S. Vice-President George Bush.

On leaving the meeting, Transport Minister Charles Fiterman, the number two in the Communist Party, expressed his satisfaction. "We have the feeling of living a great moment. Along with a majority (of people), we carry great hope."

BUSH VISIT, REACTION TO COMMUNIST MINISTERS CITED

LD241854 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Summary] There have been a number of reactions abroad to the nomination of four Communist ministers to the new French Government.

For the time being, no comment comes from Washington. On the other hand, the problem was mentioned in the Elysee and then in the Hotel Matignon by U.S. Vice President George Bush who spent the day in Paris--a rather quick trip.

(Bertrand Vanier) reports: "Yes. This trip was decided at the end of the French foreign minister's visit to Washington at the start of the month. For the Americans, it was a way of showing their confidence in their French allies after the election of Francois Mitterrand. But that was before the entry of Communists into the government. Today they are there and this worries the Reagan administration. In Washington 3 weeks ago, Claude Cheysson said that if the Americans speak to us about Communists, we will reply that it is none of their business. Well, Bush did speak about it. It will be a topic of discussion with my interlocutors, he warned when he arrived this morning in Paris. The U.S. vice president wanted to put his cards on the table. So did Francois Mitterrand. At the end of their meeting in the Elysee, the two men made their points. The policy of France will remain the policy of France, the French president said, adding that France is a faithful and loyal friend of the United States.

George Bush replied that our friends are sovereign. However, the participation of Communists in the government will certainly cause concern.

Conclusion: It seems that the U.S. hesitation was not eased, as it was by Claude Cheysson after the election of Francois Mitterrand."

PCF OFFICIAL DISCUSSES GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION

LD241242 Paris Domestic Service in French 0545 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Paris radio journalist Joseph Paletou interview with PCF Political Bureau member Paul Laurent in the "Let's Talk Straight" program--live]

[Text] [Paletou] Four Communists in the government--this is the main story in all the papers this morning and with good reason. Such has not been seen for 34 years. For you, is this presence in the government self-evident?

Is it simply your due for the share you contributed to Francois Mitterrand's victory in the presidential elections, for you, or at least your voters?

[Answer] I believe you are right. Yes, it is something which seems natural to us, despite the fact that clearly it represents a quite considerable event, as you have just said. But we participated in the victory with a share perhaps not as large as we might have wished, but anyway, absolutely decisive for the victory. And consequently, it is natural today that as a major national political force, the Communist Party should be represented in the government.

[Question] One minister of state, that is good. But the four portfolios which you have been entrusted with are not, let us say, political but rather technical portfolios-transport, health, civil service, professional training. All the same, will that allow you to stamp governmental action with your own marks, as in the past?

[Answer] First, we are, my four comrades are, ministers; we have a minister of state. We insisted on this and we are happy that it has happened like that. We shall take part fully in the debates of the Council of Ministers. You speak about technical ministries, but it is a question of decisive branches of national activity which involve millions of wage earners and concern tens of millions of French people. Consequently, I believe that the action of the Communist ministers is going to have a great influence on the real life of the French people and that honors and obliges us.

[Question] Your entry into the government was preceded by the conclusion of a political agreement on governmental solidarity, which holds you to obligations, as they say, as you say yourself. Don't you have the feeling that you made a lot of concessions to the Socialists on certain difficult issues like Poland and Afghanistan? The headline in LIBERATION this morning reads The PCF Is Entering the Government on Its Knees. And I thought that your Central Committee session yesterday lasted a long time.

[Answer] No, I think that the political agreement satisfies us. In my opinion, it is characterized by two essential aspects: the first is clearly that we take account of the election results. It is true that the PS received more votes than the Communist Party and consequently the French people have expressed a wish which we take into account. That is the first aspect. But as far as the issues which you have mentioned are concerned, such as Afghanistan and Poland, they are, on the contrary, characterized by a search for a compromise of a governmental nature between Communists and Socialists without either of the two sides in any way abandoning its positions. Take the Afghanistan issue...[Paletou interrupts]

[Question] You feel that you have conceded nothing on your intial positions?

[Answer] On international issues, absolutely not. On the options of government, the pace of social achievements, we consider the wishes of the French people as demonstrated in the election; we have said this many times. On international issues--Poland--Georges Marchais explained this again last night. It is exactly the same position as we have held for months. We feel that in the developing situation which characterizes that country, the best thing is to leave it alone to settle its own affairs.

[Question] Indeed, as far as the pace of social transformations is concerned, Mr Paul Laurent, will this not be a way for you to ask your friends in the CGT to be patient, not to annoy the government too much?

[Answer] We think that the workers organized in trade unions are totally independent in their action and if they consider it necessary to show a bit of impatience, or wish to go faster or to settle problems in their own manner, I would suppose that this will continue as before.

[Question] This question will perhaps be discussed at the lunch between George Bush and Francois Mitterrand: Do you understand that the United States might be worried about your presence in the government?

[Answer] I consider that indeed it will not please the U.S. Government much but that doesn't [word indistinct] us.

[Question] It might create problems between Washington and Paris, even so.

[Answer] Listen, I think it is the French people who have made the decision: France is a sovereign country. It governs as it sees fit. If that doesn't please certain people, they must just get used to it.

[Question] Your entry into the government has made the opposition angry. It is said in the opposition that people voted massively for the Socialists precisely to keep you away from power--moderate voters who contributed to the victory and who may be regretting it this morning.

[Answer] If certain people did that with those intentions, it is quite clear they have not succeeded. But I think rather, and I repeat, that it is the wish of the people which has been expressed, and the resulting composition of the government is a sign that the Communist Party plays a major role in national life, even if--I repeat--it is not quite that for which we would hope.

[Question] A final question. Will this entry into the government facilitate the internal debate, the explanations, which are going to begin within the Communist Party, since one must not forget that you are no longer in a position of strength in comparison with the PS since your slide in the presidential and parliamentary elections?

[Answer] Neither facilitate nor complicate: It will clearly be an important element in the judgments which we will have to make on all the recent developments, but the debate is due to take place, will take place, and we will take into account all the elements in recent happenings.

CHEYSSON SPELLS OUT FOREIGN POLICY STANCE

PM241237 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 Jun 81 p 6

["P.B." report]

[Text] Claude Cheysson broadly reviewed the international situation on Thursday, 18 June, during his first lunch with the French Diplomatic Press Association since he was appointed external relations minister. On a number of subjects, such as Afghanistan, Poland, North-South dialogue and the need for France to honor the contracts it has signed, Cheysson could only reaffirm what he already has said on other occasions, notably in an interview with LE MONDE (our 28 May edition). But he also gave answers, which were frequently detailed and sometimes expressed energetically or passionately, on a number of other points.

The first question was why France's viewpoint on the Near East was explained to a foreign daily, the Washington POST. Cheysson, showing irritation mixed with irony, pointed out that the premier had commented in Europe on the Israeli raid on the Iraqi nuclear power station and that the Quai d'Orsay had issued a communique the following day. Nonetheless, after pointing out that he had been consulted and had read the text of the interview, he explained that the head of state did not want to give the impression that he was--like his predecessors--making use of the French media during the election campaign. "If he thought he could wait 1 more week, he would have addressed his statements to a French newspaper," he said.

The minister rejected the argument that by drawing a distinction between Israel and its prime minister, Begin, whom he strongly criticized, President Mitterrand had interfered in the Israeli election campaign. "We condemned a military operation," he said, "and it so happens that the man who assumed responsibility for it and commented on it was the prime minister."

After dealing with the questions of the Israeli raid and the Iraqi nuclear power station, on which he repeated the head of state's arguments, Cheysson turned to other questions.

The Near East--"France is completely bound by the European initiative which expresses a common will. It was a good thing that the Ten's statement on the Near East should express a few fundamental principles. The present government will take an even clearer line than the previous one on these great principles which must be reaffirmed and respected." These principles relate to the right of all countries in the region, including Israel, to security and the Palestinian people's right to self-determiniation and to have a future.

"I am proud that France was behind the creation of the state of Isreal and took part in making reparations for the suffering endured by the Jews. It is for the same reasons that France favors respect for the Palestinian people's rights," he said.

A PLO Office in Paris--The EEC has recognized that the PLO is representative but has not recognized it as the Palestinian people's sole representative. In this spirit, it would be natural for there to be a PLO office in Paris but there is "no question of receiving a PLO representative as if he represented a state." With regard to the possiblity of a visit to France by 'Arafat, Cheysson said: "Those who proclaim that they intend to destroy Israel cannot be interlocutors for peace unless they change their position."

Jerusalem--The Israeli Government's decision to make Jerusalem Israel's capital is "unilateral." "There is continuity in the policy followed by France, the EEC and the international community in upholding the law, which does not allow the unilateral modification of Jerusalem's status. Furthermore, the holy places concern the Israelis but also the Jordanians and Palestinians. Three cultures and three religions... How could it be acceptable to take unilateral decisions on them?"

Lebanon--After reaffirming France's attachment to that "unfortunate country", the minister stressed Paris' desire to contribute to finding a solution. Meanwhile, he added, "we are having talks with the authorities on supplies of spare parts and possibly of arms intended for the Lebanese security forces."

South Africa--"Not one shell, not one bullet, not one military screwdriver, not one bolt, nothing military or of military origin will be supplied to South Africa. That is final." Aside from that, Cheysson explained, France is emerging from a period in which "positions were ambigiuous...Instances where there was great ambiguity have placed us in an embarrassing situation. We have inherited embarrassing contracts."

Arms Sales--Outside South Africa, "there will be arms contracts. But there will also be some types of weapons which the French Government will not allow to be sent to some countries where their use would pose serious problems."

The Question of Political Refugees--The minister pointed out that the Basques make up a handful of the tens of thousands of political refugees in France, of which 150,000 come from the Far East. "The homeland of human rights will never hand over a political refugee whatever happens, whether it be Bani-Sadr or somebody else...Just because it has complete fraternity with Spain through language, the desire for democracy and the determination to struggle against terrorism--and it will show that determination clearly at home--France will not abandon something which forms part of its greatness. In other words, it will not cease to be a country of asylum."

Communists in Government--Asked if the possible presence of Communist ministers in the government would hamper his diplomatic action, Cheysson replied: "What counts is the policy pursued by France and the men responsible for that policy. Mitterrand was clear almost to the point of provocation in defining the major principles. Hence, it is much less important whether a minister is called Dupont or Durand. There will not be a single minister who is not completely in agreement with the government's policy. There will be no dubious coalition, as there was with the previous majority."

Relations With the USSR--"We would have liked to have fairly intimate relations with the Soviet Union, as in the past. But it isn't possible to have the same type of relations with the Soviets if their troops remain in Afghanistan."

The Madrid Conference--With regard to the Conference on Security and Cooperation, Cheysson expressed the hope that a date might be set "for a conference on disarmament in Europe, which would be reassuring. The Russians know that any possibility of dialogue and trade would be completely destroyed if there were to be the slightest interference in Poland. By arranging meetings, for the end of the year for instance, it would be possible to steer through the dangerous month of July."

The West Saharan Conflict--"The great principles will be reaffirmed. How will they be spelled out? This matter will be discussed in a few weeks' time because I think it is courageous of the king of Morocco to go to Nairobi and see his colleagues all of whom do not share his viewpoint. It would be improper to try to adopt a definite stance while the Africans are holding discussions."

SPADOLINI EXPECTED TO ANNOUNCE CABINET 27 JUNE

[Excerpts] Rome, 24 Jun (ANSA)--Premier-designate Giovanni Spadolini, riding the wave of strong showings at the polls turned in Sunday and Monday by the nation's smaller political parties, is expected to unveil his new five-party cabinet on Saturday.

The final tallies of voting for a new Sicilian regional assembly, provincial assemblies and new city councils in Rome and the major cities, in which nearly nine million voters, equal to about one-quarter of the nation's electorate, cast (?ballots), apparently clinched Spadolini's bid to become Italy's first non-Christian Democrat premier since 1946.

The outcome of the contests was billed as a victory for the Socialist party, the nation's third largest behind the Christian Democrats and Communist Party, and for the minor alignments ranging from the premier-designate's own Republican Party to the Social Democrats and the tiny right-of center Liberal Party.

According to his own timetable, Spadolini will meet with the secretaries of the Christian Democrat (DC), Socialist (PSI), Social Democrat (PSDI) and Liberal Parties on Friday to present his government platform and gather consensus for his list of names for the portfolios. On Saturday, the premier-designate will present his new five-party government to the head of state, Sandro Pertini, and open a confidence debate in Parliament on Wednesday, July 1.

Spadolini declared that his call for confidence in the House and Senate will be based on the letter and the spirit of the constitution and will represent a search for "the largest possible parliamentary consensus in all those matters like the economic emergency and terrorism which require daily dealings with the opposition and, if possible, their essential support."

Before Spadolini's meeting Friday with the secretaries of the other four prospective government partners, party leaderships will be busy today and tomorrow with their assessments of the administrative elections returns.

Socialist Secretary Bettino Craxi, whose party showed the largest gains, has already aimed warnings at the party of relative majority, the Christian Democrats, and their close rivals on the opposition benches, the Communist Party. The head of the nation's third party said Tuesday that the DC had better "implement their own renewal" and urged the Communists to "change policy." He went on to claim for his party the "break in these last few years in the bipolar scheme of things which was suffocating the country's political system."

The DC whip in the Senate, Giorgio de Giuseppe, however, pointed the finger at what he saw as "the decline of the communists everywhere... their breakdown in Sicily and Bari" and the failure of the big opposition party to represent itself as an "alternative" to the Christian Democrat alignment.

But on the DC right, M.P.'s were wringing their hands Tuesday over tallies which indicated "new distance between the Christian Democrat party and its electorate." These M.P.'s also spoke the need for a "drastic change" if an "unstoppable decline" is to be avoided.

Attention on the political scene is also focused on Confindustria, the industrialists' association, and what business and industry intends to do about the proposal advanced by Gianni Agnelli, the chairman of the Fiat automobile corporation, to unilaterally cancel the 1975 agreement on wages and salaries linked to the nation's cost-of-living index.

The trade unions confederation has promised to paralyze the nation with general strikes if Confindustria decides to snap the link between salaries and wages and persistent, double-diget inflation, and such a move would virtually wipe out any change for success for the "social pact" written into the premier-designate's government platform.

ROME VOTERS CAST RECORD NUMBER OF BLANK BALLOTS

AU241121 Rome ANSA in English 0807 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 24 Jun (ANSA)--A crisis of confidence in Rome city hall politics was read into the figures released last night by the Interior Ministry on the blank or nullified ballots cast by voters going to the polls Sunday and Monday to elect a new City Council. A total of over 135,000 elegible voters, out of an electorate of nearly 1,700,000, took the trouble to cast blank ballots or scrawl insults and obscene slogans and drawings on their ballots. The figure of 40,039 reported for blank ballots was double that for this form of protest registered in the 1976 municipal election.

The number of those voters who chose a more forceful form of challenge to the system, the 95,139 voters who nullified their ballots with slogans or drawings, was triple the figure of nullified ballots in the 1976 runoffs. Another 450,000 elegible voters could not be bothered to go to the polls. This figure, coupled with the "protest" ballots, comes to nearly 600,000 voters in the capital, the biggest combination of abstention and protest ever reported in any municipal election in the land.

The significance of this figure as an indicator of a crisis of confidence was made more pointed by comparing these 600,000 to the 616,000 votes captured by the Italian Communist Party, the party of past and present relative majority on the Rome City Council.

RED BRIGADES DESTROY TANK AT ARMAMENTS PLANT

AU241013 Rome ANSA in English 0811 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 24 Jun (ANSA)--Italy's Red Brigades terrorists last night claimed responsibility for the bomb planted at the Oto Melara armaments plant at Spezia, south of Genoa, which destroyed a M-113 tank in the early hours of Tuesday morning. Two anonymous telephone calls to two newspapers in the capital confirmed that the bombing was the work of the nation's most feared terrorist organization. Inside the plant, police found brigade leaflets on the kidnapping of [name indistinct] Taliercio, a manager of a Montedison (?petrochemical) plant near Venice, abducted by the terrorist organization on May 20, and a tract on the brigades' "urban warfare".

The latest wave of Red Brigades activities also included leaflets planted on the premises of Om-Fiat, manufacturers of heavy industrial vehicles, near Milan. These documents referred to an aborted terrorist attack in Genoa, to brigade strategy of "striking at and sabotaging the production cycles" of industry and included a photograph of the Montedison plant manager, now detained in a "people's prison." The brigades' strike at the Oto Melara armaments plant was brought off despite round-the-clock patrols of the plant and vehicle testing grounds manned by Carabinieri police and private guards.

The explosion which destroyed the tank, tested and prepared for shipment, was caused by plastique. A similar plastique device attached to another M-113 failed to explode because of a faulty timer. Though the explosion blew out the glass in the plant and the windows in buildings nearby, the patrols on duty at the time were unaware of the bombing for a full forty-five minutes, according to informed sources.

Oto Melara, with a workforce of over 2,000 and an annual turnover of four billion dollars, also manufactures Leopard tanks on a West German license. Company officials disclosed yesterday that the breakin should have been prevented by the sophisticated alarm system based on photoelectric cells.

VISITING GREEK PRESIDENT, EANES SPEAK AT BANQUET

LD250930 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Text] The EEC and the internal situation in both Portugal and Greece were the main topics discussed at today's meeting between General Ramalho Eanes and visiting Greek President Konstandinos Karamanlis.

The Greek president gave an account of the reasons behind his country's speedy accession to the EEC, briefed his Portuguese counterpart on the Greek experience as a full-fledged member of the EC and reiterated his country's willingness to support Portugal in the EEC membership process. The two presidents also discussed their countries' stands on European security and cooperation with Africa. With regard to the latter, Portugal's privileged relations with the African Continent, particularly with the Portuguese-speaking countries, were also touched upon during today's talks.

A banquet, hosted by Ramalho Eanes in honor of President Karamanlis is now taking place in Ajuda Palace. Here is a report by our correspondent:

Two speeches, very similar in tone, were delivered at tonight's banquet here in Ajuda Palace. General Ramalho Eanes stressed that Portugal and Greece share the same universalist and humanist vocation [words indistinct]. He recalled the rejection by both the Portuguese and Greek (?peoples) of authoritarian political models and the role played by President Karamanlis during the always difficult transition from a dictatorial regime to a democratic society. Ramalho Eanes added: We share the view that the legitimation of democratic political institutions is the decisive factor for the stability and security of any society. Only democratic legitimation makes possible an open interaction between the various social interests as it prevents the accumulation of (?powers) and their expression through violence.

(?Participation) in the Atlantic alliance and integration in Europe were two other points of convergence common to Portugal and Greece mentioned by Ramalho Eanes.

At the beginning of his speech, Konstandinos Karamanlis [words indistinct] said that Portugal and Greece managed to establish democracy almost simultaneously, after having been subjected to tyranny. They both belong to the same alliance and believe in the future of Europe and have, albeit in different ways, the same political organizations.

Despite all these similarities, cooperation between the two countries is not developed and almost nonexistent. This was underlined by Karamanlis in a statement released in Athens before his departure for Lisbon. Tonight, at the banquet, he expressed hope that his visit to the Portuguese capital will bring about more cooperation and a useful exchange of views, both as regards the evolution of Europe and the general critical issues concerning today's world.

LEFTIST STARTS HUNGER STRIKE FOR POLITICAL STATUS

[Text] Lisbon, 20 Jun (AFP)--Extreme leftist leader Carlos Antunes refused food yesterday to start an unlimited hunger strike in the Custoias prison, northern Portugal, to back demands for political prisoner status. Mr Antunes, 43, also wants the 1979 amnesty to be applied.

Other members of Mr Antunes' Proletarian Revolutionary Party, including his companion Isabel do Darmo, are also expected to join the fast. The militants are among 23 prisoners jailed nearly three years ago for bomb attacks and armed robbery.

FURTHER ON ARREST OF ARMY OFFICERS IN COUP PLOT

NC241404 Paris AFP in English 1343 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Madrid, 24 Jun (AFP)--Three Spanish army officers arrested here yesterday and accused of "plotting for military rebellion" were caught barely 24 hours before they planned to launch their action to "destabilise" the country's democracy, sources said today. Although police were tight-lipped on the exact nature of the plot it was apparently planned to coincide with the traditional reception for some 2,000 political and cultural figures hosted by King Juan Carlos to mark his saint's day today.

The arrest of Major Ricardo Saenz de Ynestrillas and his sons Martin, 17, and Ricardo 15, along with Colonel Antionio Sicre Canut and his civilian brother Luis, Colonel Ricardo Garcitorena Salva and two women civilians, Maria Concepcion Villagrasa and Maria Paz Perez Nieto, came exactly four months after the abortive right-wing coup spearheaded by Civil Guard Lieutenant-Colonel Antonio Tejero.

Yesterday's events also came a month to the day after the Barcelona bank siege which was reportedly also planned by extreme right elements. The Spanish press has repeatedly alleged that more officers than the 40 arrested at the time were involved in the February plot, along with a number of civilians. Recently a leading government official also said there was a "destabilisation" plan by the extreme right, including prominent figures of the regime of late dictator Francisco Franco.

Defense Note on Arrests

LD241624 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Excerpt] With regard to the arrest of Colonels Sicre and Garcitorena and Major Saenz de Ynestrillas, the Ministry of Defense Information and Public Relations Office has issued a note which says that on being requested yesterday to make statements, they [the arrested officers] did so voluntarily. The note later says that the capitan-general of the 1st Military Region [Madrid] ordered that the military judge on duty initiate appropriate proceedings to detain the arrested officers in Madrid military establishments.

No Details on Plot

LD242050 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Colonels Antonio Sicre and Ricardo Garcitorena and Major Saenz de Ynestrillas have been accused of the offense of conspiracy for military rebellion and are in preventive detention in three different barracks in the 1st military region, whose headquarters is Madrid.

Ministry of Defense and police circles are keeping totally silent on the actual activities carried out by the military men and civilians arrested, although reliable sources say that they took part in various ultrarightwing meetings at which concrete actions were being prepared to bring about a violent political change in the Spanish democratic regime. At no time has there been any information on the action which those arrested were preparing, although some observers point to the official reception which is being held in Madrid this evening on the occasion of King Juan Carlos' saint's day.

Of the three military men charged with an alleged offense of conspiracy for military rebellion, Colonel Garcitorena was linked to the February coup attempt and apparently tried to seize the military government of Madrid during the assault on the Congress of Deputies by Civil Guard Lieutenant Colonel Tejero. Major Ynestrillas was convicted for an offense of conspiracy for rebellion together with Lieutenant Colonel Tejero because they had planned the seizure of the prime minister's official office and the holding of the nation's government to compromise the king and do away with the democratic reform of November 1978.

TURGUT OZAL HAILS ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH LIBYA

TA241657 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Text] Meetings are being held in Ankara between Turkish and Libyan delegations on economic and trade issues. The Turkish delegation is headed by State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal and the Libyan delegation by Economy Minister Abu Zayd 'Umar Durdah, who arrived in Turkey on 22 June.

In his opening statement, Ozal noted that significant progress was achieved in economic relations between Turkey and Libya. Recalling that the trade volume between the two countries has now reached $600 million, Ozal added that the aim was to bring this figure to $1 billion as soon as possible. Pointing out that some 40 Turkish firms were engaged in construction work worth $3 billion with about 70,000 Turkish workers employed in these projects, Ozal said that Turkey was thus contributing to the development of Libya. The deputy prime minister added that the cooperation between the two countries should set an example for other Islamic countries.

In his statement, Libyan Economy Minister Durdah said that the trade volume between the two countries as well as the number of Turkish workers employed in his country had doubled during the last 18 months. Recalling that prospects of new fields of cooperation would be sought during the talks to be held in Ankara, the visiting economy minister said that in fact they had brought some proposals to this end. Officials from the Foreign Ministry, in addition to the Finance and Commerce ministries, are also participating in the talks which are reviewing trade and economic relations between Turkey and Libya.

TWO LEFTIST TERRORISTS EXECUTED IN ISTANBUL

TA250528 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Text] The death sentences of Ahmet Saner and Kadir Tandogan, members of the illegal Marxist-Leninist Armed Propaganda Union, were carried out in Istanbul early this morning. Their sentences had been approved by the National Security Council.

Saner and Tandogan, together with Hakki Kolgu, had killed an American sergeant, (Albert Sam Novello), and his friend, Ali Sabri Baytar, when they emerged from their home in Etiler, Istanbul, on 16 April 1980. The terrorists were caught following an armed clash with the security forces. Kolgu was seriously wounded in the incident and died at the hospital. The Istanbul Martial Law Command 3d Military Court tried Saner and Tandogan and sentenced them to death.

WEST EUROPE UNION ASSEMBLY HEARS OF USSR EXPANSION

[Maj-Gen Edward Fursdon Disptach: "Soviet Plan for Long Occupation]

[Text] Paris--The Soviet Union Has established a new southern provincial command of 44 divisions--nine of which are in Afghanistan--and an air force, the Western European Unions Asembly heard yesterday.

The object of this new formation is to plan prolonged occupation and build up a base large enough from which, when the time is ripe, to exploit the situation forward through Baluchistan to fulfil the historic Russian aim of access to the Indian Ocean.

So said Sir Frederic Bennett, Conservative MP for Torbay, speaking of his committee's report on "European Security and Events in the Gulf Area" introduced into the assembly meeting in Paris.

Two-thirds of Afghanistan's originally 90,000-strong army had deserted, with its equipment, to the rebels, he said. The Soviet Union was now concentrating on destroying the country's abilities, compelling the population either to leave the country as refugees or else gradate to a controllable existence in the cities.

Between half and one and a half million refugees are thought to have entered Iran, Sir Frederick continued. There are now 2,100,000 Afghan refugees living in border camps in Pakistan--a danger to its stability--and the figure is increasing by 80,000 to 100,000 per month.

By the end of the year, some 25 per cent of Afghanistan's population will be in exile.

Pakistan was becoming increasingly vulnerable, he stressed, and badly needed outside aid--including military material aid--to help it defend itself.

Because of the possibility of Indian intervention along its eastern border, 14 of Pakistan's 18 divisions looked that way towards 33 Indian divisions, he said, leaving only four to attempt to control the difficult 1,800-mile border with Afghanistan.

Ultimately, the Soviet aim, Sir Frederick said, was to dominate Pakistan and, having thus extended its borders of influence to join India's to encircle China. The committee's report was accepted.

In a lively and tense debate on developments in Poland, the assembly very unexpectedly "went soft" and voted out its own committee's draft recommendations concerning preliminary examination by member states of possible diplomatic, economic, financial, commercial and technological--withhold measures which might be taken in the event of any Soviet intervention in Poland.

This "drawing of the teeth" from a document previously accepted in multinational multi-party committee by 17 votes to none against, stemmed from a set of surprise German and Dutch liberal amendments--which later received some socialist support--tabled out of concern about provocation.

With obvious dismay at this turn of events, the committee's chairman, Sir Frederic Bennett registered his protest "with pride" by voting against the thus watered-down final recommendations.

UNESCO HOLDS 35-NATION COMMUNICATIONS CONFERENCE

Regional Technical Transfer Projects

NC191904 Paris AFP in English 1728 GMT 19 Jun 81

[By Gordon Bibby]

[TExt] Paris, 19 Jun (AFP)--Developing countries have only a 3.25-percent share of the world's printed mail, and only 12 percent of its letters, Universal Postal Union (UPU) executive Francesco Cacciatore told a 35-nation conference here trying to boost Third World participation in communications technology.

Mr Cacciatore, of Italy, was pledging UPU help in a proposed UNESCO-sponsored bid to transfer more resources and know-how from the industrialised nations.

Every year, he said, the world now posted a staggering 127,000 million printed items and 147,000 million letters and postcards.

Other cooperation for the technology transfer programme, for which the conference was expected to initiate specific initiatives before ending next Monday, was pledged today by the International Telecommunications Union (ITU).

The conference today confirmed a growing emphasis on Third World self-help projects at regional level, in which modern technology featured.

New regional news agency and broadcasting arrangements were said to be under way or at the advanced planning stage in the Gulf, South East Asia, Africa and Latin America regions.

There was also general agreement that continued imbalances between the industrialised and developing worlds was not only undesirable but potentially dangerous.

This (?was despite) some Third World fears of an information "monopoly" by a few highly developed nations, and Western denials of any such intention.

The 35 nations at the conference were today urged to ask all developing nations to indicate their specific needs, and all UNESCO members to contribute to the proposed programme.

The proposals, to be voted on by next Monday, came respectively from a six-member working group of Austria, Bangladesh, Cameroon, the Soviet Union, Tunisia and Venezuela, and from the "Group of 77" non-aligned nations.

The "needs" proposal urged priority for projects at regional and then sub-regional level, and in the case of national programmes for countries which were least developed.

Under the funding proposal, all UNESCO states, UN agencies and international organisations would be asked to contribute resources, and a possible pledging conference would also be considered.

Proposal Adopted

NC192142 Paris AFP in English 2023 GMT 19 Jun 81

[By Gordon Bibby]

[Text] Paris, 19 Jun (AFP)--Resources will be sought world-wide to develop modern communications technology in the developing world under a proposal approved by acclamation here tonight at a 35-nation UNESCO conference.

UNESCO Director-General Amadou Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal will be asked to make the appeal, according to the proposal, to all UNESCO member states, UN agencies, and "inter-government and non-government" groups.

The acclamation which greeted the proposal, worked out after conciliatory exchanges involving "Group of 77" developing, Western and Eastern nations, was in sharp contrast to wrangling over conference officials earlier in the week.

The conference, sitting as a new inter-government council which will now meet periodically to shape a Third World communications technology programme, so far has a total of 2.95 million dollars donated by UNESCO and the Netherlands, India and Mexico.

But it has not yet been offered further sums, though several nations have indicated they will contribute money, equipment or expertise, and has not yet settled on its funding procedures.

A number of industrialised countries are believed to be waiting to see what specific cooperation is needed before they commit themselves.

The eight-day conference, which ends next Monday, is expected to initiate a campaign to determine specific needs.

Tonight's proposal, which dropped an earlier reference to a possible pledging conference, said the search for resources should also be taken to "professional groups or other available sources... as swiftly as possible."

Among the 35 nations represented here, the U.S., which originally suggested the programme but later agreed to let UNESCO sponsor it, has said it will not give funds, but will press a number of bilateral projects already underway.

Bangladesh Proposal

NC181100 Paris AFP in English 1000 GMT 18 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 18 Jun (AFP)--Bangladesh today proposed an exchange of communications know-how at South-East Asian level, as developing countries face up to an ever widening technology gap with the industrialised world.

The Third World could also consider drawing from a poool of equipment increasingly obsolescent in the developed countries, Bangladeshi Chief Delegate Khorshed Alam told a 35-nation UNESCO (U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) communications conference here.

With developing countries needing to keep apace with emerging technology Bangladesh had made communications an integral part of its national development plan, he said.

The aim was to develop agriculture, eradicate illiteracy and control population, he said.

For this Bangladesh needed to improve and extend radio and television coverage, boost the distribution of receiver sets and add to its training and production facilities.

The conference, at UNESCO headquarters here, is studying needs and priorities so the Third World can share in modern technology.

INTERIOR MINISTER APPROVES TANK SALE TO ARGENTINA

AU221524 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 20-21 Jun 81 p 1

[DIE PRESSE editorial report: "Tank Export: Lanc Signed Approval"]

[Text] Interior Minister Lanc Friday signed the export license required by the arms export law for the delivery of 57 Cuirassier tanks to Argentina. As the minister's press officer Dr Droessler told DIE PRESSE, the minister approved the export after having received positive export opinions from other offices, the final one being that of the Foreign Ministry. In addition, the Argentine Embassy had handed over statements confirming that the tanks would be neither delivered to another country (certificate of final use) nor be employed in the country itself for domestic policy purposes. It was not possible to withhold approval, the Interior Ministry stated. Otherwise, the Steyr Works could have filed a complaint with the administrative court and would have had its way because the legal situation has not changed since the last exports to Argentina.

There is no obstacle now to a smooth processing of the export order, Steyr Director General Malzacher told DIE PRESSE after the approval was given. Obstructing the exports would clearly be unconstitutional. All legal conditions have been fulfilled, he said.

LIBYAN ECONOMIC DELEGATION MAKES OFFICIAL VISIT

AU231245 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 23 Jun 81 p 7

[Text] A delegation of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah under the leadership of Minister Muhammad al-Hijazi arrived Monday for an official visit of several days. Possibilities for cooperation in the technical and economic fields will be discussed within the framework of the visit. A session of the Austrian-Libyan mixed commission also will be held during the delegation's visit. In addition, the Libyan guests will conduct talks with representatives of the Federal Trade Chamber.

In the first 3 months of the year, Austria exported commodities valued at 786 million schillings to Libya, with cattle for slaughtering, sawn timber, nonalcoholic beverages and transportation equipment being the main exports. At the same time, Austria imported commodities valued at 2.1 billion schillings, almost exclusively oil. Because of its financial strength, Libya is an interesting market for Austria. The Voest Corporation recently received, within the framework of a consortium which also comprises German plant builders, an order to build the Misurata steel works. Libya also is suitable as a third market for cooperation with East European states. Thus, an Austrian firm, in cooperation with a Bulgarian enterprise, recently accepted an order for building a seed processing plant.

MINISTRY REPORTS SYRIAN RESPONSE TO DEMARCHE

AU221509 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 20 Jun 81 p 2

[Text] The Federal Foreign Affairs Ministry officially announced the outcome of the call of Dr Franz Parak, Austrian ambassador in Damascus, who had expressed the deep concern and great alarm of the Federal Government about the activity of the "Al-Asifah" terrorist group to the Syrian Foreign Ministry on Wednesday.

Ambassador Parak was assured that Syria would prosecute with all severity of the law any person in Syria who undertakes anything against Austria or against an Austrian citizen. It also was pointed out by the Syrian side, however, that unfortunately groups exist in Austria that want to harm Austrian-Syrian relations. President al-Asad, who highly respects Chancellor Kreisky, will address a letter to the chancellor on this. In addition, the Syrian ambassador in Vienna will call on the Foreign Affairs Ministry. The Austrian step was taken in connection with the murder of City Councilor Nittel. The "Al-Asifah" terror organization had claimed responsibility for the crime.

NOTHOMB COMMENTS ON FRENCH COMMUNIST MINISTERS

LD241701 Belgium Brussels in French to Africa 1500 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Text] Regarding the presence of Communist ministers in the new French Government, Charles-Ferdinand Nothomb said at a Foreign Affairs Ministry news conference that he thinks that France will take all the more care to be extremely clear about its positions. He doesn't believe that the policy of an active presence, shown at the time of the European meetings by Mr Cheysson, Mr Cot and Mr Chandernagor, will be modified. We can only rejoice at this active presence, he added.

NETHERLANDS

STUDY GROUP INVESTIGATES MISSILES DECISION

PM251055 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 18 Jun 81 p 3

[Own correspondent's report]

[Text] The Hague, 18 Jun--If The Netherlands Government said "yes" at the end of this year to the subsequent deployment of 48 nuclear-armed cruise missiles on Netherlands territory, a hardening of social and political opposition to nuclear arms as a whole, perhaps even to Netherlands NATO membership, would have to be expected. However, a "no" would only have a calming influence in the short term, for many opponents of NATO's nuclear arms modernization are against nuclear arms in general and/or against Netherlands NATO membership.

These are the conclusions of a report published today by a study group which at the request of the Atlantic Commission has investigated what could be the "internal and external consequences" of a Netherlands "yes" or "no" to the deployment of the cruise missiles. The request was made because at the end of 1979, when NATO adopted its decision for the modernization of its medium-range nuclear arms, the Netherlands Government decided on a 2-year postponement of the final decision on the deployment of the cruise missiles. The question is now one of the most difficult problems in the cabinet formation negotiations.

The group, which included former Defense Minister Vredeling (Labor Party), former Second Chamber Deputy Wierda (Labor Party) and Mrs J. van Leeuwen (Christian Democratic Appeal), considers that a Netherlands "yes" could in the longer term have more damaging consequences in and for NATO than a "no."

Here, the group refers to the potentially even stronger feeling of opposition to NATO and nuclear arms which could follow a positive Netherlands deployment decision. "It must not be expected that our NATO partners will clearly discern this danger, which could arise in the longer term," the report said. The government would then have to support a "yes" with better information than it has given hitherto. According to the group, the government's "silence" in 1979 was connected with the fact that it was not prepared to adopt a stance on the issue. This "imbalance" must be corrected if the government does now adopt a stance.

A "no" from The Hague to the deployment would make the Netherlands position in NATO much more difficult, the work group said, and virtually all opportunities within the alliance to reduce the role of nuclear arms or for arms limitation in general would be lost. The study group does not put much faith in the example or signal which such a Netherlands "no" could give, neither in the West and even less in the East where public opinion has practically no role. Renewed postponement of a Netherlands decision would probably give some relief to internal tensions but could nevertheless harm the Netherlands position and influence within NATO, the study group said.

SCHMIDT, TRUDEAU DISCUSS UPCOMING OTTAWA SUMMIT

LD252255 Hamburg DPA in German 1850 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 25 Jun (DPA)--Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau met with Chancellor Schmidt in Bonn tonight. The meeting was in preparation for the summit of the seven most important Western industrial countries, which will be held in Ottawa on 21-22 July. Trudeau had come from Paris where he had talks with President Mitterrand and Premier Mauroy. Tomorrow he will see Prime Minister Thatcher in London.

PAPER COMMENTS ON FRENCH COMMUNIST MINISTERS

[Commentary signed VM.: "With the Communists"]

[Text] France's Socialist and Communist Parties formally bridged their antagonisms in a government agreement. Thus, State President Mitterrand has a free hand to appoint some Communist ministers to his government. The Communist Party of France, one of the most Stalinist communist parties of the West, has not participated in the government since 1947.

For some of the French, this comes as a surprise. After all, the Socialist Party won an absolute majority for itself last Sunday. Is not Mitterrand thus independent of the support of the Communists? That is true if one considers only the distribution of seats in the new National Assembly. But there are other political realities. Thanks to the support of Communist voters, Mitterrand scored his victories on 10 May and 21 June. He will need it again in 2 years at the latest, when the communal elections take place. It seems a "democratic necessity" to many Socialist Party followers not to leave the PCF facing a closed door. The president hopes for a practical use: Communist ministers could be a guarantee for social peace in plants where the Communist trade union CGT is predominant. In the election campaign, Mitterrand had neither ruled out nor promised cooperation with the PCF. He made it dependent on a changed political attitude of the Communist Party leadership. He says that this prerequisite has been fulfilled for the Socialist Party with the recent agreement.

The Communist Party wants to get out of the isolation it had maneuvered itself into through the breach of the agreement with the leftists 3 and 1/2 years ago. To become eligible to join the government would be most useful for the PCF in the long run. To achieve this, Marchais and his people are willing to make the greatest sacrifices, even in foreign politics. Its present weakness does not offer the Communist Party another chance. But that doesn't make it a reliable coalition partner.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG VIEWS ROSTOW APPOINTMENT

DW250927 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 25 Jun 81 p 4

[Commentary signed Schr: "Rostow's Frankness"]

[Text] President Reagan needed a long time to find a disarmament commissioner. Although only adversaries of SALT were eligible, the choice seemed obviously difficult because the archconservatives in the Senate and among the presidential advisers wanted to accept only a particularly uncompromising candidate. Eugene V. Rostow, who has been accepted by Senate, fulfills these prerequisites. But in contrast to the other applicants, he has a respectable reputation.

When he was questioned by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Rostow did not put his reputation at stake but that of the administration. The facts that the SALT material is complicated and that an examination of U.S. standpoints needs time were not really new or revealing with regard to his statements. Revealing was the frank admission that nobody in the government knows exactly "what we actually want to negotiate." This statement, however, doesn't come as a complete surprise. Reagan and his people never made a secret of not wanting to negotiate prior to 1982, hoping to have regained an economic and military position of strength by then. Only under such prerequisites would the link between SALT negotiations and a containment policy be credible, a line also suggested by Rostow.

So the U.S. policy isn't at all as unclear as Europeans frequently feel. It doesn't rule out that negotiations on medium-range missiles in Europe will begin earlier, namely, this fall. Rostow has confirmed it explicitly. The questions are whether Washington will start out from the right prerequisites and what chances for success negotiations on missiles in Europe will have as long as the superpowers cannot agree on a new strategic balance.

DIE WELT LAUDS U.S. 'WAR OF NERVES' AGAINST USSR

[Heinz Barth commentary: "Dampening the Panic"]

[Text] Ronald Reagan confuses his leftist critics. He termed developments in Poland the beginning of the end of Soviet rule in East Europe. Alexander Haig, his secretary of state, even spoke of "spiritual exhaustion" in the Kremlin for which he predicted a dark future. These are views which both gentlemen share with Henry Kissinger, who is convinced that the Soviet Union will be the sick man of Europe by the end of this decade.

Deprecatory judgment and undiplomatic frankness irritates prominent American columnists. They were shocked, asking whether a president may challenge the old gentleman in the Kremlin with such disparaging remarks?

Of course not, a conservative president least of all! He is mainly expected to dramatize the strength of the Soviet Union to justify his own armament. It is almost against the rules for Reagan to make long-term prognoses for the Soviet system, which seem to support the arguments of those advocates of appeasement who want to play down Soviet expansionism. The President does not mean the military potential, but the inner weakness of a political and economic system which is deteriorating more and more behind a facade of missiles--a system which some Europeans want to consider as lasting forever.

Reagan's new self-assuredness has decisively changed the relations of both nuclear giants. He signals to the Europeans that they must not panic because of the obvious contradiction between playing down and overrating the Russian potential. Prior to new negotiations, a victory in the war of nerves is more important than the number of missiles to be negotiated.

FOREIGN MINISTER TO VISIT BULGARIA 8-10 JULY

LD231318 Hamburg DPA in German 1144 GMT 23 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 23 Jun (DPA)--The Foreign Ministry announced today that Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher will pay an official visit to Bulgaria from 8 to 10 July at the invitation of Bulgarian Foreign Minister Petur Mladenov.

CHEYSSON, PCF SPOKESMAN CRITICIZES U.S. STATEMENT

Foreign Minister: Miscalculation

NC251228 Paris AFP in English 1219 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 25 Jun (AFP)--Washington's warning that its relations with Paris would be affected by the inclusion of Communists in the French cabinet was based on a "miscalculation," French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson said today.

Mr Cheysson said in a radio interview that the Americans might have feared that the appointment of four Communist ministers "would have a contagious effect," but such a premise ignored the realities of French politics. He said the situation in France was "unique because the Socialist Party is very strong with respect to the Communist Party" and because President Francois Mitterrand has "total authority at any moment to name a minister or sack a minister. The United States has mistakenly equated the different situations in France and Italy or in France and Spain etc," the chief French diplomat said over Europe 1 Radio. "The (U.S.) communique is in line with this miscalculation."

Mr Cheysson also said that the U.S. statement, warning that the "tone and content" of Washington-Paris relations would be affected, was primarily designed for domestic consumption in the United States.

He denied a report by the U.S. television network ABC that U.S. President Ronald Reagan had been assured by Mr Mitterrand that the Communist ministers would not be privy to national defence secrets. The report smacked of James Bond, he said. Brusquely declaring that this is not the "sort of conversation" that French leaders have with the Americans or anyone else, Mr Cheysson said: "What we can tell the Americans, if they are interested, or the Paraguayans or whomever, is that the structure of our government... is that of a business and in business the guys who do the errands are not informed about the management of the firm. Each does that for which is is appointed," Mr Cheysson said. "Me, I do not take care of the police. The transport minister (Charles Fiterman, number two in the Communist Party) is not going to be concerned with defense."

The foreign minister also attacked "our American friends" for not helping France overcome its worsening economic situation. "Their policy of high interest rates and a very expensive dollar, which continually pushes up oil prices, prevents any possibility of investment," he said. France was "hard up," Mr Cheysson added. "We are waging war and we could not enter it with only a part of the (left wing) majority. We must fight this fight all together."

Cheysson TV Statement

NC261150 Paris AFP in English 1141 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Paris, 26 Jun (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson today hit back at the United States reaction to the inclusion of four Communists in France's new cabinet. He said on television that the U.S. position was "unacceptable and, at the least, surprising." The minister said there were contradictions on the subject between the State Department's official reaction, comments made to him by American leaders during his visit to Washington earlier this month and statements in Paris this week by U.S. Vice President George Bush.

Gremetz: Scornfully Reject

NC251208 Paris AFP in English 1159 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 25 Jun (AFP)--The French Communist Party foreign affairs spokesman, Maxime Gremetz, today rejected "scornfully" last night's U.S. Government statement that relations with France would "be affected" by the inclusion of four Communists in the new cabinet.

Mr Gremetz, a member of the party's Political Bureau, said the U.S. statement questioned the integrity of the Communists, and "along with millions of French men and women reject such an interference with scorn." Mr Gremetz said in a TV interview that Washington's remarks were unacceptable to most French people. French Government affairs were the concern of the French alone, he added.

WESTERN REACTION TO COMMUNIST MINISTERS CITED

LD251910 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Text] Journalists may be repeating themselves, but for 24 hours they have been asking all of the foreign visitors who leave the Elysee exactly the same question: What do you think about the arrival of Communist ministers? The president of the European Community Commission, Gaston Thorn, who was received this morning by Francois Mitterrand, did not want to reply. As far as he is concerned, it is a problem which only concerns the French.

This is also the opinion of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau who was received at the Elysee at noon. Trudeau gave his reactions to (Bertrand Vannier), reactions which are all the more interesting because Canada is at the crossroads between French-speaking countries and North America.

[Begin Trudeau recording] I don't know if Washington is worried. I think they explained their point of view yesterday. As for my opinion, no, I am not inclined to tell another country how it should form its government. I would certainly be rather astonished if I were told who should be in my cabinet. I prefer to respect the autonomy of French politics in this area. This participation--this is my point of view--has no importance whatever. [end recording]

As you know, and Mr Trudeau just alluded to it, the Americans have taken it very badly. For them, four Communist ministers in France is four too many. U.S. Secretary of State General Haig said relations between Washington and Paris are going to be affected--meaning they will deteriorate. U.S. Vice President George Bush, who left France this morning after a 24-hour visit, corrected the range a little. We are concerned, he said, but our relations with France will remain close and cordial. In fact, it's another way of saying the same thing. Charles Fiterman and his three colleagues are frightening Reagan's America, as Denis Poncet, our correspondent in Washington explains.

[Begin Poncet recording] In 1978 the former Carter administration, in the face of the possible arrival of Communists in the Italian Government, said: We could not allow such participation. At the time, these words gave rise to a general (?outcry) in Europe. Today, comparing the reaction of the current administration with that of the Democrats of the former administration, a large part of the American press considers it to be rather moderate, even if the French are surprised by the firm and unrestrained tone adopted by the State Department.

Well, if there is moderation, why? This morning's paper believe that there is a basic reason: Communist participation in the affairs of the French Government will not last long. As the Los Angeles TIMES writes, the French Communist Party has shown over the years, I quote, a lack of talent for intelligent cooperation. And now that it is in power, continues the article, the big question is to know how long it will take for its self-destructive opportunism and fidelity to Moscow to come to the surface. Meanwhile, one thing is certain: Relations between the two capitals are going to cool down considerably. [end recording]

CHEYSSON COMMENTS ON WORLD ECONOMIC SITUATION

LD251947 Hamburg DPA in German 1741 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Text] Brussels, 25 Jun (DPA)--New French Foreign Minister Cheysson has called for an immediate correction of the international policy of high interest rates.

In an interview with North German Radio, Cheysson said today that the high interest rates hamper Europe's economic revival. Interest rates of 20 percent made it difficult for firms to borrow money to carry out necessary investments. Moreoever, Europeans must ask themselves how they could jointly protect against the very high U.S. interest rate.

Cheysson spoke of "brutal chang in the U.S. interest rate" against which Europeans must defend themselves. The French Government knows that Chancellor Schmidt takes the same view. Both Germans and Britons are concerend about the high unemployment figures. This makes it necessary to stimulate the eocnomy. Cheysson believes that the workers' right of codetermination must be improved at the European level. He also called for closer integration of the aerospace industry within the EEC.

OFFICIALS TALK WITH NICARAGUAN FOREIGN MINISTER

PM251426 Paris LE MONDE in French 21-22 Jun 81 p 4

[Text] A 2-hour and 15-minute talk at the Elysee with Pierre Beregovoy, secretary general at the president's office, and a further talk with PS First Secretary Jospin at PS headquarters marked the first day of the visit of Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto. D'Escoto will meet with External Affairs Minister Cheysson on Saturday morning.

D'Escoto stated that he is "extremely pleased" with these talks, emphasizing that he paid President Mitterrand a brief visit and conveyed to him an invitation to officially visit Nicaragua. Observers emphasized the exceptional length of the talks at the Elysee, which lasted 1 and 1/2 hours longer than expected. They took place in the presence of Regis Debray, assistant to the president.

The main subject of the talks, the minister stated, was the situation in Nicaragua, bilateral relations--in particular French aid which, according to D'Escoto, could soon be increased--and the situation in Central America, especially El Salvador.

D'Escoto, who arrived in Paris on 18 June on a 2-day working visit, also expressed the hope that his talks would make it possible to "develop in depth both relations between the two countries and contacts at the highest level with the new govenrment." In his message of thanks to Daniel Ortega, leader of the Nicaraguan junta, Mitterrand paid tribute to the "courage and tenacity" of the Nicaraguan people and assured them that they "will continue to find in him a friend in the building of a fairer society and in their efforts aimed at development."

SOCIALIST LEADERS AGREE TO SPADOLINI GOVERNMENT

NC251557 Paris AFP in English 1537 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 25 June (AFP)--Republican Giovanni Spadolini may be Italy's first non Christian Democrat to head a government since the end of the Second World War.

Italian Socialist party leaders today decided to give the green light to Mr Spadolini's attempt to put together a cabinet. Their approval had been expected since the beginning of the week. The socialist leaders said they supported Mr Spadolini'seffort to form a new government "to resolve the different crises now facing the country."

PSI'S CRAXI ON FORMING GOVERNMENT, WORLD ISSUES

PM250951 Rome AVANTI in Italian 19 Jun 81 p 16

[Excerpts] Socialist Secretary Bettino Craxi gave a news conference for foreign and Italian journalists yesterday lunchtime at the Foreign Press Association Offices in Rome. Here, topic by topic, are the answers that the PSI secretary gave to the journalists' questions.

Government Crisis--Spadolini can go to the president's palace and withdraw his reservations [about agreeing to form a government] whenever he likes. Any procedure is valid as long as the substance of the problems is tackled, which as far as the Socialists are concerned means a discussion of a government program in negotiations that can start on Monday. In the work of a government in a country such as Italy it is impossible to do without the role and influence of the party with the relative majority, namely the DC. But how this influence is calculated in terms of government participation is a task that belongs to the prime minister-designate. In other words, it is he who must seek to achieve a balance acceptable to all the forces of the majority. Apart from that, he has rights laid down by the constitution, which the prime minister-designate can exercise as he sees fit.

Next, Craxi added that a non-DC premiership favors the criterion of equality among the government parties. As for the hypothesis, raised in certain quarters, of a minority government without Christian Democrats to prepare for early elections, Craxi replied that he was looking at the uncovered cards on the table. We shall see whether there are any covered cards as well, he added. The DC says that it has no bias against Spadolini, although its deputy secretary, Vittorino Colombo, says that the prime minister-designate will receive from the DC the same "support" as it gave La Malfa and Craxi in 1979. I regard this as a statement that is bound to mislead, to say the least. If it was risky 2 years ago it would be rash now.

French Socialists' Success--Although there is no automatic relationship between what happens in one country and the situation in other European countries, the French Socialist Party's success will prompt the belief that socialist gains are possible in Europe. Change is a law which sooner or later is bound to be observed.

The newspapers have recently been talking in terms of a socialist France. But the French Socialist Party used to have about 20 percent and its success was the result of a methodical and intelligent policy of alliances and convergences on the topics of regeneration.

In Italy there is potential secular area; a way must be found of facilitating its political expression. The PSI is striving to do this through an action of movement and openness with respect to various forces which identify with the demand for change, which is considerable in this country.

Relations with PCI--The present balance of forces shows that it is impossible to govern without the DC. It is difficult to understand the polemic being conducted by Berlinguer, who wants an alternative but at the same time is demanding to join the government together with the DC. For years he has supported the thesis of an agreement with the DC; now he is supporting a different thesis, and one cannot see the reason for this discrimination.

Still, on the basis of the present balance of forces, there can be no alternative without the DC; similarly, one cannot ignore the fact that the possibility of forming governments and keeping parliaments alive depends on the PSI's attitudes. Indeed, if the PSI were to transfer to the opposition, it would mean the end of this legislative term.

Next the Socialist secretary added that the revision of the PCI's entire structure--on which that party has, after all, built its organization and its policy--is being conducted with difficulty. Lack of clarity can enable one to win points but it does not provide responsible and, above all, lasting political prospects. And this is what the country needs.

Foreign Policy--Foreign policy is a joint commitment for the government coalition that must be based on certain clear points: The principle of security, military control, an initiative with respect to the Mediterranean area and the crisis points in the Middle East, relations with the European and Eastern-bloc countries and specific action vis-a-vis the African countries.

Craxi placed particular emphasis on a well-focused policy line toward the Third World, pointing out in this connection that while people in Somalia are literally starving to death, Minister Colombo preferred to visit Addis Ababa--where 1,500 Cubans arrived a few days later--rather than Mogadishu.

Asked about the situation in Chile and El Salvador and about the socialist international's initiatives with respect to these two countries, the PSI secretary said that unfortunately, as far as the country under Pinochet's dictatorship is concerned, the situation seems frozen and for the time being there are no apparent signs of a turnabout.

In the case of El Salvador, however, the Socialist and Christian Democratic internationals are making a mediation bid. In the next few days there will be a meeting in this connection in Nicaragua to take stock of the initiative undertaken.

The realistic objective remains to lay the foundations for political negotiations, since in El Salvador the guerrilla forces are no more able to reverse the situation than the government is to eliminate the guerrilla forces.

BALSEMAO ON KARAMANLIS MEETING, FRENCH CABINET

LD251608 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 2200 GMT 24 Jun 81

[Excerpt] In Lisbon's Queluz Palace, President Konstandinos Karamanlis of Greece, on the second day of his 3-day official visit to Portugal, received Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao this morning.

Afterwards, the head of the Portuguese Government summed up his meeting to newsmen:

[Begin recording] We discussed matters relating to the situation in Europe and what Common Market membership has meant for Greece. My general impression is that, contrary to the views of some of the opponents to Portugal's bid to join the Common Market, contrary to what they have been spreading here, Greece had (?far) fewer problems than (?she was warned she would face) by joining the market. It is a valuable experience which the foreign ministers of our two countries will be discussing in depth.

We also broached matters relating to other parts of Europe, including, naturally, Greek-Turkish affairs. The two foreign ministers will go into detail on that.

More than anything else, I had the opportunity to talk with a man of great political influence, who played a fundamental role in the restoration of democracy to his country and who, judging by his political decisions, is someone who (?goes along with) the program of our own government in matters of foreign policy, bearing in mind that Greece rejoined NATO while he was prime minister and entered the Common Market after he became president--both these events having taken place during his leadership.

[Question] Mr Prime Minister, isn't it true that the inclusion of Communists in France's new government has (?upset) NATO?

[Answer] It has also had repercussions in a number of European countries [words indistinct].

[Question] Mr Prime Minister, how does the Portuguese Government view this development?

[Answer] The Portuguese Government [words indistinct] the French Government.

[Question] Do you think it likely to have any consequences? Reagan, for instance, has not shown himself to be particularly pleased with this development.

[Answer] I think the presence of Communists in a West European government might invariably give cause for some doubt and concern, particularly when that government is of a NATO member country. [end recording]

NEWSPAPERS REVEAL PLANS OF ALLEGED COUPISTS

NC251012 Paris AFP in English 1001 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Text] Madrid, 25 Jun (AFP)--Three Spanish Army officers and three civilians arrested on Wednesday planned to capture the royal palace and stage a wave of attacks in Madrid as part of a plot against the state, press reports said here today. Those arrested were Colonel Antonio Sicre and Ricardo Garchitorena, Major Ricardo Saenz de Ynestrillas, Colonel Sicre's civilian brother Luis and two women, Maria Concepcion Villagrasa and Maria Paz Peraz Nieto.

The monarchist paper ABC today said that a fourth officer, a major, was also being held but his identity was not revealed. The Roman Catholic daily YA quoted police sources as saying that the arrests were made too soon for investigators to discover all the threads to the plot, but the assault on the royal palace of Zarzuela was timed to coincide with a reception being held elsewhere by King Juan Carlos to mark his Saint's Day yesterday. YA said details of the planned operation--allegedly financed by Mrs Paz Perez--were obscure as none of the officers arrested commanded a unit. The centrist DIARIO 16 linked the plot with right-wing movements planning attacks in Madrid to incite the armed forces to rebel. The paper said that the plot's existence had been suspected and the king's bodyguard strengthened. The independent EL PAIS alleged that the plotters had tapped the telephones of members of the government. Colonel Sicre was a signals and codes expert attached to the prime minister's office, the paper noted.

Police refused to comment on the press reports.

Fourth Officer Arrested

[Excerpt] According to the EUROPA PRESS AGENCY, Army Major (Jesus Campos Perez) has been placed in preventive custody after making a statement to a military judge yesterday. The judge ordered the arrest of the army major on the ground that there was alleged evidence of complicity in a conspiracy to military rebellion. Major (Jesus Campos Perez) is the fourth officer to be arrested in the last few days. As you will recall, the other three are Colonels Sicre and Garcitorena and Maj Saenz de Ynestrillas. Lt Gen Quintana Lacaci, captain general of the 1st military region, appointed Col (Baldina de Ingeiro) as special judge in the case involving the four arrested officers and five civilians.

DEFENSE MINISTER OLIART VISITS VALENCIA

LD260916 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Text] Minister of Defense Alberto Oliart said in Valencia today: "I stake my life that there will not be another coup d'etat here." As is known, the defense minister has begun a 3-day official visit to the 3d military region. We have a report from Valencia:

Confidence in our democratic institutions increased from 61 percent in 1979 to 81 percent--that is 20 percent--after 23 February. This statement was made by the defense minister, at a news conference held in Valencia on the occasion of his visit to the installations and units of the 3d military region. He also said that the discipline and morale of the motorized division Maestrazgo No 3 made an excellent impression on him, after attending a parade in the morning. In response to questions from newsmen in connection with the 23 February coup attempt and specifically in connection with this military region, he referred the journalists to the military authority for replies, saying that it has all the information available to this effect. He described as very satisfactory the present working of the intelligence services and he stressed that military service will be performed outside of the recruits' region of origin so that they can get to know about other regions.

NORWAY

VICE ADMIRAL CITES SOVIET THREAT IN BALTIC

PM251441 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 23 Jun 81 p 7

[Liv Hegna report]

[Text] Bornholm, Jun--"Developments in the Soviet Navy have brought about a more potent threat to southern Norway, especially in a protracted war, when the Soviet bases in the Baltic would assume great importance," said Vice Adm Robert Helseth, supreme commander in south Norway, at a Nordic "people and defense" conference in Bornholm recently.

Helseth also said that the transfer of six Soviet submarines to the Baltic also contributed to the greater threat.

The Golf II class submarines each have three nuclear missiles onboard. The missiles have a range of 700 nautical miles and could reach targets in southern Scandinavia and central Europe, Admiral Helseth pointed out that as far as southern Norway is concerned the situation has thus acquired a new dimension. "I am just as concerned over these Golf II submarines as I am over the deployment of the medium-range missiles with targets in Europe," he said.

Admiral Helseth also stressed that the Soviet Union's base area on the Kola Peninsula is extremely concentrated and vulnerable to attack while, at the same time, the base has only a limited capacity for repairs. Bearing in mind the Soviet Union's increasing construction of oceangoing vessels, the larger and better protected base and repair capacity in the Baltic will acquire greater importance.

"Free access to the Baltic will therefore be of considerable significance to the Soviet Union," the admiral said. He also pointed to the importance the Soviet Union itself attaches to the area. This is illustrated by the superpower's attempts to have the Baltic declared a "sea of peace" to which other powers' warships should not have access. "The Soviet Union will probably achieve this when the new Law of the Sea Laws are adopted in the 1980's," Helseth said.

ACADEMIES COMPLETE INDUSTRY, DEFENSE STUDY

[Editorial: "Defense and Research"]

[Text] The Royal Swedish Academies of Engineering and Military Sciences have completed a study of the connection between Swedish industrial and security policies. The study was made by a committee led by former justice ombudsman Gunnar Thyresson. Thus, it is a document without political bias, which is now being introduced into Sweden's flagging defense and security policy debate.

It is a pity that the study has had so little attention paid to it for it is an extraordinarily valuable foundation for the continued defense debate. Since we can no longer pursue a defense and security policy "ostrich" debate, we need facts, not least to repulse the emotionally based attacks on a defense sufficiently strong to satisfy the demands for credibility in the eyes of the rest of the world made by our nonaligned foreign policy.

For with every passing year, it becomes increasingly difficult to isolate what were once described as strictly defense and security policy questions from other social questions. For this reason, it is now a correct departure point to assume that credibility resides in the ability of the whole of society to resist external pressure.

It probably comes as a surprise to many that up to now industrial questions in defense planning have been dealt with without more detailed discussion or deeper analysis. According to the study, there are no precise estimates on whether Swedish industry is able to satisfy demand for various products and goods which are necessary from the security policy viewpoint.

This makes it all the more important to make good the deficiencies--precision must be the guiding principle in all areas of defense and security policy. The woolliness which surrounds many statements is often there to conceal shortcomings and to hide the discrepancy between the stated objective and available resources.

According to the study, the rest of the world evaluates our strength on our ability to function in a number of areas in crises and the capacity we could develop in the event of a war. The study makes it clear that a number of measures must be adopted so that these requirements might be satisfied.

It is no secret that our domestic arms industry is a significant defense and security resource. It is also well known that Sweden is all too small a base to give sufficient economic support to this arms industry, which must therefore be given the opportunity to compensate for this through exports, for which strict conditions are laid down. For this reason, it must be seen as a serious threat that this competence, acquired over a long period of time and at great expense, could be lost as the result of a decrease in the number of orders from the defense forces. On the other hand, compensation for this could be achieved through increased exports.

Like the rest of industry, the arms industry should not be isolated from the world. Here the study points to a sore spot--technical developments are now proceeding at such a rate as to require such resources and are so specialized that international cooperation is necessary.

But the decisive consideration must to a large extent be how best to serve our own interests through achieving defense and security targets and not the notion that in an uncertain world we should--out of self-denial or for the sake of the good example it would give to others--deny ourselves that which would best serve the demands made by democratic representation.

The other day opinion poll figures showed not only that the Swedish people's will to defend itself was great, but also that increasing numbers of people, despite the economic crisis, want to put more money into defense. Even though with the best will in the world our resources are not inexhaustible, they can be exploited more efficiently by the pattern of coordination in a number of areas which the report proposes.

One of the objectives of the current Defense Commission should be to avoid the criticism directed in the study at the earlier lack of detailed discussion and to aim at a deeper analysis of an area of society that is much more important than had been thought in the past.

SECRETARY NOTT ANNOUNCES DEFENSE CUTBACKS

LD252224 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1628 GMT 25 Jun 81

[By Robert Hutchinson, PA defense correspondent]

[Text] The Royal Navy, as expected, took the biggest beating in a package of defence measures, the most important for a decade, announced by Defence Secretary John Nott in the Commons today.

Cuts will be: Chatham dockyard and base to be closed by 1984 and severe curtailment of work at Portsmouth, although the base will be retained. The Gibraltar dockyard's future is also under review.

The size of the navy's destroyer and frigate force will be cut by nine to 50 ships declared to NATO, achieved by disposing of older ships like the Country, Rothesay and Leander classes. Only two of the navy's three new Harrier carriers will enter service, although Mr Nott pledged to complete the new Ark Royal at Swan Hunter on Tyneside. The navy's two amphibious ships Fearless and Intrepid will be disposed of earlier, although the three marine commandos will be maintained. The older carrier Hermes will also be phased out as soon as the HMS Illustrious, second of the new Harrier carriers, is in service.

The navy also bore the brunt of manpower cuts--between 8,000 and 10,000 men will be cut from the target numbers by the end of 1986. Also cut are naval shore establishments, fuel depots and stores bases. Overall civilian numbers will drop by between 15,000 and 20,000 inside the Defence Ministry as a result of all the measures announced today. "Redundancies, will, I'm afraid, be inescapable," warned Mr Nott.

The army in turn will be cut by around 7,000 to 135,000 over the next five years. In addition, 2,000 administrative jobs will go in the Rhine Army with the withdrawal of the four armoured division hqs back to UK.

On the plus side, Mr Nott announced the expected joint manufacture of the American AV-8B Harrier version with 60 aircraft being ordered for the RAF. This deal, which involves a total of 400 aircraft including the American order, will mean 1,000 million pounds of business for British aerospace.

One of the objects of the defence review was to boost air defence, but short term options to improve numbers of interceptors are clearly limited. Mr Nott announced the arming of an additional 36 Hawk trainer jets with Sidewinder air to air missiles. This brings the total of Hawk emergency daytime-only fighters to 72. Two Phantom fighter squadrons will be run on longer than planned and 20 new Tornado ground attack jets may be switched to the UK air defence role.

Mr Nott made no startling changes to the navy's warship building plans, confirming an order with Vickers for a 177 million-pound nuclear hunter killer-submarine and the continuance of orders for 20 new warships already in hand, worth 2,000 million pounds over the new years. Surprisingly he announces the placing of an order for a further type-22 "frigate" worth 125 million pounds with Yarrows on the Clyde: the cost and sophistication of this class of ship was one of the factors in the launch of the defence review.

Some of the losses in manpower will be made up by increasing the part-time territorial role: 16,000 more men and women "weekend" soldiers will be recruited progressively, with an increase of four more training days a year for them.

Chief of the general staff, General Sir Edwin Bramall watched pale-faced from the distinguished visitors gallery as Mr Nott read his statement. MPs will debate the issue in the Commons on July 7.

DAILY TELEGRAPH VIEWS FUTURE OF NEW TORPEDO

PM241448 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 24 Jun 81 p 6

[Desmond Wettern report]

[Text] Britain's latest torpedo, the Stingray, one of the most costly weapons yet developed for the navy and the RAF, will be effective against any known submarine in service today or planned over the next 20 years, according to a report by the Commons Defence Committee published yesterday.

Despite the project's high cost, some 920-million pounds over a 14 year period, the committee concludes--contrary to the report last year of the Commons Public Accounts Committee--that Stingray is far superior to its American rival, the latest version of the Mark 46 torpedo.

This was initially developed in the 1960's, and it will be at least 10 years before any of the American replacement torpedoes could be made available to the Royal Navy.

Stingray, which is due to enter service in the fleet in 1983, will be delivered ahead of schedule and slightly below the cost first estimated in January, 1978.

Senior naval officers, Defence Ministry officials and representatives of the principal contractor, Marconi Space and Defence Systems, told the committee that they believed as many as 3,000 Stingray torpedoes might be sold overseas.

The report expresses the hope that Stingray might be sold to the Americans as an interim weapon until their Mark 46 replacement is ready about 1990, a view that is known to be shared by Mr Nott, defence secretary.

But Rear Adm A.A. Murphy, special project director in the Ministry of Defence, pointed out "I think it is unreasonable to expect the Americans to buy such an important weapon from abroad and be dependent upon a nation abroad for such crucial weapon in their own defence."

The committee also looked at the present competition between Marconi and the American Gould company for a contract for a new heavyweight torpedo for the Royal Navy's submarines.

Several witnesses before the committee pointed out that whereas several test vehicles have already been tried out for the Marconi contender, the 7525, the American project the Mark 48 ADCAP (additional capability) at present exists only on paper.

The Ministry of Defence, in reaching a decision due to be made next month, would have to rely on written pledges from the Americans on the weapon's future performance.

Despite assurances from Gould that a Royal Navy purchase of the Mark 48 would mean considerable offset work from America for British companies, Mr W.F. Mumford, the assistant under secretary of state, material (navy) in the Ministry of Defence admitted that such offset sales were not a condition of any purchase of the American weapon.

There is also a good chance of collaboration with West Germany if the 7525 goes ahead.

The new weapon would incorporate much of the technology used in Stingray and this would mean increasing the labour force at Marconi's new factory at Neston, Cheshire, from 400 to about 1000.

CARRINGTON MEETS WITH NORWEGIAN DELEGATION

PM240848 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 20 Jun 81 p 18

[Aasmund Willersrud report]

[Excerpt] NATO's nuclear policy was the main topic at the talks, which a delegation from the Norwegian Conservative Party led by parliamentary leader Kaare Willoch and party Chairman Jo Benkow, had with British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington in London on Friday [19 June]. Without making any direct reference to the Norwegian debate on nuclear-free zones, Carrington nevertheless stressed the importance of the alliance's concerted action in all important questions.

The foreign secretary said that this is essential, especially at the present time when attempts are being made to start the East-West dialogue on nuclear arms limitation. Willoch told AFTENPOSTEN that Carrington had expressed full confidence in the U.S. desire for negotiations with the Soviet Union. He also stressed his satisfaction with the fact that the present administration in Washington is taking its time to understand the problems before sitting down at the negotiating table.

The situation in Poland also was discussed with the British foreign secretary. In the light of his talks with Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek, who is on an official visit to London, Lord Carrington said that Poland's political leaders are intent on and will probably also succeed in avoiding such violent political developments in the country that the Soviet Union could have an excuse for intervening.

During their 2-day visit in London, the Norwegian Conservative Party representatives also held talks with Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Geoffrey Howe, Secretary of State for Industry Sir Keith Joseph and Secretary of State for Energy Hamish Gray. Willoch said the talks had given greater insight into the problems facing Britain.

I SIMERINI QUESTIONS PAPANDREOU ON CYPRUS POLICY

NC250958 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 25 Jun 81 pp 1, 9

[From the weekly supplement KIRIAKATIKI SIMERINI: Exculsive interview granted by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou to I SIMERINI correspondent Persefoni Mihailidhou-Andreou on 13 June in Athens]

[Excerpt] Question: Mr Chairman, as you most certainly know, the Papandreou name has been established in Cyprus from 1965 to the present by the policy of your never-to-be-forgotten father. It is also an observable phenomenon that in Cyprus this policy is supported by an impressive percentage of personalities of all ideological hues. Bearing in mind that your father's policy spoke to the souls of Cypriots and that today polls show you close to assuming authority in Greece, if this should happen, what policy will you implement on the Cyprus issue?

Answer: It is difficult for one to define in detail what the policy on the Cyprus issue will be. There are, however, certain principles we will respect. At the outset I start from the fact that: Although Cyprus is an independent state and a UN members, there is a national tie between Greeks from Greece and the Greek Cypriots. We belong to the same nation, even though we live within the boundaries of two separate states. Consequently, the primary criterion, the basic principle, consists of the precise recognition that defense of the independence and integral character of Cyprus is a national duty for all Greek governments and for the Greek nation.

In reference to this, I would like to underline that it is a mistake to consider that the question of defending the territorial integrity of Greece and its national independence could be separated from the fate of Cyprus.

It is a mistake to believe that the defense of Greece is possible or effective without simultaneously defending the integrity, unity and independence of the Republic of Cyprus.

The second point that I would like to underline in respect of our own policy is this: We cannot ignore, it is not permissible for a Greek Government to ignore, that we are a guarantor power, that we have a duty toward Cyprus. Irrespective of the national issue itself, conventionally and under the framework of international law we have certain obligations toward Cyprus that we have absolutely no right to forget.

The third basic principle we will pursue is that the Cyprus issue, as an issue, must be the first issue of interest to Greek diplomacy in every corner of the earth.

I regret to say this, but presentation of the Cyprus issue by the Foreign Ministry and by our diplomatic services has been anemic to the degree that we have not managed to effectively and successfully inform the world public and international public opinion. Very often as I travel and meet political leaders in foreign countries I observe that they do not know about the problem, or rather that the Turkish diplomatic services have done an excellent job.

Foreigners tend to view the Cyprus problem as a problem between two communities. They do not view this problem as a problem involving the independence of a member state of the United Nations. From the moment that Greek diplomacy allows the creation of the impression abroad that this is a domestic problem of Cyprus, of how the "Greek Cypriots" can coexist with the "Turkish Cypriots," then the basic problems facing Cyprus are forgotten and we are left on the sidelines.

The basic fact on Cyprus, the critical fact, is that nearly 40 percent of the island is held by Turkey after a vestial invasion and under an equally bestial occupation. There is naturally importance in the intercommunal dialogue in connection with the protection of the rights of the citizens, no matter whether they are Greek or Turkish Cypriots. In other words, it is a joint effort toward establishment of a constitutional charter to guarantee not only the peaceful coexistence of the two communities but also a creative relationship between them. It must have become clear that dialogue between the two communities, which, naturally has meaning in respect to establishing the rights of the citizens--no matter whether they are Greek or Turkish Cypriots--to establishing a constitution, will guarantee these rights for all citizens of Cyprus. This entire effort, in other words the establishment of a modus vivendi that will allow not only the peaceful coexistence of the two communities but also a creative relationship between them, is essential. This, however, is impossible when 40 percent of Cyprus happens to be under Turkish occupation and when Turkish troops are stationed in Cyprus.

In other words, the primary and basic message that our diplomacy should have disseminated overseas is this: We must request--on whatever concerns relations between the two communities--discussion and most certainly a solution, but the presence of Turkish troops on the island is unacceptable. One cannot have great negotiating possibilities under the threat of tanks. Consequently, we believe that a truly live and aggressive promotion of the Cyprus issue in the diplomatic field, in the field of briefing foreign governments, in other words informing them of the character of the problem, must give emphasis to the fact that a solution must first pass through the phase of withdrawal of the foreign troops. There can be no solution acceptable to Greece, and I believe to the Greek Cypriots, that will not set this withdrawal of foreign troops as a first, basic and inviolable condition.

Question: Ever since the change in the political regime [the downfall of the junta] the policy of those responsible for handling the Cyprus issue has been a sort of incessant slogan: "Cyprus decides and Greece supports." I do not conceal from you that it is now becoming discernible that many Cypriots have started tiring of this and that they are asking for some sort of more responsible presence from Greece on their issue. What are your views on this?

Answer: This slogan, the dogma as you say of "Cyprus decides and Greece supports," naturally has its attractive viewpoint, that is, that Greece will not intervene in Cypriot domestic affairs; that the state of Cyprus must be respected by the state of Greece is, naturally, a correct rule. This, however, must not become an alibi for the inactivity and lack of interest of the Greek Government. Up to this moment, I regret this, but I must state it, this slogan, this dogma, has been an alibi for the virtual indifference of the Greek state toward Cyprus.

Question: Earlier you referred to the joint dogma of Greek-Cypriot defense. If you attain authority, will you work in this direction? We must even add that recently the average Cypriot feels abandoned and unprotected, like a Greek who has a motherland but an indifferent one.

Answer: I would prefer to circumvent this third question of yours on the defense dogma. because I have already said enough in my first answer.

Question: In the case that Turkey attempts a new military operation in Cyprus and you are in authority, will the distance between Greece and Cyprus remain as great as in the past?

Answer: This is an extremely basic question. In respect of geography, it is true that the distance between Greece and Cyprus is greater than the distance between Turkey and Cyprus. Consequently, from the point of view of operations, there is a decisive advantage for Turkey.

We must, however, make it clear to Turkey that we are not going to accept faits accomplish and that we will not remain disinterested if Turkey once again uses its armed force to extend its occupation over Cyprus. It is our position that we have the obligation to defend the liberty and independence of Cyprus and to support our Cypriot brothers. The way in which we will express this--that we will not remain disinterested--must be considered under the conditions of that specific moment, the balance of forces, but in every eventuality it must remain clear that Greece will never compromise over any such development.

Question: Mr Chairman, if the November elections give you the authority and responsibility in Greece, will you at long last bring this notorious Cyprus dossier to publicity? I ask you this question because a great number of Greek Cypriots are eagerly waiting for this so that light may at long last be shed on this serious matter which has cost them so much blood.

Answer: I am particularly glad that you have asked this question. This is truly the greatest act of treason committed in our country's modern times.

We know enough to realize that there was treason. We know enough to realize that there was guidance from the outside in this treason. Naturally, it is impossible to place positive blame, political or criminal, if this issue, that is the summer of 1974, is not completely cleared up.

Naturally we must not forget that whatever happened in 1974 was, to a great degree, because of what happened in 1967, when the country's dictator at that time, G. Papadhopoulos, withdrew the Greek division from Cyprus.

Question: Do you believe, Mr Chairman, that withdrawal of the Greek division in 1967 by itself led to the tragic events of July 1974? Apart from this, a large number of Cypriots believe that to a great degree this was the result of the joint policy of [word indistinct] at that time. What is your opinion?

Answer: I absolutely agree with you. I meant this as an additional fact. There are specific heavy responsibilities for what happened in 1974, both in Cyprus and in Greece.

Question: The French Socialist Party, which gained authority recently, will not change French foreign policy after the presidential election. Specifically, despite its Socialist administration, France will remain both within the EEC and within NATO. Could perhaps, these positions create problems for you in your position as a socialist party toward the EEC and NATO?

Answer: Most naturally in reference to the French Socialist Party it gives me great pleasure to stress that as parties we have extremely close relations. I would even state that it is perhaps the party in Europe that is closest to PASOK's positions. Naturally, however, because conditions are different there are also differences in the ways in which the two parties face certain issues. There are differences which we recognize, although we cooperate. This is the difference: For us NATO is not the same thing that it is for France. Naturally, France is not a member of NATO's military wing. We, however, are. Consequently, our withdrawal from the military wing of NATO would also be something logical to the French. What we must stress, however, is that NATO not only allowed the Turkish invasion, not only supplied the weapons, if you prefer, with which Turkey occupied 40 percent of Cyprus, but in fact it supported--not simply involved itself--it supported the Turkish presence in Cyprus.

It is also clear that for the sake of the interests of NATO, this area which today is occupied by Turkish troops undoubtedly offers decisive facilities to the alliance in the promotion of its own interest. It is difficult for the Greeks--mainland Greeks as well as Greek Cypriots, I believe--not to recognize this fact--that NATO permitted, coordinated and promoted [the Turkish invasion]. We will discover this exactly when the dossier on Cyprus is opened, when this great blow against the Greek nation is revealed. This is why for Greece the question of NATO is very particular.

There is also another aspect to the issue. Within NATO, when Greece participates in its military wing, it deploys, commands and arms its armed forces, with the north as the target. This is the danger from the north, as Averof describes it, while he recognizes that this danger no longer exists. We, however, are very certain that we will have to face a permanent threat from Turkey and that this threat is not likely to disappear for very many years. Greece's defense problem consists, primarily, of dealing with this danger. We do not want war. We are determined and resolved to do everything possible to avoid an armed clash. We must, however, make it absolutely clear that we will not permit a lessening--in any way or form--of our country's sovereign rights.

This is the very reason why Greece's participation in NATO's military wing serves nothing. On the contrary, it makes our struggle to defend our sovereign rights in the Aegean all the more difficult.

BULENT ECEVIT LEAVES EDITORIAL STAFF OF ARAYIS

NC260834 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 13 Jun 81 p 4

[From the editorial staff: "Rumors and the Truth"]

[Excerpt] Dear readers, our publication adviser and chief editor the honorable Bulent Ecevit's departure from ARAYIS on 3 June as a result of National Security Council Decision No 52 has led to the intensification of certain unfounded rumors. In reporting the honorable Ecevit's departure from our magazine, some circles and publication organs have made absolutely no mention of the National Security Council's decision, creating the impression that the honorable Ecevit's departure was the outcome of a disagreement with the staff. On the other hand, those who know the reason began to spread the rumor that our publication adviser and chief editor is merely pretending to have departed from ARAYIS, but that he will continue to write anonymously.

Both these allegations are unfounded and tendentious. Above all, far from being at variance with ARAYIS, there is full accord and understanding, as well as mutual love and respect, between the honorable Ecevit and ARAYIS magazine. The sole aim of the entire staff, as well as of the honorable Bulent Ecevit, has been to make ARAYIS the magazine of "those who believe in democracy" and who "defend a democratic regime." This effort will continue.

With regard to the second rumor, we believe that the honorable Ecevit will find this "terribly deplorable" and "difficult to endure." Those who know the honorable Ecevit well and those who understand him well cannot possibly imagine that he would continue to contribute to ARAYIS anonymously. As those who are well acquainted with our adviser and chief editor fully realize, the honorable Ecevit is not the kind of person who would conceal his identity and continue to struggle. This is not in his nature. Dear readers, for the time being there will be no editorial in ARAYIS following the honorable Ecevit's departure.

DEATH SENTENCE DEMANDED FOR 52 DISK LEADERS

TA251508 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Text] The military prosecutor's office of the Istanbul Martial Law Command has filed suit against the leader of the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK], Abdullah Basturk, and 51 of his colleagues with a demand for the death sentence for committing actions with the aim of forcefully changing the constitutional order.

In a news conference he held in Istanbul today, the military prosecutor of the martial law command, Judge Col Suleyman Takkeci, announced that since 12 September, an investigation was carried out concerning some 2,000 suspects of organizations or persons that have collaborated with DISK, the unions affiliated with it and the confederation, and that a suit has been filed against the 52 administrators of the confederation. The military prosecutor noted that suits will be filed in the other cases as soon as the investigations are concluded.

Explaining that this case concerns attitudes and actions aimed at dragging the country into an atmosphere of anarchy, rebellion and revolution, the military prosecutor then cited examples of various mass actions undertaken by DISK. He pointed out that moves in the form of conducting a general strike, slowing down or stopping work at factories or other work places, holding demonstrations on May Day and prolonging the strikes in the public and private sectors in an intrasigent manner are actually aimed at forcefully destroying order despite the fact that they seem to be individual incidents. The military prosecutor noted that all the actions undertaken by DISK are examples exposing the real facade of the economic, ideological and political war started against the state.

Stating that all the actions undertaken by the DISK leaders aim at changing the constitutional order by force and replacing it with a Marxist-Leninist order, the military prosecutor said that death sentences were demanded for the suspects in accordance with Article 146 of the Turkish penal code.

The names of the DISK administrators for whom death sentences have been demanded are as follows: Executive Council members: Abdullah Basturk, Riza Guven, Celal Kucuk, Gehmi Tsiklar, Kemal Nebioglu, (Nokbil) Zirkiloglu, Tuncer Locaman Oglu, Mustafa Aktolgali and Suleyman Celebi; Administrative Council members : Selahattin Sayin, Halil (Fayta), Kemal Yilmaz, Ali Sahin, Mehmet (Nihiaci), Kenan Akman, Niyazi Kogaz, Mustafa Karadayi, Ismet Cantekin, Hakki Onal, Berguzar Can, Demirhan Tuncay, Nusret Aydin, Ridvan Budak, Ekrem Akkus, Durmusali Yalniz, Tahir Guner, Akcin Koc, Yalcin Kalaka and Ozcan Keskic; Honorary Council members: Ergun Faruk Erdem, Talat Oz, Turker Azakli, Ali Taser, Ismail Caliskan, Cemal Aslan, Osman Ozkan and Saban Aydin; Supervisory Council members: Fikri Tahta, Mehmet Bekirogullari, Ismail (Forticer), Kemal Akar and Ali Kocaman; regional representatives: Ali Kaya, Yusuf Urekli, Sefer Guvenc, Saim Akbulut, Recep Loc, Tayyar Elmas, Rafet Demirtel, Suleyman Turan, Celal Alcinkaya and Hasan Kahraman.

VOTCP PREDICTS MORE PRESSURES FROM U.S. ENVOY

TA260735 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] A NATO expert has been assigned as the new U.S. ambassador to Ankara. The Reagan administration appointed Robert Strausz-Hupe, who is 78, to this post, replacing Ambassador James Spain who resigned from his office. The new U.S. ambassador to Ankara is known more as a NATO expert than a career diplomat. The appointment by the Reagan administration of a person who has been the permanent U.S. representative at NATO headquarters for long years to be the new U.S. ambassador to Ankara is seen by diplomatic circles as an act undertaken within the framework of a new U.S. approach to Turkey.

It will be recalled that during a visit to Ankara last week in order to participate in a symposium, Robert Komer, a CIA agent and a former U.S. ambassador to Ankara, revealed the framework of this new approach as follows: A Washington-Ankara axis must be established; Turkey must contribute to U.S. efforts in the defense of the Gulf, which boils down to armed interventions in the internal affairs of the Gulf countries; Turkey must support the United States and not the European countries in NATO in the eventuality of disagreements between them; Turkish-Soviet relations must be driven out of their framework of goodneighborliness and cooperation; Turkish officials must openly and officially endorse the view to the effect that the Soviet Union supports violence and terror in Turkey, that is to say the current administration must make anti-Sovietism the foundation stone of its foreign policy.

The new U.S. ambassador appointed by the Reagan administration to Ankara will try to force all this on the Turkish Government.

VOTCP WARNS OF INVOLVEMENT IN U.S. MIDEAST PLANS

TA200847 (Cladestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 20 Jun 81

[Station commentary: "Turkey Must Not Be Dragged Into Imperialist Adventures"]

[Text] Dear listeners, the Middle East is boiling. The bombing of the Iraqi nuclear plant by Israel--which is supported by the United States--has whipped up regional tension. Moreover, Israel is continuously bombing Lebanese villages and towns, causing the deaths of hundreds of persons. Iran also is in turmoil. In a bid to recover the positions they lost in that country, the U.S. imperialists are engaged in plots with the help of the local reactionaries. Thus, dear listeners, the dangers in the area are reaching a dimension that threatens Turkey as well. This, in fact, is one of the Washington administration's objectives. In other words, to involve our country more intensely in an adventure in the Middle East in line with their own interests and to transform it into a tool of regional tension that serves U.S. interests. All pressures and threats that have lately increased are directed to this end. Here some examples:

The magazine, NOVELLES ATLANTIQUES, known for its close connections with NATO headquarters in Brussels, reports based on Pentagon sources that preparations are underway for the stationing of the Rapid Deployment force [RDF]--established by Washington in a bid to attack the Persian Gulf--in northern Cyprus, which is under Turkish occupation. This project is a fresh step aimed at solving the Cyprus issue in accordance with NATO interests and at transforming the island into an unsinkable ship of imperialism. U.S. plans for this stationing of the RDF in Cyprus through the NATO channel represent a new blow to the independence, freedom and territorial integrity of Cyprus. These plans will also damage the brotherly coexistence of the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities on the island and will indirectly exacerbate the differences between Turkey and Greece and will drag these countries into the tense atmosphere reigning in the region.

The statement by U.S. war minister Weinberger following the visit Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken paid to him in Washington has increased our people's concern on this issue. As it will be recalled, Weinberger in his statement said that his country wanted Turkey to become the bastion of the West in fact and not only in words.

Dear listeners, statements by Komer, a CIA personnel expert and a prominent supporter of the U.S. policies of creating tension in the area, made during a brainwashing symposium organized by the Foreign Policy Institute in Ankara and the Georgetown University International and Strategic Studies Center--also involved with the CIA--have more clearly revealed these policies. Using the lie of the Soviet threat, concocted in order to camouflage the imperialist plans in the region, he said that important tasks awaited Turkey in line with these plans. What is meant by "important task" is to permit the stationing of the RDF on Turkish territory and to endorse the role of Washington's advance gendarme force in the area.

In a bid to force Turkey to bow to the increasing pressures and impositions of the Pentagon, the most reactionary profascist forces and the supporters of a U.S. mandate--the political defenders of imperialism and NATO in our country--are trying to deceive the people through the lies of anti-Sovietism and anticommunism. They are trying to trample on our national pride and to restore a U.S. and British mandate. To this end they are slandering the slogan of "independence at the cost of our lives" used during our national liberation war. Such calls are going head and head with fierce aggressions against the progressive democratic forces and with detentions and tortures.

As pointed out in the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] statement dated 15 June, through this campaign of agression, the most reactionary elements of the military administration, and the extreme rightwing circles which support them, are trying to justify the murders committed by the fascist NAP and to save Turkes and his followers from the gallows. Using the threat of communism as a shield for themselves, these circles are trying to drag our country into the adventures of U.S. imperialism and to create a climate that will facilitate the stationing of the RDF on our soil, thus serving the aims of the U.S. imperialists that are trying to drag the world into a nuclear war.

Those circles within the armed forces and the military junta that proclaim that they oppose terrorism and fascist organizations, that they will resist all kinds of foreign pressures and that they will save Turkey from being a country that begs for foreign aid are not in practice doing the necessary things to implement these statements. They are failing to adopt a decisive and firm stand in the face of the U.S. pressures and impositions and to declare that no base will be provided for the RDF on our soil. They are making contradictory statements on this subject. While Bayulken in Washington said that there was definitely no situation in which Turkey would provide a RDF base on its territory , Foreign Minister Turkmen, speaking in Paris, said during the OECD meeting that new agreements would be needed in order to do so, opening thus wider the door left open for such an eventuality.

Moreover, why are these circles approving the anticommunist agitations of the most reactionary profascist elements and making concessions to these mortal enemies of the people?

As pointed out in the statement issued by the TCP on 15 June, all concessions made to the reactionary circles and to their fascist followers--whatever the reason--weaken not only the working movement but also all the democratic forces as well as the Ataturkist circles within and outside the armed forces. Such concessions strengthen the position of the enemies of the people as well as the imperialist agents and serve to prepare the grounds for the adventure that they want Turkey to be involved in.

All patriotic forces within and outside the armed forces that oppose Turkey's involvement in imperialist adventures should stand firm against the anticommunist agitations directed against the progressive forces. It is impossible to satisfactorily resist the imperialist pressures and impositions and to defend the independence and the sovereignity of the country without opposing the anticommunist provocations by the imperialist collaborators and the most reactionary elements.

BAHA'I GROUP PROTESTS SECT'S PERSECUTION IN IRAN

NC260802 Paris AFP in English 0641 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Text] Montreal, 26 Jun (AFP)--Canada's 15,000 adherents of Baha'ism, a religion whose followers live mainly in Iran and Israel, have called for immediate United Nations intervention to stop a "holocaust" of Baha'is in Iran.

In a message sent UN Secretary-general Kurt Waldheim Thursday, the Canadian Baha'is' national spiritual assembly recalled that 17 Baha'is had been tortured then executed in Hamadan, west Iran, and Tehran since June 14.

The assembly urged that an independent UN Commission be sent to Iran to investigate the situation.

The Canadian Baha'i's appealed to Mr Waldheim to save the 500,000 Baha'i's in Iran from a massacre like that of the last century in which 20,000 perished.

They said that in 1955, when the ex-shah of Iran was in power, UN intervention ended a massive campaign to exterminate Iranian followers of the religion.

A spokesman for the Canadian group said Iranian authorities have levelled charges of Zionism against the Baha'is because leadership of the faith is currently centered in Israel, where the religion's prophet--Iranian Baha'ullah--fled last century [as received] to escape persecution.

Baha'ism has broadly liberal beliefs and claims independence from all other faiths.

SOVIET UNION, IRAQ CUT OIL PRICES FOR AUSTRIA

AU261208 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 26 Jun 81 p 16

[M.F. report]

[Excerpt] Vienna--The surplus on the world oil market is now forcing the exporting countries to reduce their contract prices. Effective 1 June, the Soviet Union has reduced delivery prices to the Austrian OEMV Corporation by $2 and Iraq has cut its price by 57 cents per barrel. Negotiations about price reductions are in progress with Libya and Algeria. These price reductions will cut the losses of the oil industry but will not change its "very grave situation," OEMV Director General Ludwig Bauer stated at a news conference called by Austrian state oil concern, at which the annual balance sheet was published.

PAPER CRITICIZES U.S. DEPUTY SECRETARY OF STATE

[GPE commentary: "Honestly Bad"]

[Text] The reputation of being inexperienced but as honest as the day is long precedes U.S. Deputy Secretary of State William P. Clark. He would rather keep silent, it is said, than let a lie pass his lips. When he took the floor in the hallowed halls of Vienna's Academy of Sciences and brought down lightning and thunder upon the Soviets, he also remained true to this reputation in every respect. And indeed, his remarks about Moscow's interventionism, the dangers for Poland and his ideas about communism, including its ideological bankruptcy, were refreshingly honest. But to say such things in neutral Austria and thus to make this country a platform of confrontation between the two superpowers instead of taking advantage of its function as a meeting place reveals a good measure of lack of political instinct. If, however, the place and time should have been selected deliberately, it is important to tell our friends calmly and very clearly: "Please don't do it again."

GOVERNMENT ASKS U.S. TO ADMIT MORE POLES

[Niag report from Vienna: "Lanc Asks United States: Admit More Poles"]

[Text] Interior Minister Lanc on Wednesday asked the United States to "quickly increase" the admission quota for Poles who have fled to Austria. In talks with U.S. Deputy Secretary of State William Clark in Vienna, Lanc pointed to the situation of caring for some 100 new arrivals daily, "which can only be done with difficulty." The minister, who termed his request an "urgent concern of Austria," thanked Clark for the already effected increase in the quotas by the United States.

IRANIAN AMBASSADOR REPLACED BY CHARGE D'AFFAIRES

[Text] The change in Iran has also affected Vienna's Iranian Embassy. Ambassador Mohammad Abed-Navandi, who was a student in Austria for many years, has lost his post and was replaced by Charge d'Affaires (Mohammad Klaraschi). Abed-Navandi, a loyal follower of Bani-Sadr, had planned to resign in protest against the situation in Iran even before this personnel decision in Tehran.

BRANDT PREVIEWS UPCOMING VISIT TO SOVIET UNION

LD281056 Hamburg DPA in German 0814 GMT 28 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 28 Jun (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt once again stressed that he is not going to the Soviet Union as a negotiator. Brandt said in a Deutschlandfunk interview that he is making the trip to receive and impart information.

Brandt's 4-day visit begins on Monday. He will be accompanied by Deputy SPD Chairman, Hans-Juergen Wischnewski. Brandt will meet with Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev on Tuesday.

The SPD chief went on to state that despite recent Soviet criticism of the Federal Republic in connection with the debate on missiles and the NATO twin decision, he does not expect a tense atmosphere.

Brandt and Wischnewski also will meet with other high-ranking Soviet politicians. The talks will center mainly on questions of arms limitation, the beginning of U.S.-Soviet negotiations to limit medium-range missiles in Europe, regional conflicts in the world and North-South problems.

Brandt stressed in the interview that he will point out to Moscow that the Federal Republic has a "vital interest" in early negotiations on medium-range missiles and also in, if at all possible, the creation of preconditions "so that there will not be any siting of the new NATO weapons in the Federal Republic and elsewhere in Europe." This is the aim of the negotiations. The SPD chairman regretted that all this has been a little protracted. It will be interesting to find out how the Soviet side might envisage entering into a real phase of negotiations.

Brandt went on to say that he very much hopes to obtain some indication of the real chances for negotiations as far as the Soviet side is concerned. He will say that he is convinced that the United States wants to negotiate. At any rate, the United States has pledged itself to this. There have been clear agreements in the Atlantic alliance even on how to prepare for negotiations. Brandt pointed out that U.S. Secretary of State Haig and his Soviet counterpart intend to discuss medium-range missiles in September and, it is to be hoped, will reach an understanding on when and where negotiations will begin. Brandt expressly regretted the fact that new U.S. disarmament representative Rostow has not held out any prospects for negotiations on intercontinental weapons until next spring.

The SPD chairman doesn't see any new and dangerous wave of opinion against the Americans in the Federal Republic. He said he doubted that the critical dispute with American concepts is the main motive for what is described as the peace movement. "The main motive is an increasing concern, even an increasing fear," felt by many people that the business of the arms race might not turn out well. This basic feeling is correct.

BREZHNEV TO VISIT FRG IN NOVEMBER, DECEMBER

LD261214 Hamburg DPA in German 1128 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 26 Jun (DPA)--Chancellor Schmidt told the SPD Bundestag Group today that Soviet head of state and party Leonid Brezhnev will come to Bonn in November or December.

According to a spokesman of the group, the time was agreed on by the chancellor and Soviet Ambassador in Bonn Semenov during their talks Wednesday evening.

LAMBSDORFF ON EUROPEAN STEEL INDUSTRY PROBLEMS

DW260951 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 25 Jun 81

[Excerpts from reporter Fides Krause-Brewer interview with Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The German steel industry is not very happy about the compromise [of the European Community]. It fears going bankrupt before these agreements are implemented, if others will adhere to it at all. Do you share these fears?

[Answer] We would have liked to have a more stringent, a more strict decision, such as shorter deadlines for the end of subsidies; we would have preferred a total ban on subsidies. But to achieve this, you need the agreement of the 10 governments in the Council of Ministers. Fortunately, "the" German steel industry will not go broke. The German steel industry consists of various firms.

[Question] What does the compromise mean for steel industry jobs?

[Answer] We have superfluous capacities, too much steel is being offered in Europe. A reduction of capacities, particularly old and very old capacities with unfavorable production and location conditions, cannot be avoided in the FRG.

Months ago the Federal Government said it was prepared to see to it that new jobs would be created at such threatened locations.

First of all, one must wait for better and higher steel prices. Once that has been achieved--and we are quite optimistic that the decisions have helped in this respect, this optimism is also shared by the industry--we will have taken a most significant step toward the solution of our problems. This will not solve them but we are on our way to solving them.

LEADERS COMMENT ON U.S. REACTION TO PCF MINISTERS

Cheysson TV Statement

NC261458 Paris AFP in English 1422 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 26 Jun (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson hit back today at the United States reaction to the naming of four Communist ministers in Paris.

Speaking on television here, Mr Cheysson described U.S. comments as "unacceptable and, at the least, surprising." He added that, while he believed the statements were "mainly for domestic consumption," they had given the Soviets a golden opportunity to put themselves forward as "the sole defenders of non-interference." "I would not be surprised if someone in Moscow writes a thank you note to Washington for this opportunity," the minister said.

(The Soviet agency TASS was quick to sieze a chance to drive a wedge between Washington and Paris today, accusing the U.S. of "arrogant interference and gross blackmail").

Mr Cheysson also told French viewers that the official State Department reaction contradicted comments made to him by American leaders during a Washington trip earlier this month.

The State Department said on Wednesday: "While we fully recognize and respect the right of the Government of France to determine its own composition, it is a fact that the tone and content of our relationship as allies will be affected by the inclusion of Communists in that government."

Yesterday, Mr Cheysson described the comment as a "miscalculation."

In the television interview today, the diplomat reiterated that "French foreign policy is founded first and foremost on the Atlantic alliance." Pledging France's total solidarity, he described the alliance as the "common defence against totalitarianism of those who believe in certain human values." He backed up the commitment with renewed condemnation of the Soviet involvement in Afghanistan, the Vietnamese presence in Cambodia and the Russians' current efforts to shatter the nuclear balance in Europe."

Returning to his view that the State Department words were largely for home consumption, Mr Cheysson charged that American leaders had difficulty in grasping the political realities of countries such as Italy or France.

The minister refused to be drawn on what aspect of French-U.S. relations could suffer from the decision to include the Communists in the cabinet, but announced that President Ronald Reagan hoped to meet Mr Mitterrand as soon as possible.

Mitterrand Remarks

NC261729 Paris AFP in English 1723 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Saint Brisson, France, 26 Jun (AFP)--French President Francois Mitterrand today brushed aside adverse U.S. reaction to the nomination of four Communist cabinet members by saying: "The Americans' reaction is their business. The decision is mine." "I did not bother asking myself whether my decision corresponded to the wishes or demands of such or such a state, and I will not bother asking it," he added.

Mr Mitterrand said Washington might fear "a certain form of contagion" in the appointment of Communists that could spread to other European countries. "I can well understand them, but I would like them to understand me as well as I understand them," he said.

The Socialist president, who earlier visited Dun-Les-Places near this town in central France to commemorate the 1944 execution of 27 French hostages by Nazi troops, stressed that France was "a good ally" of the United States.

"We have common interests which are not at the mercy of currenct events. The Americans are a long way from us and they do not understand our changes," he said.

"People have written that Reagan is cross, so what? Reagan sneezes, so what? I'm not going to jump to attention," the president said.

On his reasons for admitting Communists into the government, President Mitterrand said today: "I have defined a policy and I include with me all those who accept it and go as far as to vote for me, or for members of parliament who represent me. Why should I hold them off?"

"That the Communist Party should have goals which are not mine is obvious, but the Communist ministers are not there to put their party's policy into practice," he said, while adding that his government now had all the means necessary to implement his policy.

Asked whether he might stopover in Washington on his way back from the economic summit of industrialized countries to be held in Ottawa on July 20 and 21, Mr Mitterrand said this was out of the question.

MARCHAIS BLAMES SOCIALISTS FOR RUINING LEFT UNION

NC270842 Paris AFP in English 0826 GMT 27 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 27 Jun (AFP)--Within three days of Communists joining the Socialist administration in France, party leader Georges Marchais has lashed out at his new partners, blaming them for ruining the Union of the Left which linked the two parties to 1977.

The election of Francois Mitterrand, the first Socialist president for more than 23 years, was "a wish for change, to get rid of (former President Valery) Giscard d'Estaing at any price, (which) had relegated the question of the manner of the change to second place," Mr Marchais said at a Central Committee meeting last night assessing the route of the Communist Party in the recent French elections.

After losing nearly a quarter of its traditional votes in the first round of the presidential election when Mr Marchais picked up little more than 15 per cent of the vote, the Communists lost half their seats in the National Assembly in last Sunday's legislative elections, including all members of the Central Committee except Mr Marchais.

The union under which the two left wing parties fought the 1974 presidency on a joint programme crumbled in 1977 before the 1978 legislative elections, which returned the right to the National Assembly.

"The form of the union we worked out was full of faults," Mr Marchais admitted. "This programme nurtured illusions in the Socialist Party allowing it to believe it had changed everything to wipe out the difference between our two parties," Mr Marchais said.

The Communist leader also blamed his party's setback on the "presidential phenomenon." The system of election reduced the contest to a duel between the outgoing president and the Socialist candidate, who as leader in previous elections appeared as the only candidate able to beat the right, Mr Marchais said.

"It was in these circumstances that the Communist electors voted for Mr Mitterrand in the first round," Mr Marchais, who ran fourth in that contest, said.

Mr Marchais, who put his signature to a six-point deal with the Socialists which allowed Communists to join the government for the first time in 34 years, stressed the four Communist ministers would "work within government with unfailing solidarity to achieve the changes wanted by the country."

TEXT OF 23 JUNE SOCIALIST-COMMUNIST STATEMENT

PM261152 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Jun 81 p 11

[Text] The text of the joint PS-PCF statement issued on 23 June:

When they met as agreed following the parliamentary election, the PS and PCF representatives welcomed the choice which the French people had just made, confirming on 21 June their 10 May vote by giving the presidential majority a broad majority in the National Assembly.

The right conditions have, therefore, been created for implementing the change which the country expects.

With a view to establishing a common government line, the two parties devoted most of their discussion to the points which remained unsolved at their previous meeting.

Being aware of the duties which the situation imposes on them, the two parties expressed their determination to promote the new policy which the French people chose by electing Francois Mitterrand to the presidency of the republic. They will do this in the National Assembly in the framework of the majority which has just been formed; they will do it in the local and regional councils, in the enterprises, respecting the individual functions of the institutions and the parties. To this end, while reaffirming their attachment to the particular personality and fundamental positions of each of their parties, they will take as their basis in all spheres the choices made by the country and the areas of agreement which they have verified in their discussions.

The policy of change which has already been started by the initial government measures will be continued. Promises will be kept. This change will be carried out, as it began, by democratic means on the basis of the will expressed by universal suffrage.

In particular, this change will comprise new measures for social justice and for increasing the resources of the poorest people, which will be taken in the next few months. It will be continued in stages according to a rate of change which will take account of the crisis situation, of the fact that the French economy is open to the outside world, and of the vital economic and financial balances.

In the same spirit, the two parties think that, following the negotiations now going on between the trade union organizations and the employers, legislation on reducing the working week should be drafted as quickly as possible. Then, once the legal framework has been established, the government should instigate new negotiations to specify the methods of implementing it and the timetable for implementing it branch by branch and if necessary by individual enterprises.

The two parties consider that the expansion of the public sector will be a guarantee of efficiency and of the democratization of planning. They agree that the expansion of the public sector and the methods of organizing it should be carried out in keeping with the proposals ratified on 10 May.

In view of the country's situation, the two parties think it necessary to draw up a 2-year recovery plan which will create the right conditions for new economic growth and an effective struggle against unemployment. They will support a policy of reducing social inequalities. They will take action to guarantee and to extend freedoms, to increase workers' rights and to democratize national life.

The two parties will support France's international action--respecting its alliances--for peace and gradual disarmament with a view to the simultaneous dissolution of the military blocs, ensuring the balance of forces in Europe and in the world and the security of each country. In this spirit, they advocate prompt international negotiation on the limitation and reduction of armaments in Europe. This negotiation should relate in particular to the presence of Soviet SS-20 missiles and to the decision to deploy U.S. Pershing II missiles.

The two parties will take action in favor of respect for the right of peoples to determine their own future, for the sovereignty of states, noninterference in their internal affairs and each country's right to security. They give universal value to these principles.

In keeping with these principles, they assert the Afghan people's right to choose their regime and government and advocate the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan and an end to all foreign interference.

Taking note of the situation created by the Camp David agreements, they reaffirm the right to existence and security of Israel and all states in the region and the Palestinian people's right to a homeland.

The two parties will actively support France's participation in the EEC, its institutions and its common policies, respecting its freedom of action and its legitimate interests. They will support common policies at the social level for the defense of agriculture and endangered sectors and in breathing life into research and leading industries.

The two parties discussed the development of the situation in Poland and hope that that country and its people will successfully complete the process of economic, social and democratic renewal in which they are engaged.

They express, on both the economic and political levels, their solidarity with the Third World peoples who, as in El Salvador and Nicaragua, are fighting for their national emancipation, their development and their democratic and social liberation.

ECONOMY MINISTER SAYS NO RAMPANT NATIONALIZATION

NC280858 Paris AFP in English 0849 GMT 28 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 28 Jun (AFP)--France's new leftist government will not indulge in rampant nationalisation, and extension of public ownership will be a means not an end in its industrial policy, Economy and Finance Minister Jacques Delors pledged here.

Once an already announced programme of nationalisation had been carried out by the Socialist-dominated administration, the public sector would still not account for more than 16 percent of national output, he added. At the same time there would be no "plundering" of shareholders, who would receive compensation in accordance with share price movements, the strength of companies involved, depreciation of the currency and economic performance.

Mr Delors also called for company chiefs to show public spirit and wisdom, commenting that "it is not by political scaremongering that you will prevent Mr (Francois) Mitterrand from being president for seven years". He told the chiefs: "Everything is ready for an economic upturn. There will be no price explosion or introduction of unreasonable social measures in the autumn. Invest, work, buy machinery, help us in dealing with unemployment."

Speaking in the wake of unease on the French stock market and international currency exchanges over the inclusion of four Communists in the government last week, Mr Delors said "the financial rules" would not be changed," and people should not count on him to put the economy through a 180-degree turn.

He also said France alone could not deal with the problem of high U.S. interest rates, and the European Community had to speak with one voice at the Ottawa summit of leading Western industrialised nations at the end of July.

He warned that "if we continue on the same path we risk entering as mad a world as that which preceded the crisis of 1929," and of breeding "economic and social crises" in some European countries.

Mr Delors said he was thinking about a possible system to defend the franc abroad while reducing interest rates at home if the community did not act along these lines, because "it will be impossible to put up with such high interest rates for long".

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES MIDDLE EAST ISSUES

PM261517 London AL-HAWADITH in Arabic 26 Jun 81 pp 29-30

[Report on an interview given to 'Adnan Nasrawayn by French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson after Cheysson's meeting with the French Press Association in Paris; exact date not given]

[Excerpts] AL-HAWADITH: How do you in France view the role which Europe can play to achieve a just and comprehensive settlement in the Middle East?

Cheysson: We believe that, in their diplomatic moves in the Middle East region, the European states must declare very clearly their adherence to certain basic principles which must be observed if a just and lasting settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict is to be found. I would like to emphasize that the present French administration--by this I mean the president, the government and senior officials--is more explicit on this matter. It insists on the need to assert and respect the main principles for a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. In our view, these principles call for security for all the states in the area, including Israel, for international guarantees to these states within their borders which are officially recognized by the international community and for giving the Palestinian people, like all the peoples of the world, the full right to self-determination and to build their own future. Let us now forget the official terminologies and consider the kind of life that is led by a people whose children are born and brought up and have no future other than to live in camps. The Palestinian people have a right to their homeland like all other peoples. We in France will continue to adhere to these principles in our foreign policy with regard to the Middle East region.

AL-HAWADITH: Some personalities in the ruling Socialist Party in France have close friendly relations with some Israeli personalities. How might these relations influence France's role in contributing to the achievement of a settlement in the region?

Cheysson: Naturally, there are men among the ruling majority in France who have personal relations with officials in the region, particularly with Israelis. This makes them especially sensitive toward Israel. I believe that this can be useful in promoting a fruitful dialogue for peace in the Middle East, as some Arab states have pointed out to the present French officials.

I would like to go further and say that I, as a Frenchman, am proud that France, among others, was behind the establishment of the state of Israel. The wrongs committed against the Jewish people during World War II gave them the right to establish a home for themselves. This state is regarded as sacred as far as we are concerned. However, at the same time and in the same way, we are determined to work for respect for the Palestinian people's rights and aspirations for self-determination and for Israel's withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories.

AL-HAWADITH: There was much talk in French circles last year about the possibility of Yasir 'Arafat visiting France. Do you support such a visit taking place soon?

Cheysson: As far as the Palestinian people are concerned, they alone have the right to choose their representatives. Eventually, when their basic rights are recognized, the Palestinian people will choose their representatives. This is their business alone and we should not at all choose for them. Meanwhile, within the framework of the EEC, we have recognized that the PLO is representative of the Palestinian people, but the European Community has never said that the PLO is the basic representative of the Palestinian people unless an important change is made in several basic matters. The PLO has an office in Paris. This is natural because the PLO is representative of the Palestinian people, but it is out of the question for the PLO representative to Paris to be received as a representative of a people and a state. I believe I have been perfectly clear in my answer and there is no ambiguity on this subject. This means that those who are saying that they want to destroy Israel cannot possibly be partners in the peace process unless they express their stand in a manner that is different to what it is now. Is this clear?

In the course of his discussion on the current international situation and the French attitude toward it, the French foreign minister broached the situation in Lebanon and the role which France could play to resolve the Lebanese crisis. He said:

Lebanon is suffering from tragic situations which have been imposed on it from outside and which have led to a civil war. No one can show indifference to what Lebanon is now experiencing, especially Christians, the French and the friends of the Arab world.

The French foreign minister revealed that certain ideas have been put forward to supply the Lebanese Army with French arms and military equipment. He said: Talks are now underway with the Lebanese authorities on supplying the Lebanese Army with spare parts and, if necessary, with French military equipment. We are prepared to support Lebanon any time we can. We are well aware--and the Lebanese president, prime minister and senior officials reiterate this quite often--that peace can be restored to Lebanon if a settlement to the Middle East conflict is found. Therefore, every possible contribution we can make to calming the situation and finding a settlement to the Middle East crisis will consequently be a service to Lebanon.

Attention is given to the fact that the French Socialist government's foreign minister strongly condemned the measures which the occupation authorities are taking to Judaize the city of Jerusalem. Defining his country's attitude on this subect, the chief of French diplomacy said:

The French Government adopted its attitude on Jerusalem a long time ago. We have said that this attitude still stands. The EEC countries and the international community also adopted resolutions on this matter. International law does not permit any unilateral changes in the status of Jerusalem. So far, all the decisions that have been made regarding Jerusalem are Israeli decisions which the international community cannot possibly accept. This is our attitude in France. Jerusalem embraces holy places. It does not concern only the Israelis, Jordanians or Palestinians because the holy places are an international matter which concerns the entire international community and three divine religions. Therefore, democratic France will not accept unilateral decisions concerning this holy city.

It was natural in the present circumstances for the French foreign minister to talk about the Israeli aggression against Iraq and the French reaction to it. He repeated his government's condemnation of this aggression and explained the reasons which make France strongly oppose it. Cheysson said:

Within a few hours following the Israeli military operation, the premier clearly expressed France's attitude by denouncing this operation, which is contrary to the principles and norms of international law, is considered as directed against the French people and affects us in a direct manner because it proves that the Israeli officials and Prime Minister Menahem Begin have no confidence in the men who have come to power in France, some of whom have close friendly relations with Israel. This matter has been injurious to us.

[Cheysson] Israel is trying to justify its military operation against Iraq by saying that the nuclear reactor could threaten Israel's security. However, what I would like to ask is: If I suspect that my neighbor has evil intentions toward me, does this justify my killing him before verifying my suspicions of him?

He concluded: International law exists to prevent such military actions in dealings among states.

ARGENTINA REPORTED TO PURCHASE MORE WAR EQUIPMENT

PY282248 Paris AFP in Spanish 1744 GMT 22 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 22 Jun (AFP)--With the delivery today to the Argentine Navy of a third 1,170-ton patrol boat armed with Exocet sea-to-sea missiles at the Lorient arsenal, one of the most important contracts for the sale of weapons entered into by France and Argentina 3 years ago has now concluded. However, this agreement is not the only one that exists between the governments of Buenos Aires and Paris.

The joint French industrial group SMS, which includes Renault Vehicles Industriels and Creusot-Loire, expects to build, in bilateral cooperation with Argentina's private industry, 1,000 light wheeled armored vehicles known in France as the Vehicule de Levant Blinde (VAB).

The VAB was adopted by the French Army in 1974 and it currently has 650 of these vehicles. This vehicle, which can have either four or six wheels, comes in several models: for troop transport, as an antitank vehicle equipped with Milan or HOT [last word in English] and as a command or medical vehicle.

Sources close to the French group have indicated that in January 1979 the Argentine Government concluded with the trade firm created by Renault and Creusot-Loire a contract for the purchase of two VAB prototypes in order to modify it for Argentine needs. The object of this operation involves the making it an Argentine vehicle in order to build it in series so Argentina can modernize its armed forces.

These prototypes already exist, as demonstrated by the illustrated documentation published by its Argentine manufacturer, ASTARSA [Argentine River Plate Shipyard's Incorporated], which is linked to Creusot-Loire, with the intention of interesting future Latin American clients. The contacts, which were authorized 2 years ago by the government of Valery Giscard d'Estaign, are currently continuing.

Representatives of the French industrial group are now waiting for authorization from the new Socialist government to begin negotiations that will lead to the signing of a definite agreement.

The same sources have also indicated that the Argentine Government has the intention of acquiring a joint manufacturing license so ASTARSA can manufacture between 800 and 1,000 vehicles.

During the past 20 years Argentina has resorted to French industry for equipping its armed forces. But it has also, with the same intention turned to the United States, Israel, Great Britain and the FRG, where it obtained a license to build the TAM combat tank, of which the Argentine Army already has 100.

The purchases in France were not limited to the three vessels. They also included light tanks, combat planes, helicopters and anti-ship missiles.

Argentina also currently has light AMX 13 tanks built under license in Argentina, and according to the International Institute of Strategic Studies of London, it also has 15 Mirage 5's, 22 Mirage III's, 9 Alouette III helicopters, 3 Puma helicopters with 15-seat capacity and 6 Lama helicopters for mountain use.

The same source indicates that in 1978 Argentina ordered 12 more Pumas and 12 Lamas. In 1979 it ordered 14 Super-Entendards of the type used by the French Navy on its aircraft carriers "Foch" and "Clemenceau." They will be delivered in 1981.

SPADOLINI WINS PARTIES' APPROVAL TO FORM GOVERNMENT

AU271415 Rome ANSA in English 0805 GMT 27 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 27 Jun (ANSA)--This evening or tomorrow morning the latest, Premier designate Giovanni Spadolini will submit his cabinet list to head of state Sandro Pertini. It will be the first cabinet in 35 years to be led by anyone other than a Christian Democrat. (Spadolini is secretary of the Republican Party).

He got the green light yesterday during a lengthy meeting with the secretaries of the parties that will make up his five-way coalition government; the Christian Democrats (DC), the Socialists (PSI), the Social Democrats (PSDI), the Republicans (PRI) and the Liberals (PLI).

The meeting, held in the Senate building (Spadolini is a senator), lasted around 5 hours. Taking part were Flaminio Piccoli for the DC, Bettino Craxi for the PSI, Pietro Longo for the PSDI, Valerio Zanone for the PLI, and Spadolini for the PRI. It was much easier for them to find agreement on planks in a government platform than on distribution of cabinet posts among the five coalition partners.

According to unconfirmed leaks the question of cabinet posts was made even more difficult by the stance taken by the Christian Democrats who insisted on one more ministry than they had in the preceeding government led by Arnaldo Forlani. This latter was a four-way administration similar to the one about to be formed but minus the right-of-center Liberals.

New Cabinet List

AU281932 Rome ANSA in English 1835 GMT 28 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 28 Jun (ANSA)--Italy has its 41st government since the end of the Second World War. Giovanni Spadolini, the country's first non-Christian Democratic premier in 35 years, presented the following list of cabinet members to head of state Sandro Pertini Sunday morning:

(.. Key to party membership of the ministers in the five-way government coalition: Christian Democrat (DC), Socialist (PSI), Social Democrat (PSDI), Republican (PRI) and Liberal (PLI)...).

Premier--Giovanni Spadolini (PRI); foreign minister--Emilio Colombo (DC); interior minister--Virginio Rognoni (DC); justice minister--Clelio Darida (DC); budget minister--Giorgio la Malfa (PRI); finance minister--Rino Formica (PSI); treasury minister--Beniamino Andreatta (DC); defense minister--Lelio Lagorio (PSI); education minister--Guido Bodrato (DC); public works minister--Franco Nicolazzi (PSDI); agriculture minister--Giuseppe Bartolomei (DC); transport minister--Vincenzo Balzamo (PSI); postal minister--Remo Gaspari (DC); industry minister--Giovanni Marcora (DC); labor minister--Michele di Giesi (PSDI); foreign trade minister--Nicola Capria (PSI); merchant marine minister--Calogero Mannino (DC); state-participation minister--Gianni de Michelis (PSI); health minister--Renato Altissimo (PLI); tourism and entertainment minister--Nicola Signorello (DC); cultural and environment minister--Vincenzo Scotti (DC); minister without portfolio for coordination with community policies--Gustavo Abis (DC); minister without portfolio for civil service reform--Dante Schietrome (PSDI); minister without portfolio to coordinate scientific and technological research--Giancarlo Tesini (DC); minister without portfolio for special intervention in the south--Claudio Signorile (PSI); minister without portfolio for regional affairs--Aldo Aniasi (PSI); minister without portfolio for relations with Parliament--Luciano Radi (DC); high commissioner for civilian protection (with rank of minister without portfolio)--Giuseppe Zamberletti (DC).

The new cabinet has 27 ministers in addition to the prime minister. Of these 15 are Christian Democrats, 7 are Socialists, 3 are Social Democrats, 1 is a Republican (like the premier) and 1 is a Liberal.

The make-up of the new government is not too much different from its predecessor led by Christian Democrat Arnaldo Forlani. The Forlani coalition was a four-way affair, however, which included all of the partners in the new cabinet less the right-of-center Liberals. The Spadolini cabinet also has one additional minister.

In the previous government the DC had the premiership plus 13 ministers. In the new one it has 15 ministers but has lost the premiership. The PSI and the PSDI kept the same number of ministers in both governments; seven Socialist ministers and three Social Democrat ministers. The PRI in the last government had 3 ministers. It now has the premiership plus one minister. The PLI, which was not a part of the previous administration, now has one minister.

Those ministerial posts which are highly political in nature stayed the same: Colombo as foreign minister, Rognoni as minister of the interior, and Lagorio at the head of defense. Darida, who in the Forlani government replaced Adolfo Sarti when he resigned as justice minister, was kept on in that post.

The party line-up stayed the same with regard to distribution of the economic ministries. The Socialists kept the finance minister post with Formica (who in the previous government was transport minister), the foreign trade slot with Capria (who was minister for interventions in the south), and the state participation ministry which remains headed by De Michelis. The Christian Democrats kept Andreatta as minister of the treasury and held on to the industry ministry which saw Marcora replacing Filippo Maria Pandolfi at its head. The Republicans will continue to run the budget ministry with La Malfa. The Social Democrats did not have any economic ministries in the previous government, nor do they in this one.

After submitting his cabinet list to Pertini today, Spadolini told newsmen that the coalition parties had proposed a choice of candidates for the various cabinet posts and that he, in close contact with the head of state, submitted various alternative suggestions. Spadolini said that he and Pertini together worked out the assignment of the various ministerial posts.

The new government will go before the Parliament during the week beginning Sunday, July 5. In accordance with the rotation used in such cases, the government will appear first in the Senate this time around.

Immediately after reading his government policy statement at Palazzo Madama, Spadolini will have a copy sent to House Speaker Nilde Jotti. She, in turn will read it to the assembly at Montecitoro. This new procedure will eliminate the need for the premier to read the statement first in one chamber and then again in the other. The Senate debate will begin right after Spadolini reads his platform. Upon completion of the confidence debate in the upper chamber, it will begin in the lower house. It is believed that the government will receive a vote of confidence from the two branches of Parliament by Saturday, July 11.

The government was sworn in Sunday afternoon. Monday, Spadolini leaves Rome for Luxembourg to take part in the two-day summit of European Economic Community heads of state and government. As a result, the first Cabinet meeting will probably not be held before Thursday. On that occasion, the list of undersecretaries will be put together.

POPE'S ASSAILANT SEEN AT LIBYAN TERRORIST CAMP

NC261330 Paris AFP in English 1317 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 26 Jun (AFP)--Mehmet Ali Agca, accused of shooting Pope John Paul II on May 13, was seen at a terrorist training camp in Libya shortly before the attack, judicial sources said here today. The sources quoted an unidentified "reliable" witness interviewed by police.

Mehmet Ali Agca, 23, who faces life imprisonment if convicted of attempted murder of a head of state, is to go on trial here July 20. He is alleged to have fired three shots at the pope as he was blessing the crowd in St Peter's Square, at the Vatican. Also wounded in the attack against the 61-year-old pontiff were two woman tourists, one of whom, an American, was critically injured.

The Turkish-born right-wing terrorist, who escaped from a Turkish jail, is to be defended by Roman Attorney Pietro d'Ovidio.

RED BRIGADES PASS 'DEATH SENTENCE' ON VICTIM

AU261925 Rome ANSA in English 1915 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 26 Jun (ANSA)--Italy's Red Brigades terrorist organization have "sentenced to death" a petrochemical plant manager they kidnapped near Venice on May 20, a brigades document turned up today in Padua disclosed. The hostage, one of four who have fallen into the hands of the nation's most feared terrorist organization since the end of April, is Giuseppe Talercio, a manager for the Italian petrochemical giant, Montedison, at the Porto Marghera plant near Venice.

The spring terrorist offensive got underway on April 27 when Ciro Cirillo, a Christian Democrat member of the Campania regional assembly, was seized in Naples in an ambush in which his driver was killed. After the kidnapping of Talerico, Renzo Sandrucci, an Alfa Romeo plant manager, was taken by brigade terrorists near Milan on June 3.

One week later, on June 10, terrorists kidnapped Roberto Peci, the younger brother of the first member of the Red Brigades heirachy to turn state's evidence, Patrizio Peci.

A set of letters written by captive Cirillo, reported yesterday, mapped out the conditions laid down by the brigades for his release. The Christian Democrat assemblyman insisted that authorities should accept these requests, which included publication of the acts of the "people's trial" against him in the weeklies PANORAMA and EUROPEO. Thus far, these documents have appeared only in the pages of the extreme left publication, QUOTIDIANO DEI LAVORATORI, and broadcast over the radical party radio.

In January this year, the Red Brigades "condemned to death" Judge Giovanni d'Urso but the magistrate, then in the hands of the terrorist organization, was "pardoned" by brigade leaders in prison and subsequently released. One of the conditions attached to D'Urso's release was the publication of the acts of his "people's trial."

PAJETTA: PCF POLICY SHIFT WILL AID TIES WITH PCI

PM261250 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Jun 81 p 13

[Marc Semo interview with PCI Politburo member Gian Carlo Pajetta in Rome: The PCF's Stances Facilitate Relations With the PCI"; date not given]

[Text] Rome--"The inclusion of four Communist ministers in Pierre Mauroy's government is an important act whose consequences reach far beyond France's borders," Mr Gian Carlo Pajetta, PCI Politburo and Directorate member in charge of international relations, told LE MONDE.

Commenting on the joint PCF-PS statement, he said that, led by its own voters, the PCF has been forced to return to a unitary policy and to foreign policy stances which bring it nearer to PCI stances again, notably on Europe, detente and Afghanistan. "We tried to maintain good relations between the two parties," Mr Pajetta asserted, "even when considerable differences of opinion emerged. We now welcome these stances which will facilitate our relations."

Between July 1976 and January 1979, the biggest communist party in Western Europe (30.4 percent of the votes in the 1979 parliamentary elections), in the framework of a parliamentary majority of national union, supported two governments led by Mr Anoriotti in which it was not represented. It is particularly conscious of the event [inclusion of Communist ministers in French Government] since for the past year it has been pursuing a stratgey of a "democratic alternative to the Christian Democratic government." Faced with the PSI, which now has around 14 percent of the votes after the results of the local by-elections on 21 and 22 June, the PCI is placing particular emphasis on the unitary nature of the Socialist victory in France and of the policy being pursued by Mr Mitterrand.

The four portfolios given to the French Communists "are a natural consequence of the political agreement for the election and of the program decided on 23 June," Mr Pajetta maintained, adding: "The election results have shown that the French people voted overwhelmingly for the Socialists, who, it was said--and they did not deny it--would form a government alliance with the Communists." The PCI leadership member was also anxious to stress: "All the Socialists elected, aside from those elected in the first round, were elected partly by Communist votes. No Socialist deputy can disregard the fact that he represents the whole left; no Communist elected in the second round can forget it either."

Mr Pajetta also stated that "the document jointly signed by the PS and PCF is essential, just as essential as the distribution of ministries." Without denying that Mr Marchais' party has rallied to the Socialists' ideas, especially in foreign policy, he stressed: "These positions were those held by Mr Mitterrand, who, to assert this unitary policy, had to fight a battle in his own party before the election campaign, notably against Michel Rocard." He added: "I am pleased that, in order to demonstrate the possibility and necessity of the presence of Communist ministers, Georges Marchais cited the words used by Mr Mitterrand during the campaign when he said that the Communists are Frenchmen in every respect and should not count only in work and in battles."

[Question] Will the French Communists' entry into government have effects on the Italian political situation?

"There will not be an automatic effect," Mr Pajetta said: "but it will be more difficult to reject joint local, regional or other government experiments on ideological grounds or out of fear of NATO's gunboats or missiles if in a country like France, which has some importance in Western Europe and the Atlantic alliance, this ideological a priori has been set aside. Equally important is the fact that a Western European country has shown that it did not have to ask for the Americans' agreement before forming its government."

Although somewhat overshadowed by commentaries on the local by-elections on 21 and 22 June, the news of the inclusion of Communist ministers in Mr Mauroy's cabinet is on the front pages of all the peninsula's dailies this 24 June. CORRIERE DELLA SERA even devotes its main headline to it. All the newspapers place particular emphasis on the PCF's about-face in foreign policy. LA REPUBBLICA (leftwing) carries the headline; "Marchais Has Capitulated on the Program"; IL FIORNALE (liberal rightwing) states: "The Communists abandon all their principles for four portfolios in Mr Mauroy's government."

LORD CHALFONT ARTICLE COMMENTS ON DEFENSE CUTS

PM261406 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 26 Jun 81 p 18

[Lord Chalfont article: "Nott and His Trident Are the Best Defense We Can Afford"--passages within slantlines denote boldface as published]

[Text] Politicians, it has been said, may generally speaking be relied on to make wise, statesmanlike and intelligent decisions--having first exhausted all other possibilities. The government's long-term defence review prompts the depressing speculation that Mr Nott, the secretary of state for defence, is still in the process of exhausting the other possibilities. It is, to say the very least, ironic that substantial cuts in Britain's armed services should now be proposed by an administration identified with robust and unequivocal attitudes to the proliferating military power of the Soviet Union.

Yet an objective examination of the government's emerging defence policy suggests that it is founded on a coldly rational, if somewhat idiosyncratic, assessment of the role of Britain in the world power structure of the 1980's and beyond. It is not necessary to agree with all of Mr Nott's assumptions, or with the conclusions which flow from them, to accept that they are the product of a recognisable intellectual process.

The central element in the defence policy is, as it has been continuously under various governments since the Sandys' white paper of 1957, the strategic nuclear weapon.

The proposed replacement of the Polaris force by a new submarine-launched missile system--the Trident--has provided the principal catalyst for the changes now proposed. The arguments against this decision are powerful and they derive from many considerations--political, military and economic. In effect, however, leaving aside the pacifist and unilaterist arguments, they rest on one central proposition, namely, that the cost of the Trident programme--6,000 million pounds over the next 15 years--can only be borne by economies in other areas of defence spending; and that these economies will inflict intolerable damage on Britain's conventional military forces, to the inevitable detriment of national security.

At first glance it might appear that some of the worst fears in this respect have been realised. Both the army and the Royal Navy are to be reduced in strength and some of their equipment programmes will be significantly affected. The government's case, however, is simply stated. In the first place, it is argued that the cost of Trident is /not/ the decisive factor; that, in fact, it represents only a relatively modest and reasonable proportion of future expenditure on military equipment.

The real consideration, it is claimed, is the massive and inexorable rise in the cost of /all/ advanced military equipment, which would make a radical reassessment of defence policy necessary even without the decision to acquire a new generation of nuclear weapons. In any case, as Mr Nott argues with formidable logic, the Soviet Union is more likely to be impressed, and therefore deterred from open aggression, by a credible and powerful nuclear striking force than by a new surface capital ship or an extra armoured division.

The flaw in this argument, as plausible as it may seem, is that, carried to its logical conclusion, it implies a return to the perilous concept of massive retaliation, with conventional forces serving merely as a "trip-wire" designed to trigger a nuclear response to military attack at any level. It seems to reject the classical and logically inescapable doctrine that, in order to deter an enemy effectively, armed forces must be demonstrably capable of waging war successfully /if deterrence fails./

To be fair, however, the government has not, so far at any rate, adopted the trip-wire posture. The combat-effectiveness of the British corps which makes up our contribution to the conventional defense of Western Europe is unlikely to be profoundly affected by the removal of a divisional headquarters; the plans for the air defence of the United Kingdom remain unchanged; and it would be difficult to sustain the proposition that the changes in the Royal Navy, as unwelcome and regrettable as they may be, will put the security of Britain or its allies immediately at risk.

The dangers lie in the more distant future. Once the country is irrevocably committed to the Trident concept, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to avoid following the path to its logical end. The costs now estimated are for the purchase of the first generation of the missile system--Trident I. The Americans are already developing Trident II--a much more advanced and expensive weapon. If the arguments for replacing Polaris with Trident have any validity, they will presumably apply in due course to the replacement of Trident I by Trident II and subsequently by any bigger and better American nuclear missile system which may emerge.

If at each replacement, further "adjustments" have to be made to the rest of the armed forces, the eventual outcome is not too difficult to discern. It must be said, however, that having made its crucial and questionable decision on the nuclear striking forces, the government has proceeded to a courageous and realistic attempt to face its long-term implications in the context of the appalling and accelerating cost of modern military technology.

There are signs, too, that Mr Nott means seriously to come to grips with one of the persistent anomalies in the higher direction of defence--the entrenched and often obdurate positions of the three armed services. The quixotic demise of Mr Keith Speed provided the opportunity for the long overdue reorganisation of the political structure of the Ministry of Defense, with ministers answering to the defence secretary for functional responsibilities across the embattled inter-service frontiers. Whatever else may be said about the government's defence policy, this is a process which /should/ be carried on to its logical conclusion.

The recurrent struggle among the army, the navy and the air force staffs for even shares of the defence budget is an archaic and incomprehensive barrier to the rational assessment of defence priorities. So is the system by which the post of chief of the defence staff passes automatically from one service to another in strict rotation, regardless of broader military considerations.

So far, the government's defence preview provides evidence that politicians /can/ make intelligent decisions; whether the policies which follow from those decisions will also turn out to be wise and statesmanlike, it is perhaps too early yet to say.

DAILY TELEGRAPH Editorial

PM261408 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 26 Jun 81 p 18

[Editorial: "The Will To Resist"]

[Text] Britain's most defence-conscious government for two decades, while rightly obsessed with the mortal and ever-growing danger from Soviet imperialism, has accepted that the effort needed to provide adequate defence against it is politically inpossible. This is the real message of the defence review, overshadowing the admirable efforts to make the most of what it is hoped will be available. Inter-service rivalries, and the varying attachments, loyalties and preferences of such residue of public opinion as is still concerned with such sentimental relics from the past, have further distracted attention from reality--indeed, often give the impression of a narrow squabble over prestige.

Given the stultifying and dangerous limits imposed by the means available, we agree with Lord Chalfont when he writes elsewhere on this page that the package is well thought out and about the best possible in the circumstances. At the same time, while aware of the problems of Britain's remaining a nuclear power, we do not fully share all his reservations regarding Trident.

But let us raise our eyes from the calculating machine and look at things in perspective--which is more essential in defence than in anything else. Defence against what? This government, to its credit, is continually trying to rouse us by reminding us of the predatory compulsions of the bankrupt Soviet tyranny and its ever-growing military superiority. We are told that Britain remains loyal to its three per cent, NATO increase, but that nevertheless reductions in the overall scope of our military effort are inevitable owing to the soaring costs of modern military technology. Yet the Russians meet these costs and go on expanding to boot. To say that a dictatorship can do this, but democracies cannot, is resignation to submission. In any case, President Reagan has shown it is not true--and is increasingly thanked by his timorous allies by being called a warmonger and accused of provoking the Russians.

Europe, despite recession, has the money. Many countries are now more prosperous than America. What it lacks is the will. Its wilting morale is now under massive assault from Russia on two fronts--intimidation by military threat and subversion by Russia's huge unilateral nuclear disarmament campaign. The "Red or dead" dilemma is bogus. The obvious way to remain alive, free and proud is to defeat intimidation and deter attack by preparing to defend oneself, having the will to do so and leaving the enemy in no doubt about both.

CARRINGTON EXPECTED TO MEET 'ARAFAT IN OCTOBER

PM261221 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 26 Jun 81 p 5

[John Bullock report]

[Excerpt] Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington is expected to meet Yasir 'Arafat, the Palestinian leader, some time in October during the British presidency of the European Community.

This meeting between a British minister and a man still called a "terrorist" by Israelis and their supporters, will mark the final emergence of the Palestine Liberation Organization as a political force and a "respectable body."

At the same time, old reservations reamin, so that in Whitehall it is stressed that Lord Carrington's meeting will be in his European capacity rather than in his purely British capacity.

The two will discuss the European initiative on the Middle East and ways in which the Palestinians can be brought into any settlement negotiations.

With attention focused on the Israeli elections and the dangers of a conflict between Israel and Syria in Lebanon, little attention has been paid to the Palestinians. But they remain a potent force and are one of the most politically active of all the parties to the Middle East crisis.

KIPRIANOU DISCUSSES PROMISED TURKISH PROPOSALS

NC281056 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0900 GMT 28 Jun 81

[Text] President Kiprianou has again declared that the Cypriot Government is determined not to endorse any Cyprus solution that would be tantamount to acceptance of the faits accomplis and the alienation of the basic rights and freedoms of the Cypriot people or the direct or indirect partitioning of Cyprus.

Referring to recent proposals from various quarters that after the elections in the occupied areas the Turkish side will submit proposals on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem, President Kiprianou stressed that the submission of such proposals alone is not enough. He added: These proposals must be constructive in order to secure a substantive dialogue. The president made this statement during a regional conference at Astromeritis at which problems of the area were studied.

In his address, Mr Kiprianou also referred to other basic questions of interest ot all the Cypriot people. In connection with the country's economic situation, the president said that the government is very carefully studying the method it will follow in order to deal with the existing problems. He also said that the government will not take measures that would be contrary to the fair distribution of burdens nor will it make sweeping decisions that would cause a crisis or unrest or would deprive the working people of their rights.

KIPRIANOU MEETS ARGENTINE ENVOY, SPEAKS ON TALKS

NC270722 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 27 Jun 81

[Text] Failure on the part of the Turkish side to present "specific and constructive" proposals on territory may lead to collapse of the talks and the blame must definitely lie with the Turkish side, President Kiprianou said yesterday. The president made the statement in his reply to an address from new ambassador of Argentina Mr Tulio Oscar Sugasti who presented his credentials at a formal ceremony at the Presidential Palace.

Ambassador Sugasti said his government wanted to consolidate and strengthen the links that, originating from a common desire for freedom, peace and justice, existed between the two countries. Argentina, he said, understands the difficult problem of the Cyprus Republic and would continue its efforts "so that the people of Cyprus can achieve peace and justice which are their right." In this connection, the ambassador said, the Government of Argentina felt satisfaction with regard to the progress of the intercommunal talks to that end.

In his reply, President Kiprianou said the talks started some time ago have not produced any result up to now and future developments would definitely depend on the outcome of these talks.

However, the president declared, talks cannot go on for the sake of talks. "There has to be some progress and this presupposes a radical change in the attitude of the Turkish side. There must be constructive and meaningful proposals on the part of the Turkish side, especially on the territorial aspect."

"There has been so far an absolute refusal (on the Turkish side) to submit such proposals. Without specific and constructive proposals it is difficult to see how the dialogue can be successful. On the contrary, it will possibly collapse, and, in such case, the entire blame will definitely lie with the Turkish side," Mr Kiprianou stated.

He emphasized at the same time that Cyprus is dedicated to the UN and believes that both the charter and the resolutions of the UN provide the answer to the Cyprus problem. "We hope there will be progress. But if, against all hope, there is no progress, we shall continue our efforts for a just and lasting solution to the Cyprus problem in conformity with the principles of justice and freedom."

Present at the accreditation ceremony were the minister of foreign affairs, Mr Rolandhis, the director general of the Foreign Ministry, Y. Pelayias, and the presidential under secretary, Mr P. Stavrou.

AKEL OFFICIAL STRESSES NEED FOR JOINT STRUGGLE

NC280832 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 28 Jun 81 pp 1, 11

[Excerpts] The developments expected in connection with our problem and the danger of deviation being promoted by the EOKA-B coupists who are in the Democratic Rally make imperative the gathering together and the unity of all patriotic democratic forces. This was stressed Friday night by AKEL Deputy Secretary General and house member Andreas Fandhis during a gathering of AKEL members, supporters and friends at Ayia Napa.

Fandhis also stressed that a prerequisite for such unity is agreement on a joint minimum program and the acceptance by all of concrete measures for its implementation.

At the beginning of his speech, the AKEL deputy secretary general referred to the results of the parliamentary election and then dealt with the vital need for unity after the elections.

The unity of the patriotic democratic forces is an indispensable prerequisite for the success of the hard and difficult struggle for the solution of our people's problem, as well as for the promotion of a popular economic policy and for dealing with our people's urgent economic and social problems. Being conscious of the fact that a single party alone cannot shoulder the responsibility for the waging and the success of the struggle for a Cyprus solution, being conscious of the fact that the interests of the struggle for a fair, mutually acceptable and viable Cyprus solution require the coordination and contribution of all patriotic democratic forces without exception, our party has declared, both prior to and since the elections, the need for unity and cooperation among all these forces based on a minimum program acceptable to all.

Our party believes that the unity of the patriotic democratic forces and agreement on a joint minimum program are possible. A firm and secure basis for such a program is the four guidelines and the 1977 proposals that were prepared by the National and Ministerial Councils under the chairmanship of the late President Archbishop Makarios.

Of course, although agreement on a joint minimum program would constitute an important step for unity, it would not be enough to produce a result by itself. A necessary supplement to such an agreement must be the acceptance by all of concrete measures for the implementation of the minimum program.

Our party believes that under the current domestic and international conditions in the struggle for a sound Cyprus solution--and in general in the struggle for vindication, salvation and survival--the unity and the joint struggle of all patriotic democratic forces is absolutely necessary. From the domestic point of view, the unity and the joint struggle of all patriotic democratic forces is made imperative by the fact that developments are expected in the Cyprus issue and facing these developments will require the contribution of all patriotic democratic forces. Our view on the need for unity is based on our belief that the expected Cyprus developments, whatever they may be--negative or positive--must be faced collectively with the contribution of all patriotic forces.

The unity of the patriotic forces is also required to foil any possible danger or attempt at deviation and anomaly. It is no secret that unfortunately there are forces in Cyprus that favor deviation and anomaly as a means of promoting their own goals and in general the goals of U.S.-NATO imperialism.

These forces are no other than the EOKA-B coupists who have their nests inside the Democratic Rally. These forces, having managed to trap and to deceive the honest elements of the Democratic Rally's rightwing and to acquire seats in the house, are now promoting and imposing on the Democratic Rally a policy of provocation and tension that helps their main goal for deviation and anomaly. To create a climate of tension and acuteness on the domestic front, the EOKA-B coupists and the ideological propagandists of the Democratic Rally will make extreme use of anticommunism and warmongering, just as they did during the elections.

To foil the unity of the patriotic democratic forces, which constitutes an insurmountable obstacle in their adventurous plans, the brains of the Democratic Rally, assisted by specialists from foreign services, will distort everything and will make use of every occasion--as they are already doing--of the bogey of the Popular Front, describing it as something impermissible, as a curse for Cyprus.

The plans of the Democratic Rally leadership and of the EOKA-B coupists, who are working within the Democratic Rally for deviation and anomaly, constitute a serious threat to the future of Cyprus and its people. And this threat becomes still greater, more serious and more considerable if we bear in mind that it constitutes part of and that it is linked with the more general adventurous plans of the warmongering imperialist circles headed by the hawks of U.S.-NATO imperialism.

It is within these adventurous plans of U.S.-NATO imperialism that one should place the provocations and the inflammatory articles and in general the policy of tension and confrontation which the EOKA-B coupists and the ideological propangandists of the Democratic Rally leadership have been systematically conducting in accordance with their boses' instructions.

In view of this attack by the warmongering imperialist circles on an international scale and of their local organs in Cyprus, the unity of all the patriotic democratic forces of our people assumes new dimensions. Such a unity will become the breakwater that will repulse all the activities of the U.S.-NATO circles and of their local organs for deviation and anomaly and for the final implementation of their plans to enslave and to partition Cyprus.

NC281845 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 28 Jun 81

[Text] Tomorrow morning National Defense Minister Averof will be sworn in as deputy prime minister in the presence of President of the Republic Karamanlis. Averof will retain his position in the national defense ministry and at the same time he will undertake in the government the supervision of the economic sector.

At the New Democracy Congress, Prime Minister Rallis announced at noon that Averof had been entrusted with the position of deputy prime minister. Immediately after the national defense minister's speech, Prime Minister Rallis announced to the conferees that Averof had accepted the position of deputy prime minister and that he will be sworn in tomorrow.

More on Party Congress

NC281454 Paris AFP in English 1429 GMT 28 Jun 81

[Text] Athens, 28 Jun (AFP)--Greek Defense Minister Evangelos Averof was today appointed the government's second deputy prime minister, increasing his chances of eventually taking over leadership of the ruling New Democracy party, according to observers.

Mr Averof, 71, turned down the post last year after losing the election for party leader to current Prime Minister George Rallis by four votes. He accepted it this time "in the name of party unity," but observers said he was now likely to take over from Mr Rallis as party leader if New Democracy loses the October general elections.

The appointment of Mr Averof, who keeps his defense post but has the additional task of overseeing the economic coordination and finance ministries, is also expected to disappoint Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis, who is known to hanker after the party leadership himself. The economic coordination portfolio is currently held by Mr Rallis following the resignation for health reasons of Ioannis Boutos at the beginning of this year, but well-informed sources said it would be going to Deputy Minister Ioannis Palaiokrasas.

The announcement of Mr Averof's appointment as deputy prime minister, to work alongside Deputy Premier Konstandinos Papakonstandinou, was made by Mr Rallis at New Democracy's special congress being held in Athens this weekend.

In a speech to the congress, Mr Averof attacked opposition socialist leader Andreas Papandreou for allegedly tailoring his opinions to suit electoral demands, singling out the recent breakdown of talks on the leasing of bases in Greece to the United States.

Observers noted that Mr Rallis had turned the failure of the negotiations into an electoral trump card, saying that Mr Papandreou was wrong in his charges that the government was capitulating to U.S. demands. Mr Rallis outlined a ten-point programme to the congress, pledging to safeguard national sovereignty, cooperate with Greece's partners in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and European Economic Community, defend social and political liberties and the principles of free enterprise, modernise the administration, protect the enviornment, ensure full employment and help women.

The party congress, and the socialist party's Central Committee meeting last weekend at which Mr Papandreou called for an end to rightist rule, are the last major political events before the summer holiday period. The election campaign proper, which promises to be a tough one, starts in the autumn.

MINISTRY DENIES SALE OF ATOMIC MATERIAL TO PAKISTAN

NC281823 Paris AFP in English 1815 GMT 28 Jun 81

[Text] Ankara, 28 Jun (AFP)--Turkey today denied U.S. news reports that Ankara had clandestinely sold Pakistan materials originating from the U.S. that were to be used to make an atomic bomb.

"As Turkey is in favour of the use of nuclear weapons [as received] only for peaceful purposes, as well as of preventing the spread of nuclear weapons, the information in the American press is baseless and entirely meaningless," the Turkish Foreign Ministry said.

TERCUMAN COMMENTS ON SUSPENDED GREEK-U.S. TALKS

NC290900 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 22 Jun 81 p 8

["This Is the World" column by Zafer Atay: "Athens' New Intrigue"]

[Text] The lengthy joint Greek-U.S. defense talks have been suspended. As a matter of fact, these talks had reached an impasse. Failing to reach an agreement, both sides have decided to resume the talks after the Greek general elections. At first the disruption and then the resumption of these talks did not seem strange. But this time matters are slightly different because Greece came to the negotiating table with certain proposals also involving Turkey, although it failed in making the United States accept them....

The United States has four big bases in Athens and Crete. Following the joint defense agreement signed between Washington and Turkey, Greece became motivated and talks began.

In the normal course of the talks, Greece presented two astonishing proposals to the U.S. delegation. One of these proposals demanded that the agreement contain "guarantees for the security of the Greek frontiers in the Aegean against Turkey," and the other that the 10-7 ratio applied for U.S. aid to Ankara and Athens "not be changed."

Turkey, the United States and Greece are NATO members. NATO's aim is to cooperate in the field of defense against the common threat (Soviet danger). It is therefore preposterous for one member of NATO to seek frontier guarantees from a third ally against another ally. So Turkey has opposed any such U.S. guarantees right from the start.

Certain prejudices underlie these Greek demands, the most important one being the Greek wish to take advantage of U.S. guarantees and extend its territorial waters in the Aegean to 12 miles. For years, Turkey has been saying that the extension of the territorial waters in the Aegean would be a cause for war. But Greece contrived a plan to secure U.S. guarantees and then create a fait accompli by extending its territorial waters to 12 miles and consequently bring Ankara face to face with Washington. For the "time being," this Athens plan has misfired.

As to the 10-7 ratio formula, the United States has been trying for some time to maintain a balance by implementing a 10-7 ratio in military aid to Ankara and Athens. This may be a useful formula to help melt the ice between the two countries, which came to the brink of war because of the Cyprus dispute and the continental shelf. But to let such a thing go on record as permanent clause is unthinkable.

During Greece's withdrawal from the military wing of NATO, from 1974-80, Turkey single-handedly bore the entire responsibility for the southeast wing of NATO. Turkey has to maintain an army of 500,000 men while the Greek Army numbers only 150,000. Of the NATO countries, Turkey has the longest frontiers with the Soviet Union. If one takes into account the military embargo imposed on Turkey by the United States for over 3 years, it is impossible to characterize the demand that "this formula must not be changed" as stemming from good will.

On several occasions Turkey has warned the United States, stressing that it would never accept certain practices as permanent.

Greece has been staging the same plot for some time now, trying to secure some concessions. Greek parliamentary elections will be held in October. The New Democratic party led by Prime Minister Rallis may not emerge from the polls as strong as it is now. Socialist PASOK, which now has 90 seats in Parliament, will emerge either as a partner in the government or will come to power single-handed.

Papandreou, the pseudo-leftist PASOK leader, who possesses an American passport, has succeeded in attracting a large crowd of voters to his side through such slogans as "The government is selling out our country to Turkey and to NATO" and "Our national rights are being trodden underfoot." The Greek Government is using this situation as a weapon and is obtaining concessions by arguing at every opportunity that "either you do what we want or the leftists will take over."

Greece resorted to this same intrigue when it returned to NATO--an intrigue which yielded positive results. With all the good will in the world, Turkey consented to Greece's reintegration into NATO, but not a single Aegean issue has been resolved. Greece has repeated the same threat in connection with Cyprus and the bases, but this time both Turkey and the United States have called Greece's bluff.

It is impossible at this moment to predict what may happen in Greece in the October elections. Would Greece leave NATO if the socialists come to power? But if worse comes to worst, a remedy can be found. New equilibriums can be formed and vacuums can be filled.

Korvenheimo, deputy chief of the Political Department of the Foreign Ministry, noted today that the Foreign Ministry is carefully studying the statement given by President Brezhnev to SUOMEN SOSIALIDEMOKRAATTI. SOARES SAYS RELATIONS WITH EANES 'NORMALIZED'

PM290717 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Jun 81 p 3

[Text] Mario Soares stated on leaving Belem Palace yesterday that his "relations with the president which were interrupted in October, have been normalized." The audience, which lasted more than 2 hours, was regarded by the socialist leader as "a normal and institutional meeting between the reelected socialist party secretary general and the elected president of the Portuguese Republic and of the entire Portuguese people."

The meeting, which forms part of a number which Mario Soares will hold with other state officials--for instance, the speaker of the assembly and the armed forces chief of staff--"took place in the best possible manner and with the utmost cordiality."

Declining to talk about the past, "which does not interest the country but only historians," Soares stated that he believes that this normalization of relations between "the representative of the largest opposition party and the head of state is necessary a responsibility toward democracy." He added: "The socialist party secretary general cannot fail to engage in dialogue with the president," also deeming that "there is still a broad area of agreement with the president, as there always was, in the defense of the democratic institutions to which the socialists are wholeheartedly committed."

Mario Soares also told journalists that "during the audience, very wide-ranging impressions on the national and international situation were exchanged" and, in the former area, "the presidential powers were discussed in light of the coming revision of the Constitution, albeit only superficially."

SPAIN

COUPISTS REPORTEDLY SOUGHT TO BUG COMMUNICATIONS

LD261938 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Text] While little is being said about the subject [of the discovery of a conspiracy against the government], it is thought that the people implicated tried, among other things, to bug the communications of senior government ministers and the king of Spain. Among those arrested, a woman official at the Ministry of the Presidency and a military expert in secret communications could be at the center of the affair.

The interior minister said that the ramifications of the destablization plan point more to the civilian extreme right than to the armed forces. The possible plot was discovered after the arrest of a member of the Young Force, the youth wing of the New Force, after a bomb blew up in his hands as he was planting it in the center of Madrid. The interior minister added that the overall aim of the plans of those involved in the possible plot was to create a climate of insecurity hostile to democracy. In this climate, the bugging of the secret communications of the king and government, civilian and military bodies would be of particular importance in the event of a serious threat to the security of the state.

SCHMIDT ON OFFICE TENURE-NATO DECISION CONNECTION

LD291720 Hamburg DPA in German 1555 GMT 29 Jun 81

[Text] Bonn, 29 Jun (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt reaffirmed the close connection between his political fate and the implementation of both parts of the NATO dual decision on new nuclear medium-range missiles and the offer of negotiations to the Soviet Union. Schmidt also emphasized in an interview with the FRANKFURTEHR RUNDSCHAU (Tuesday edition) his conviction that U.S. President Ronald Reagan is willing to negotiate. With reference to the doubts expressed in the Soviet Union about this, Schmidt is of the opinion that by the time Soviet head of state and party Leonid Brezhnev visits Bonn this autumn, "there will certainly be no doubts about the seriousness of the willingness to negotiate."

Schmidt said that he had tied his government office to the NATO decision in a twofold manner. On the one hand, it has been clear to everyone in the Federal Republic for a long time that he will have to resign if the decision to station U.S. medium-range missiles in corresponding strength to the Soviet level of arms is abandoned. "On the other hand, I have stated clearly for the whole world that I could not justify it if the second half of the so-called dual decision is not implemented seriously with the aim of reducing the numbers of medium-range missiles on both sides--in the theoretically ideal case to nothing." Schmidt said he does not think it likely that this ideal case will come about.

Schmidt denied that linking his political existence with the NATO dual decision was foolhardy in the face of the limited potential influence of a German chancellor on the world powers. "This was considered, thought through, tested and confirmed a long, long time ago," the chancellor said about his threat to resign. "I am still of the opinion that I cannot justify staying in office if the first half or the second half of the dual decision is rendered worthless." At the same time, he is aware that his announcement of a possible resignation carries political weight in the United States and the Soviet Union.

WILLY BRANDT INTERVIEWED ON MOSCOW VISIT

DW291135 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0905 GMT 28 Jun 81

[Reporter Voight interview with SPD Chairman Willy Brandt; date and place not given--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] Mr Brandt, Moscow uses sharper and sharper tones in addressing the Federal Republic in connection with NATO's dual decision. Soviet Defense Minister Ustinov warned recently against the deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles because this would expose the Federal Republic in an emergency to a devastating strike. Do you expect an irritated atmosphere in your forthcoming Moscow talks with leading Soviet politicians, particularly with General Secretary Brezhnev?

[Answer] I do not know that. Actually, I don't believe it. My [discussion] partners know that I am coming to gather information. Irritation doesn't make sense in this connection. I will be quite frank and give any information I can, such as, that the Federal Republic of Germany has a vital interest in early negotiations and the creation of prerequisites, if possible, so that no new NATO arms must be deployed in the Federal Republic and elsewhere in Europe. This is the aim of negotiations. All that already has taken quite some time.

[Question] The invitation was voiced some time ago, if I am not mistaken. Why has it been accepted now?

[Answer] Yes, I haven't been to the Soviet capital for 6 years now. In the meantime, however, I have been to the United States seven or eight times. I consider it correct to have a look now and to see whether I can learn this or that beyond the official statements. That is correct, the invitation was voiced last year. It was renewed twice this year and it fits my plans quite well to go there for a few days in early July. But I still underline that I am not a negotiator.

[Question] Obviously, it seems that a central issue of the dispute about the medium-range missiles is that each of the two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, stresses its preparedness to negotiate while doubting the seriousness of the other. Do you expect your Moscow visit to reveal the real negotiation chances as far as the Soviet side is concerned?

[Answer] Yes, I very much hope that this can be revealed. But one must first know that as important as the so-called medium-range missiles, the Eurostrategic arms, are, the two big powers have a lot more to discuss. Regarding negotiations on medium-range arms, the Soviet Union was in no hurry at all, claiming that it did not pay to negotiate. That was corrected, as we could see, when Federal Chancellor Schmidt was in Moscow in the early summer of 1980. Thereafter, first negotiations took place on this issue between the Russians and the Americans last October in Geneva. Then came the U.S. elections. That caused a considerable delay on the U.S. side, which was not merely due to new people taking over and becoming accustomed to their jobs, but due to the fact that they had some new ideas with regard to the problems. Yet, it will be important and interesting to find out what ideas the Soviet side has with regard to entering a real negotiation phase.

[Question] Mr Brandt, I would like to quote your statement about new ideas. Don't statements and actions of prominent U.S. personalities give the Soviets a certain reason or just the pretext for the increasing doubts they voice with a view to the U.S. will to negotiate? I think, for example, of the statement of the new U.S. disarmament director Rostow, saying that a SALT round on the limitation of strategic arms could be resumed in March 1982 at the earliest. What good reasons will you be able to give your Soviet discussion partners to disperse such doubts?

[Answer] Yes, I will not be a spokesman for the U.S. Government when I talk to the responsible people in Moscow, but I will indeed express by conviction that the United States wants to negotiate. At any rate, it has committed itself to negotiate. That is not something that hangs in the air; Atlantic alliance negotiations have taken place in this matter. How to prepare the negotiations has even been formulated. And clear statements were made when the German federal chancellor recently went to Washington, statements not only by the secretary of state but by the President himself. I have no doubts in this respect.

You pointed out a great difference with your question: The U.S. secretary of state wants to discuss medium-range missiles with the Soviet foreign minister in September when both of them are in New York and, if possible--as I hope--agree on when, where and in what connection negotiations will be taken up. The new disarmament director Rostow, whom you just mentioned, however, discussed the SALT issue, the issue of intercontinental arms, saying that the United States would probably be able to discuss them only as late as next spring, which I regret. I think that they take a bit too much time.

[Question] Obviously, it is the very doubts about Washington's willingness to hold concrete negotiations which seem to give the peace movement in the Federal Republic additional depth and broadness. Are those who see a dangerous anti-American mood emerge, especially within the young generation, wrong?

[Answer] Well, I think it would be wrong especially for us here in Germany to join in blaming one side only. In this respect, much criticism could be addressed to the two big powers, the world powers, the nuclear world powers. I also doubt that the critical discussion of American ideas is the main motive of what is termed the peace movement. The main motive is the growing concern and even the growing fear of many people--not only young people but above all young people--that things will not turn out well. This basic feeling that things will not turn out well if the arms race continues is right. I doubt the thesis that this really is anti-Americanism. I also discussed it the other day with U.S. interlocutors who were here in Bonn. Anyway, it isn't an important phenomenon.

Naturally, it is quite different today; we have in the Federal Republic a young generation which feels less burdened by the past, which did not take part in founding the alliance but inherited it. We have to deal with a young generation which is much more unbiased than we older people were and are in our dealings with the United States. But I don't think this is anti-American. By the way, that would be very foolish because even if criticism of leading U.S. politicians were justified or justified in part, the fact would remain that there is a broad spectrum of opinions in the United States and that basically all factors that are discussed here play a role also in the American discussion. However, what we hear from there, naturally, is primarily what the government says.

[Question] This topic of disarmament policy, of arms policy has indeed not left your party, the SPD, unaffected. The doubts about the wisdom of the NATO dual decision which was supported by a large majority of your party congress in Berlin in 1979 have grown considerably. Isn't it unusual and also very precarious that outside circumstances, the negotiating readiness of other states, possibly lead to decisions by the next party congress with explosive foreign and domestic policy consequences?

[Answer] It is still a long time to the next SPD congress in Munich. Who knows what else will have happened in the world by then, also regarding the topic we are discussing just now. True, we discuss things here which are essentially decided elsewhere, but they are things which concern us directly, which affect our existence directly, because in the case of war it is quite certain that the two German states will suffer most. So we do not need to be warned by the Soviet defense minister in this respect. We are aware that the two German states and the people living there would be the most affected if it came to the great conflict. This is what haunts the people.

Nonetheless, I believe that most SPD members, the party whose chairman I am, hold the view that it would be good and right to hold negotiations soon. The quarrel and the differences are how they will get on, what the conditions are, what pressure we are to exert on others. The factors change time and again. When we made the decision at the SPD congress in Berlin in December 1979, we assumed that the Americans and the Russians would conclude SALT II. That has not happened. However, they behave as if it had been concluded. We can only urgently hope that it remains so, as if this treaty were already in force, except for a small component which would mean the destruction of part of the Soviet weapons in a specific field, if the treaty were ratified.

But for the rest, the two powers behave this way. No, the crucial question remains--and basically there are no differences in this respect within the SPD--how can negotiations be brought about, not any negotiations but--and I repeat--negotiations, which as a result of a positive negotiation result, possibly make the so-called counterarmament superfluous?

MINISTER CITES CONCERN ON U.S. DEVELOPMENT POLICY

LD300906 Hamburg DPA in German 0811 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] Ulm, 30 Jun (DPA)--According to Rainer Offergeld (SPD), federal minister for economic cooperation, the Federal Government is concerned about views on development policy within the new U.S. Government of Ronald Reagan.

"Any attempt in development policy to favor so-called friends and punish so-called enemies is a contribution to further polarization, a contribution to carrying the East-West conflict over into North-South relations," the minister said on Monday evening in a lecture at Ulm University.

The fact that sections of the U.S. Reagan administration express different views on this question seriously concerns the Federal Government. There could be serious consequences in a turnaround. The causes of the crises in the Third World do not result from the conflict between East and West. Transferring an East-West view to the Third World has led to false conclusions and mistakes, according to the SPD politician. Security and stability not only depend on the military balance, but also "on the solution of the urgent North-South problems." Development policy is thus active peace policy.

YOUNG SOCIALISTS CHAIRMAN DISCUSSES CONGRESS

DW292053 Hamburg Norddeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0619 GMT 29 Jun 81

[Unidentified editor's interview with Willi Piecyk, chairman of the Young Socialists, at the federal congress of the Young Socialists; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Where do you see actual agreement with your mother party?

[Answer] We agree quite a lot with the mother party. Our actual problems are that this party forms the government and we quite frequently cannot recognize ourselves in this government. We tried to make this clear last weekend in Lahstein.

[Question] On a balance sheet, how would you assess your congress there?

[Answer] I think that at first we had to fight it out strongly with the party and also with the government, but thereafter we moved on to a factual discussion. And the contents we discussed there, peace, ecology,economic and social policies, we now must translate into discussions within the party and, to be sure, we not only have had discussions but we also agreed to continue on our road which is oriented toward practice, that is to say, that we want to carry on our efforts, and even increase them, in the peace and ecology movement.

[Question] You said that you had to fight it out strongly, but to say it quite honestly, does a political organization like the federal congress in Lahnstein behave in such an aggressive way that--in connection with NATO's dual decision--words such as dual cheat or dual deceit were uttered? Couldn't this perhaps have been done somewhat differently?

[Answer] Well, perhaps one ought to realize that something happened before. Last year, we waged an embattled election campaign and this is why we proceed from the premise that the goals we campaigned for will be translated into practice in one way or another. And the problem is that if matters are applied to persons, also from the other side, if somebody says that if this decision is being cancelled then I can no longer remain in my office, then this remains attached to one person and this does not actually facilitate the discussion for us. This is why one must not be that supersensitive in the party now regarding the choice of words. One must fight it out somewhat strongly, as I said, but that must not super impose the contents because it is the contents that matter and which now must be discussed within the party.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG Criticism

DW291417 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 29 Jun 81 p 4

[Article signed HP: "The State Surely Will Set Things Right"]

[Text] This weekend the Young Socialists certainly have not become more attractive for the majority of their contemporaries outside the SPD.

The latter's political uneasiness largely concerns the tactical subterfuges and ideological power struggles that are customary within the established parties and have now been copied almost with perfection by the Young Social Democrats in Lahnstein. The only question that was discussed there was, once again, who is to be the chairman of the organization. Almost all contents once again were subordinated to this question.

Marked by the elected campaign within the organization, the oddest and most contradictory compromises came about. For example, the delegates elected their Chairman Piecyk with a slim majority and dropped the candidate of the orthodox marxist group--certainly to the relief of SPD Federal Manager Glotz. But in the resolutions passed, the positions of the wing which lost in the election prevailed. The economic and social policy program of the Young Socialists, for instance, shows an (almost authoritarian) confidence in the state, which compares only with the confidence of conservative economic politicians in the market: The state surely will set things right, it will settle things and put them in order, it will add to public welfare as soon as all key industries have been nationalized.

The clear "no" to the stationing of new nuclear missiles in Europe was the only denominator on which the wings within the Young Socialists agreed immediately. In this "no," all appeals--both by much applauded Erhard Eppler and by booed Peter Glotz--not to deny that the proponents of this dual decision also have the will for peace died away. Here, too, the candidates were under pressure to show their profile. Only the candidate who attacked the federal chancellor and his policy most ruthlessly and clearly had a chance to be elected. That Willi Piecyk nonetheless was elected and not Klaus-Peter Wolf is almost a wonder.

BUDGET MINISTER EXPLAINS FISCAL MEASURES

PM300954 Paris L'UNITE in French 20 Jun 81 pp 10-11

[Christine Cottin interview with Laurent Fabius, minister attached to minister for economic affairs and finance with responsibility for the budget; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] L'UNITE: It is ususual, to say the least, for a government to impose new taxes a few days before elections as important as the parliamentary elections now in progress. Why has this been done?

Laurent Fabius: It is true that it is the first time for a very long time--or even in the history of the republic--that new fiscal measures have been announced 4 days before the first election round.

Why has this been done? First, because from the beginning the government refused to engage in demagoguery. All French people realize that if you want to incur some expenses you must ensure that you have corresponding receipts. It is better to state things clearly even though we are in an election period. We believe that the French people would have taken it very badly if they had been told on the day after the second round: "You have been promised a certain nunber of things but now here is the check." We have decided to present this check at the same time as the relevant measures so that the electorate can form its own opinion. The untrue statements which Jacques Chirac and some other people have made on the subject have in no way altered the situation.

There was a second--maybe even more important--reason which has prompted us to announce the new fiscal measures immediately. We just wanted to emphasize that the government believes that its action is in keeping with its long term policy. I have often heard people talk, with reference to Francois Mitterrand's becoming president, about an "experiment." It is absolutely not a question of any experiment! We wish to govern the country--with the French people's support--for a long time to come. It is because we intend to stay on for a long time that, when making decisions during the first weeks, we have naturally made a point of making sure of corresponding revenue. Taking timely long term action, we have opted for openness.

L'UNITE: How will various new receipts and expenditure be balanced within the framework of the extraordinary credits in the budget which you are to submit to the National Assembly as soon as the July session opens?

Laurent Fabius: The budget as a whole, in fact, consists of three sections. The first section concerns discharging liabilities incurred in the past. We have been left with a 51 billion deficit. This must be taken into account.

The second section concerns decisions adopted on 3 June in the economic and social spheres--the interoccupational minimum growth wage, family allowances, housing for old and handicapped people and so forth. These steps are aimed at economic revival. They should lead to a faster collection of taxes and social contribution.

The third section concerns expenditure amounting to Fr6.8 billion earmarked for the creation of jobs, grants to the economic and social development fund, grants to farmers, fishermen and veterans and so forth. We have ensured that money will indeed be available for this kind of expenditure. This means that expenditure amounting to Fr6.8 billion is to be balanced by revenue also amounting to Fr6.8 billion. The leitmotiv of all this is the desire to devlop employment by any means at our disposal.

L'UNITE: Much has already been written about these new taxes. Could you remind us of the logic behind the government's decision to impose them?

Laurent Fabius: In fact, compared with the past, an important innovating factor has emerged--we want to show very clearly that, as far as expenditure is concerned, employment is our main objective and, as far as receipts are concerned, fiscal justice is our objective.

Therefore, we have adopted two big batches of decisions. On the one hand, decisions relating to oil enterprises, banks and expenditure of a luxury nature incurred by certain companies which we will tax, which was not the case previously. And, on the other hand, we have imposed a supplementary tax on people with the highest incomes. This will affect only people whose annual taxes exceed Fr100,000, that is 10 million centimes, for the year 1981. Less than 1 percent of the French people will be affected by this measure which will, however, represent a great change.

L'UNITE: The budget for 1982 can already be perceived on the horizon. Can you tell us something about it?

Laurent Fabius: We will soon begin preparing it because, legally, it should be submitted to the National Assembly on 6 October 1981. This is an extremely lengthy and complicated exercise which the services concerned usually start tackling at the beginning of the year. Therefore, we will have to work very fast. This will be the budget minister's main task in the coming weeks and months. And it will be an important task for the new ministers since they will have to consider, on the basis of the previous budget, what new proposals should be put forward and what should be treated as a matter of priority. All this will have to be done within the bounds of a tight budget, which are obviously important in a general economic context which, as we know, is not good.

Nonetheless, acting under the president's and the premier's authority, we will have to manage to set between now and the fall our left government's imprint on the next budget while abiding by the priorities which Francois Mitterrand determined during his presidential campaign.

REPORTAGE ON SENEGAL PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT

Thiam Interview

PM291430 Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Jun 81 p 4

[Philippe Decraene interview with Senegalese Prime Minister Habib Thiam; date and place not given]

[Text] Senegalese Prime Minister Habib Thiam, who is paying a working visit to Paris until 19 June, was received by PS First Secretary Jospin on Tuesday before meeting Economy and Finance Minister Delors.

[Question] Do Senegalese leaders attach any special significance to the change which took place in the leadership of the French state last month?

[Answer] Certainly, the change which occurred in France last month is of fundamental importance. In view of the closeness of the relations existing between Dakar and Paris, this change is bound to have some important consequences for Senegal. I would like to add that the French president himself and most of his ministers and aides have had personal and even friendly relations with most Senegalese leaders.

[Question] What are the various objectives of your visit to Paris?

[Answer] The past must not be forgotten. This is why my first objective was to deliver a personal message from President Abdou Diouf to President Francois Mitterrand. This message emphasizes our desire to develop in depth our friendly relations. At the same time, I conveyed to my host an invitation to pay an official visit to Senegal as soon as possible.

[Question] A Senegalese request for exceptional financial aid has been mentioned.

[Answer] This is correct. As a result of the 1980 drought, which can be considered the worst drought that the Senegalese have suffered in the past 50 years, our groundnut crops have been reduced 80 percent, falling from some 1 million tons to 200,000 tons. This is why we have been forced to ask for exceptional aid. In addition to this calamity, we have been faced with the consequences of an increase in our oil bill on which we have to spend 50 percent of our country's export earnings. And, finally, the increase in the prices of goods exported by OECD countries, which account for 75 percent of Senegal's imports, has also had some very harmful consequences for our country's economy....

[Question] Some rumors have been circulating that the Senegalese leaders have been faced with considerable difficulties with respect to their relations with the franc.

[Answer] These rumors are completely groundless and I wonder in whose interest it is to spread them.

[Question] Do you envisage any in depth revision of French Senegalese relations in the cooperation sphere and, if so, in what sectors exactly?

[Answer] Instead of discussing revision or even reorganization, it would be more useful to talk about development in depth.

[Question] Senegal recently became a member of a regional defense pact in which a certain number of West African countries participate. Do its leaders believe that some serious external threats loom over their country?

[Answer] Thirteen of the 16 African countries which are members of the Economic Community of West African States [ECOWAS] are also members of the pact which you have just mentioned. It is obvious that certain countries would like to destabilize some ECOWAS member states. This particularly applies to Libya.

[Question] Have you discussed the future of French-African conferences with the president? Is your country in favor of an institutionalization and multiplication of meetings of this kind?

[Answer] No, we have not discussed in particular the subject of French-African conferences. However, it is obvious that such meetings are very useful inasmuch as they enable us to discuss common problems and to jointly seek ways to resolve them.

Joint Communique

PM291536 Paris LE MONDE in French 21-22 Jun 81 p 4

[Text] Before returning to his country, the Senegalese prime minister, who was received at Hotel Matignon at the beginning of his visit to France, had a further talk with Pierre Mauroy on 19 June. At the end of the visit, Hotel Matignon published a joint communique stating:

"Mauroy told Thiam that the French Government would respect undertakings stemming from French-Senegalese friendship and that it would provide financial aid at the end of July, which would enable him to deal with the difficulties connected with the economic situation. The terms of this aid will be determined on the basis of the findings of a French delegation which is to visit Dakar during July."

"Furthermore, the French side has taken due note of the negotiations which are soon to take place with the IMF and of the consultations which may be held with Sengal's other partners. It has expressed its interest in the idea that the Senegalese side may engage in discussions with a view to rescheduling its debt within the framework of the Paris Club."

MARCHAIS DENIES FOREIGN POLICY 'CAPITULATION'

PM291529 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 24 Jun 81 pp 1, 6

[Excerpt] Georges Marchais yesterday was the guest of Channel 1 at a time when the government's composition was not yet known.

After specifying in answer to a question: "I am more Communist than ever," Georges Marchais was led to express his opinion on Afghanistan, Poland, the Camp David agreements and the problem of the SS-20 missiles:

"As we acknowledged at the time of our first discussion with the PS, when it was a matter of examining whether the conditions existed for a government policy agreement, we had to tackle the issues on which our parties had different stances.

"The text of the agreement with the PS makes statements on these four issues. I know that there will be talk of 'capitulation.' Well then, let us see what is involved.

"Camp David: Camp David took place. Camp David led to the ending of the war between Israel and Egypt. Camp David led to a withdrawal of Israeli troops from part of the Sinai. These are facts. We acknowledge them.

"That being specified--and this is what we say in the statement--the Middle East problem is not settled for all that. We have for a very long time declared ourselves in favor of recognition of the state of Israel, within secure and recognized borders. And we believe that the Palestinian people must be given the homeland to which they have a right. This is what we say in the agreement; it is our policy. If that is called a capitulation...

"Concerning the European missiles, we are leaving nothing in the dark with respect to the SS-20's and the Pershing and cruise missiles. Obviously, each party can have its assessment. We even agreed yesterday evening that there can be different assessments even within the parties.

"But the question confronting us is whether it is necessary to advance along the path of the arms race. We don't believe so. Our two parties are in agreement on working in favor of the dissolution of the military blocs and in favor of peace and disarmament. We believe that France has a role to play in this field.

"We say that it is necessary to negotiate. It is necessary to negotiate to guarantee the balance of military forces and, on that basis, it is necessary to adopt measures to advance along the path of disarmament. That is what the peoples want. Capitulation? No. Political realism.

"Concerning Afghanistan, our parties assess the starting point differently. What do we want? What do the Soviets want? They have already said. They want the withdrawal of their troops. The Afghan Government also wants this. But it wants negotiations among the countries concerned--Iran, Pakistan and Afghanistan--in order to ensure the security of the borders and noninterference in internal affairs. We say on that basis that the Soviet troops should withdraw from Afghanistan."

With respect to Poland, Georges Marchais pointed out that certain journalists had noted a certain reluctance on his part to broach the problem. "Yes, I was very reluctant. I am reluctant to talk about Poland with anybody. Moreover, I will point out to you that I have only talked about it twice in a year.... For our part, we believe that it is for the Polish people to resolve their problems themselves, that is, to advance along the path of progress of reforms of an economic, social and democratic nature.

"I said that last August. Therefore, it did not embarrass us to reaffirm it. It did embarrass us to some extent because as far as I am concerned I don't like to teach lessons to other people.

"I really am in favor of noninterference in other countries' internal affairs; I am in favor of each people deciding for itself in complete independence the social system which suits it best. We have found an area of agreement with our socialist partners so that France may act effectively on these major issues.

"Some people will call that capitulation. I call it continuation and development of the PCF's policy and I am glad. I am pleased that we have found an area of agreement on these issues with the PS."

LE MONDE EVALUATES BUSH REMARKS ON PCF MINISTERS

PM291253 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 Jun 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Washington and the 'Red' Ministers"]

[Text] When George Bush informed Claude Cheysson on 6 June of his intention to visit Mitterrand, he probably did not expect his arrival in Paris to coincide with the return of the Communists to the French Government for the first time since the dawn of the Cold War.

It would have been surprising if he were delighted by that. For the vast majority of Americans, a Red is a Red and, ipso facto, a Soviet agent. Despite a number of relatively favorable press articles, especially in the New York TIMES, they find it difficult to understand why the president decided to make room for these cumbersome partners when the PS and Left Radical Movement have an absolute majority in the National Assembly.

Having been head of the CIA, as is the case with the present vice president, does not necessarily predispose you to think differently, especially when you belong to the most conservative--and one of the most anti-Soviet--governments the United States has had for 50 years. Moreover, it is particularly easy to imagine the anxiety felt by the Atlantic alliance military chiefs about the consequences of government participation by Communists in a member country, since General Haig, when he was supreme commander in Brussels in 1975, expressed them publicly with regard to Italy, which was then desperately trying to produce the historical compromise.

Kissinger, then secretary of state, and President Ford did not hesitate to follow suit, forgetting that on 1 August the previous year their country had signed the Helsinki Final Act, which prohibits any kind of interference in other countries' internal affairs.

It is true that that is a fairly hypocritical pledge and that most of those who made it, above all the USSR, have violated it in various ways. Nonetheless, it is not customary among countries claiming to be democracies to express opinions on the way governments are formed.

Careful reading of Bush's remarks suggests that he was fully aware of this aspect of things, which, moreover, Mitterrand appropriately recalled. Then why did he nonetheless publicly express a "concern" to which the State Department felt the need to return a little later in a considerably firmer tone? The United States now has the good fortune to find in Paris a president who knows the Communists infinitely better than they do, who has much fewer illusions about the USSR than his predecessor and who is taking a much firmer line than him on the Euromissiles and Afghanistan. Whether willingly or unwillingly, Marchais' friends were forced to sanction that policy in order to enter the government. The Americans should find considerable reasons for satisfaction in that. They do not stand to gain from calling those reasons into question by forgetting an essential prerogative of national sovereignty.

NEWSPAPERS EXAMINE COMMUNIST APPOINTMENTS

LE FIGARO Commentary

PM261334 Paris LE FIGARO in French 24 Jun 81 p 1

[Pierre Thibon commentary: "Fundamental Change"]

[Text] Even if it outwardly involves few structural changes, Mauroy's second government could not be a repeat Mauroy government by virtue of the mere fact of the fundamental change represented by the entry within it of Communist Party members. There are only four of them, but it is obviously the symbolic value which counts under the circumstances, not mere arithmetic. Indeed, the latter has nothing to do with the matter since its victory Sunday enabled the PS to dispense easily with that support in order to form a majority.

Involving the Communist Party in government action is therefore an act of political will on the part of Mitterrand, perhaps in the hope of having a respite at the social level and even more certainly with the intention of making it quite clear that the PS and he himself have never failed in a unitary spirit and that the 1977 rift was entirely the work of the Communist Party. In short, yesterday's gratuitous gesture is, from this viewpoint, a way of refuting the questioning of intentions which the Communist Party and Marchais has maintained for 3 years. It is therefore a matter of a continuation in different guise of the struggle for influence waged by the two parties because if the PS has ulterior motives in proposing to the Communist Party that it take part in the government, it may well be assumed that the Communist Party has just as many in accepting. The springboards represented by the four ministries allocated to it enable the Communist Party to place supporters in influential sectors (transport, health, vocational training and the civil service), which give it the means to "hold" a very large number of state personnel. But, above all, this participation gives it the opportunity to some extent to turn to account its double defeat in the presidential and legislative elections and therefore to surmount the loss of prestige stemming from this.

On the basis of yesterday's decision, each of the two partners therefore hopes to be able to score decisive points over the other. The PS is delighted at having forced Marchais to sign a statement which forces him to back down from his previous stances and which appears to bind him hand and foot. But an agreement is important less for its text than for the interpretations which the signatories make of it; it is the one who is in a position of strength who usually makes his interpretation prevail.

For the moment, the PS seems to hold the trumps. There is no guarantee that the same will hold true when the first economic difficulties begin to dispel the Socialist voters' euphoria. At the same time, the presence of Communist ministers, to whom four portfolios were allocated yesterday, will prove more important than that number suggests; when setbacks occur--and every enterprise experiences them--you have a choice between admitting that you were mistaken or acting precipitately. The former solution is the more difficult; it is only human. There is therefore a great danger of the latter being adopted and the Communist ministers' activity will quite clearly tend to make it prevail. This is to say that yesterday's "handful" may well carry decisive weight tomorrow.

LE MATIN Editorial

PM291109 Paris LE MATIN in French 24 Jun 81 p 2

[Editorial: "The Four Communists"]

[Text] By Sunday night, all the preconditions--in tactical terms--were fulfilled in such a way that Francois Mitterrand and Pierre Mauroy were able to offer the Communists some posts in the government.

This has now been done after the PCF leaders agreed to all the conditions imposed on them by their partners with a view to ensuring that such participation could in no way call into question the government's necessary solidarity. Such a coalition--without precedent in our history--invites three series of questions relating, first, to the PCF's attitude toward this matter; second, to the advantages or disadvantages of such a presence in the sphere of domestic politics; and, finally, to the determination of our foreign policy, the last-mentioned point being probably of greatest importance for the future.

The agreement reached between the PCF and PS between Monday night and Tuesday morning is nonetheless disturbing. How can the Communist leaders abandon all that made up the specific nature of their ideology just 48 hours ago? Not only have they just negotiated a compromise--like the one which characterized the joint program--but ratified an alignment with Socialist ideas, thereby losing their identity. George Marchais' friends know this and cannot find an ounce of Marxist-Leninism either in the results of yesterday's discussions or in the promises made by Francois Mitterrand during his entire presidential campaign. So why did the PCF leaders eat humble pie? It was more painful than it seems if you consider that yesterday's abnormally long Central Committee meeting is a sign of deep internal malaise. The advocates of participation finally won the day. Nonetheless, the abrupt change of course imposed on the PCF by the surprising election success achieved by the PS and the head of state probably heralds the beginning of a review of that party's line. It is likely to be a painful review which will not be achieved without a major upheaval at the top. Are we going to see the Communist ethic called into question--an aggiornamento [updating]? Here, more than in any other sphere, we must wait and see.

Second, the government appointed yesterday must turn its energies to tasks which are as pressing as they are priority: countering the increase in unemployment, avoiding a speeding up of inflation, struggling against the franc's deterioration, drawing up a timetable for reforms, one of which--the nationalization program--will be bound to arouse discussions and questions. The fact that Jacques Delors, Laurent Fabius, Michel Jobert and Michel Rocard have been maintained respectively as finance, budget, foreign trade and planning ministers bears witness to a deisre for a firm economic policy and realism in timing projects. These four people have given enough assurance in this respect for there to be no doubt about their concern to avoid any demogogic lack of control. The fact that portfolios have been given to PCF members should not change this observation: A Communist minister facing a trade union delegation and more particularly a CGT delegation will clearly have to forget the PCF's language and discover, through experience, that a government member has little in common with a member of the opposition. Indeed, the four Communist ministers will strengthen the "sociological legitimacy" which Francois Mitterrand intends to take as his basis and it is difficult to see that they could be more than a support although they may have wished to be an imaginative driving force.

Nonetheless, it is on the foreign policy front that the presence of Communists is likely to pose problems in the short term. Indeed, one of the head of state's first symbolic gestures in the diplomacy sphere was to approve the deployment of U.S. Pershing missiles in Europe. This choice, diametrically opposed to the PCF options, has been interpreted as a considerable rapprochement in American and French views on "detente." It is also clear that there are still major differences of opinion between the Elysee and Place du Colonel-Fabien [PCF headquarters] on all problems relating to disarmament, the SALT agreements and even NATO.

In any case, if it is true that Francois Mitterrand had been planning this scenario for taking over power since 1969, he has every reason to be satisfied: He has a big majority in the National Assembly, a government which includes Communists and he is not the hostage of any political family.

LE MONDE's View

PM290754 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Jun 81 p 11

[Patrick Jarreau commentary: "Although They Occupy 'Technical' Posts the Communists Intend To Influence Government Policy"]

[Excerpts] For the PCF, the entry of four Communists into the government marks a turning point compared with the policy it has pursued for the past 3 years. It was one thing to come out in favor of Mitterrand on 10 May and then to claim to be part of the presidential majority to have emerged from the ballot boxes in the campaign for the parliamentary elections; it is a different matter to share responsibility for a policy which the PCF had rejected in September 1977 when it broke with the PS and which it has constantly criticized since then. The decision was sufficiently difficult for the Central Committee to devote 6 hours of discussion to it, which Marchais described as "rich" on television channel 1 on Tuesday evening.

With four ministerial representatives, the Communists have reason to think that their presence in the government is not entirely subordinate. In addition, they decided not to regard the posts offered to them as technical since they filled them with people who do not have specia-knowledge of the spheres for which they are responsible. Fiterman, one of the PCF's top leaders, had hitherto never shown any interest in transport; it is true that Le Pors, a former senior civil servant, is an economist; Ralite is an expert in cultural questions and Rigout, in agricultural problems (the former is health minister and the latter minister of vocational training).

These four ministers are politicians. In Fiterman's case, it goes without saying. The choice of Marchais' second-in-command, rather than the secretary general, to mark the PCF's presence in the government at minister of state level scotches the rumor that Marchais was to be given that task, which would have reduced his role as the head of the party.

The reverse seems to have happened and Marchais continues to hold the reins of the party at a time when a debate is about to start in the party. In addition, Fiterman, who was overtaken by a Socialist candidate in the first round of the parliamentary elections in the Val-de-Marne constituency for which he was the outgoing deputy, has been given considerable compensation by the president and premier.

Le Pors, one of Marchais' close collaborators, will certainly intervene in the government's economic debates as Ralite and Rigout will probably do in their sphere of initial authority. Ralite is also close to Marchais and Rigout, political editor of L' ECHO DU CENTRE--the PCF's daily in Limoges--is also a political official in a department, La Haute-Vienne, where competition between the PCF and PS is keen.

The PCF, which defines itself as a mass party and a government party, has opted for the second ambition. The choice was between this course and that of falling back onto the militants and voters who remained faithful on 26 April and 14 June. Some of them will be surprised by the terms of the agreement signed by the PCF, which has agreed, for example, to advocate the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan without prior negotiations, whereas it had supported the intervention in January 1980. The choice made by the PCF leadership, which seems to liquidate at a stroke the policy it has pursued for 3 years, could also lead to calling other things into question which it had so far refused to do. The Central Committee meeting on Thursday and Friday will perhaps reveal whether the PCF leaders regard these as the implications of their decision.

MAN ARRESTED WITH BOMB IN ST PETER'S SQUARE

NC291214 Paris AFP in English 1156 GMT 29 Jun 81

[Text] Vatican City, 29 Jun (AFP)--A man was arrested in St Peter's Square today carrying what appeared to be a rudimentary bomb, the ITALIA [as received] NEWS AGENCY said. The agency said the man had already lit the fuse of the bomb but Vatican guards were able to defuse it before it exploded in the crowded square.

Police Chief Francesco Pasanisi said a 54-year-old Italian from Salerno, southern Italy, had been detained. The man, who was not able to explain why he carried the "bomb" into the Vatican, appeared to be mentally disturbed, the police chief told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE.

On May 13 a man fired three shots at Pope John Paul II during an audience in St Peter's Square.

JUDGES INDICT 80 IN TERRORISM INVESTIGATION

AU291545 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 29 Jun 81

[Text] Florence, 29 Jun (ANSA)--Florence magistrates probing the activities of Prima Linea (Front Line), the extreme leftwing terrorist organization, between 1977 and early 1979 have decided to bring charges against eighty out of the 101 people under investigation.

The magistrates, who compiled sixty thousand pages of testimony and evidence during their investigation into Italy's number two terrorist organization, plan to bring the 42 terrorist suspects now in prison to trial in the autumn and try another 38 at large in absentia.

Among the leading defendants in confinement are Maurice Bignami and Marco Donat Cattin, the son of the former deputy secretary of the Christian Democrat Party, Carlo Donat Cattin. One of the Prima Linea fugitives, whose subversives flanked Red Brigades terrorists in the 70's, is Sergio Segio, thought by police to be a Front Line chief and one of those materially responsible for the slaying of Milan Judge Emilio Alessandrini, shot to death two years ago.

The investigation of the period of Prima Linea activities also encompassed the groups which sprang up around Front Line, Ronde Proletarie (Proletarian Patrols), Squadre Proletarie di Combattimento (Proletarian Combat Squads), Squadre Combattenti Comuniste Proletarie (Proletarian Communist Combat Squads) and Formazioni Comuniste Combattenti (Communist Combat Formations), all especially active at the time in the central Tuscany region.

Among the crimes the Florence magistrates investigated were the slaying of a policeman and the wounding of another policeman during an aborted attempt to free prisoners from the Florence jail, a kidnapping in Tuscany, the kneecapping of a Tuscany regional Christian Democrat politician, ten armed robberies committed to keep the Prima Linea and industry offices, business associations and police and Carabinieri quarters. [As received]

In their 500 pages of charge sheets, the magistrates reported that the Front Line terrorist organization was made up, "for the most part, of university students from the extreme provinces (who were) without the support of their families and became easy prey for the masters of violence." The magistrates also maintained that this terrorist violence was "facilitated by the indifference, and sometimes even the sympathy, of parts of the intellectual community in those years." In their findings, the magistrates identified this violence as "a pernicious expression of anarchic bourgeoisie rebellion."

P-2 LODGE-RELATED ADMIRAL ARRESTED FOR ESPIONAGE

AU291535 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 29 Jun 81

[Text] Spezia, 29 Jun (ANSA)--An Italian rear admiral named in May as a presumed member of the secret Propaganda Two Masonic lodge was arrested Saturday night and charged with the illegal procurement of documents for espionage purposes, it was learned here this morning.

Rear Admiral Vittorio Forgione, the fifty-year-old commander of the Center for the Military Application of Nuclear Energy (CAMEN) at Pisa, was suspended from his duties earlier this month after his name appeared on the list of nearly one thousand presumed members of the lodge headed by fugitive Grand Master Licio Galli.

The P-2 lodge is under investigation as a secret center of economic and political power and an alleged key link in a wide range of criminal activity. The publication of the alleged membership list on May 20 led in a straight line to the collapse of the coalition government headed by the Christian Democrat premier, Arnaldo Forlani, who sought to contain the sweeping scandal with a cabinet shuffle. Three of his cabinet ministers and three undersecretaries were named in the list.

According to information gathered here this morning, after the rear admiral was relieved of his duties and informed that he was under investigation by Milan magistrates, a search of his home led to the discovery there of a top secret document which should not have been taken from CAMEN headquarters. It was also learned that while under questioning in custody this morning, Admiral Forgione took ill and was admitted to the Spezia military hospital.

PCI, SPANISH PARTY CHIEFS CONFER IN ROME

AU291945 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 29 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 29 Jun (ANSA)--Santiago Carrillo and Enrico Berlinguer, respectively the heads of the Spanish and the Italian Communist Parties, met in Rome today to discuss various problems including terrorism, Eurocummunism, EEC policies, the situation in the Mediterranean and relations between European communist and socialist parties. The two party secretaries were flanked by their respective delegations.

In a joint statement approved at the end of today's meeting the two sides stressed among other things, the "urgent" need to launch negotiations on the problem of Euro-missiles. This was in reference to the new cruise missiles that are to be installed in European nations belonging to the Atlantic alliance. Europe and the world does not need new atomic weapons, the statement said.

The two parties came out for the promotion of political solutions to Mideast conflicts and tensions and voiced concern over Israel's "aggressive acts". They stressed the need to recognize the right of the Palestinian people to a national existence and their own state. The two parties also called for a policy of Mediterranean security and voiced solidarity with the Polisario Front and the peoples of Nicaragua and El Salvador.

The joint document came out solidly in favor of Spain's entry into the European Economic Community.

Terrorism was referred to as an enemy extremely dangerous for democracy and a phenomenon which exclusively favored reactionary forces and those who hanker for the days of fascism. The two parties reiterated their commitment to combatting terrorism and coup attempts. Spain and Italy were seen as being particularly vulnerable to such phenomena.

With regard to Eurocommunism, both parties agreed that socialism could be fully achieved in the West only through the development and complete implementation of democracy.

Political observers were particularly interested in that part of the document which defined as "decisive", the function of the dialogue between communist and socialist parties to reach understandings that will allow the construction of a progressive alternative to the European crisis.

This is the first time that a joint statement by the two parties has sketched out such a prospect. This is doubtless the fruit of the new situation created in France by the victory of Francois Mitterrand and the entrance of four Communist ministers into the new French Government led by the Socialist leader.

PARTY AIDES VIEW STATUS OF FRENCH, ITALIAN LEFT

PM291203 [Editorial Report] Milan CORRIERE DELLA SERA in Italian on 24 June 1981 carries statements by PCI Secretariat member Giorgio Napolitano, DC lower house floor leader Gerardo Bianco and PSI Directorate member Claudio Martelli on the recent Socialist successes in France and the results of the recent local elections in Italy. Napolitano asserts that "from France there comes a stimulus to the Italian left to find a balance between the legitimate rivalry in which its various components are involved and the unity that is more necessary than ever in order to win and to govern. The French Communists," he adds, "have paid a very high price for having failed to adequately understand this need, although at the crucial moment, 24 May and 21 June, they did not withhold their own contrubution, which was still decisive to the shared success." Napolitano confirms that the Italian Communists "believe strongly in the need for a constructive dialogue and greater unity between communists and socialists as the lynchpin of an alternative to DC hegemony," but warns the PSI not to set its sights on "a reversal of the balance of forces" within the left. With regard to the inclusion of Communists in the French Government, Napolitano concludes that the fact that in France "discrimination is lapsing and the American's vetoes or 'friendly warnings' are being ignored" is "a lesson in dignity and courage to many parties and political leaders in Italy."

Bianco stresses that "you cannot automatically compare the Italian and French situation" and that in Italy "the hypothesis of a leftwing alternative, for which neither the majority nor the political conditions exist, seems entirely premature and nonexistent."

Martelli hails the Italian Socialists' growing strength in recent years, which, he says, indicates a trend toward "surmounting the bipolarism created by 35 years of DC hegemony over the state and of Communist hegemony within the left." He identifies this "DC-PCI hegemony" as "the structural cause of the Italian political situation, both unstable and static at the same time."

CALVO-SOTELO, GONZALEZ CONFER ON AUTONOMY ISSUES

PM291009 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 21 Jun 81 p 9

[Jose Luis Martinez report]

[Excerpt] Madrid, 20 Jun--Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo and opposition leader Felipe Gonzalez met this morning to negotiate the policy of "consultation" over the autonomy issue. The prime minister met previously with Minister of the Prime Minister's Office Pio Cabanillas, Minister of Territorial Administration Martin Villa and Justice Minister Francisco Fernandez Ordonez. At both meetings, conclusions drawn from the political and economic reports of the commissions of experts headed by Prof Eduardo Garcia de Enterria were discussed. Felipe Gonzalez recently set a 4-week deadline for completing the policy of consultation on autonomies.

The economic report was submitted to the government and the socialist party a few days ago. Today, Saturday, those responsible for autonomy in both bodies have devoted themselves to studying its contents--the government at the Moncloa Palace and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party at a National Institute for the Preservation of Nature chalet 60 km from Madrid.

PSOE SECRETARY GENERAL HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE

PM291408 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 17 Jun 81 p 12

[Excerpt] Madrid, 16 Jun--Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez explained at a 2-hour news conference this morning the contents of the document drafted by his party's federal committee last weekend and [words apparently dropped] by LA VANGUARDIA in yesterday's issue. The socialist leader once more expressed his decision to support a policy of consultation with the Calvo-Sotelo government on state matters (autonomies, the economic crisis and foreign policy), but was very critical of what he regards as a grave shortcoming of this government: not putting forward a detailed program of consultation for this specific historic moment, following the attempted coup and with a violent anticonstitutional minority in the country. The socialist leader was optimistic about the political situation: "Important democratic progress has been made here and we cannot say that we are in a supervised democracy although it is one which is in danger." He urged all the democratic forces to take advantage of that 90 percent of the population who firmly desire peace and coexistence in our country." He added that "the government should make progress in the reforms which will consolidate democracy. We are not seeking to drive it to the wall but to confront it with its responsibility in the consolidation of democracy."

Not a Government Program

The document "The PSOE and the Political Situation" is not a government program, but foundations for action "conceived and discussed from a democratic, and not so much from a party, viewpoint. Solutions are offered for terrorism, the autonomies, economic problems and foreign policy. In his opposition, Felipe Gonzalez referred principally to the consultation with the government. He positively assessed the recently signed tripartite socioeconomic agreement, not only because of its contents "but because those talks have been held, which is in itself a demonstration of democratic coexistence." This was described as a sign of hope, but one which should be extended to other aspects, especially the autonomy issue.

Negotiations With Government Confused

According to Felipe Gonzalez, the negotiations with the government are proceeding in a certain atmosphere of confusion, from which they should emerge. For this reason, he said, "we have offered specific elements and dates of negotiation." He deemed the "Eneterria report" to be valid and stated that July should be the deadline for concluding the autonomy pact, which, in the socialists' opinion, should involve the other parliamentary political forces which so wish. If there are agreements among these forces, "the best thing would be to sit down at a table and sign an agreement about 15 July," he said. He emphasized that the government and the PSOE are the driving force behind the negotiations, but provided there are bilateral talks with the other parties, "since democracy is not the possession of a single political force."

Two Important Aspects

He stated that to tackle the autonomy negotiations effectively, two important aspects should be considered: The reform of the administration and the defining of the municipal councils' role. The autonomy pact should be implemented over the next 2 years and would always be subject to firm negotiations of the representation of citizens in the regional assemblies, which would respect proportionality to the utmost.

Problem of NATO

Felipe Gonzalez stated that Spain is not exploiting all its opportunities in foreign policy. "It is pedestrian, unambitious and without a government wish to share responsibilities with the opposition parties." With respect to the French Socialists' stance of wanting Spain's entry into NATO, he stated that he respects that opinion but because of each country's differences and peculiarities he continues to maintain the undesirability of that entry. He argued that Austria is not a NATO member, but nobody doubts that it is immersed in the defense of the West. He emphasized once more that there are many ways of taking part in the defense of the Western world and not only by being a military member of the Atlantic alliance. He announced that the PSOE will uphold this demand in the election campaign if Spain's entry into NATO is decided by a parliamentary majority. In this connection, he related anecdotally that at a recent meeting with Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca the latter raised this issue with him at the end of the meal. Afterward, the minister told him to consider himself "consulted" on the matter. Felipe Gonzalez declined to say whether he considered this conversation to be one of those "consultations with the political parties" announced by Calvo-Sotelo to discuss this issue, but he intimated that there was little formality on the part of the government if it regarded it in this way.

The "Linaza Affair"

The "Linaza affair" also was broached at the news conference. Felipe Gonzalez declared himself in favor of reviewing the current treaty of extradition with France so that those who commit terrorist actions, murders and robberies in a democratic country will not be regarded as political refugees. However, he took advantage of this question to state that other highly important issues should be examined with France. In addition to cooperation in the antiterrorist struggle, economic and trade and Spain's entry into the Common Market should be discussed. According to Felipe Gonzalez, the strengthening of relations between the two countries should serve as a basis for the antiterrorist struggle, preventing, for instance, the use of southern France as a base for Basque Fatherland and Liberty [ETA] members.

Tragedy Is Not Military, But Civilians Who Use Them

With respect to 23 February, the Socialist leader attached importance to the civilian implications. He explained that there is a campaign of deception concerning the barracks which is not new. He stated that this deception should be attacked directly: "Everybody is aware that the tragedy of Spain's history has not been the military but the civilians who use the armed forces to enforce their political alternatives in one direction or another." He suggested a change of attitude by the government with respect to these issues. The government, he said, should form a hypothesis with the information at its disposal, even at the risk of being mistaken. "The government must not take refuge in the courts' decision. The PSOE wants the events of 23 Febraury to be clarified as soon as possible to counter that deception in which even the king is being maliciously included." "Previously, under Francoism, the duplicators were detected immediately; this is not happening now," he said, half jokingly.

He added that the justification of violence cannot be allowed whether it comes from the right or the left. Felipe Gonzalez stated that another element of deception is to state that the armed forces are being mistreated "when the fact is that they were mistreated in the previous era."

Support for ETA's Military Wing

He said that countries such as South Yemen have served as training grounds for ETA members and that the government knows the origin of weapons used by that terrorist organization. He stated that Belgium is a country where the sale of arms to ETA's military wing is arranged and that it is necessary to enter into negotiations with that nation's government to prevent this. He also said that Palestinian extremist elements have maintained contacts with the ETA organization, that there are countries adjoining the Mediterranean which have served as a base for that organization and that some of them have even financed extreme rightwing or extreme leftwing news media. The socialist leader asserted this to suggest that influential diplomatic action could curb certain forms of international support for the ETA terrorist organization.

UCD CHAIRMAN DISAGREES WITH PSOE DOCUMENT

PM291415 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 17 Jun 81 p 12

[Europe Press report]

[Text] Madrid, 16 Jun--After seeing the document drafted by the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE], "The Current Political Situation," disclosed by Felipe Conzalez this afternoon, Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] Chairman Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun this afternoon explained the party's reaction:

"With respect to the judgment made of the current situation in that document, I disagree with the judgment's assessment, but I agree with some of the viewpoints and especially that we parties must commit ourselves firmly to democracy and to the defense of the system of freedoms against those who seek to attack them or those who become demoralized as soon as they encounter the slightest difficulty."

"On the other hand," Rodriguez Sahagun continued in his statements made in the congress building, "I am not as pessimistic about the current situation as the assessments which the PSOE makes. On the contrary, I believe that in the current situation a good deal of progress has been made in many issues and considerable successes are being achieved by the UCD government."

"We believe that the consultation should take place on the state issues and should not be used as a weapon among parties. We must all renounce party viewpoints because they are viewpoints which must be approached with a sense of the state and of carrying out what is most desirable for the Spanish people."

GOVERNMENT REPORTED READY TO PROSECUTE GUARDSMEN

LD301002 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Excerpts] Four months after the 23 February coup attempt and with the completion of summary proceedings by special examining Judge Gen Jose Maria Garcia Escudero, it now appears the government is prepared to ask for the prosecution of some of the civil guardsmen who took part in the storming of the Congress of Deputies. Specifically, this concerns 11 of the 150 or so who took the most active part in the incident and would probably include those who fired shots into the ceiling of the congress chamber. According to sources at the Defense Ministry--though we have so far not been able to obtain further confirmation--the initiative for such prosecution is reported to have come from Director-General of the Civil Guard Gen Aramburu Topete and with the backing of Defense Minister Alberto Olart.

The summary proceedings concerning the 23 February incident--totaling over 6,000 pages--is now in the hands of the Supreme Council of Military Justice and it is now up to this body to decide whether judicial action is to be extended or whether that already decided upon will suffice. If the latter course is decided upon, the summary proceedings will be put before a plenum of the Supreme Council of Military Justice and a number of steps will follow. This is a long and complex legal process, which would mean that at best the court martial against those involved in the 23 February events would not begin until after the summer and more likely it would be toward the end of the year. Special examining Judge Gen Garcia Escudero said that, for the moment, it is not possible to predict a date.

MINISTRY ANNOUNCES RELEASE OF ARMY OFFICER

LD291030 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1000 GMT 29 Jun 81

[Excerpts] The Information and Public Relations Office at the Defense Ministry this morning issued a communique announcing the release of Major Campos Perez, who was arrested recently. The decision, the note concludes, is without prejudice to the continuation of the hearing to completly clarify the case [the 23 June suspected conspiracy]. This means that all four military men arrested a few days ago for suspected conspiracy to rebellion have been released by the military judicial authority. Only Major Saenz de Ynestrillas has not been released since he is being held by the governmental authority which has applied the antiterrorist law against him. This allows a maximum 10 days detention.

GOVERNMENT OFFERS EXTRA MONEY FOR DEFENSE BUDGET

PM291525 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 24 Jun 81 part 1 p 5

["CB" report: "Government Wants To Give Further Millions to Defense"]

[Text] At the Social Democratic Folketing group meeting on 29 June the government will ask the group for its support for increasing the government's offer to the political parties, which traditionally take part in defense settlements, of a further 36 million kroner to be added to the defense budget.

This means that the total offer from the government to the Liberal Party, Conservative Party, Christian People's Party and the Center Democrats will amount to 80 million kroner, because the government has already made an offer of 44 million kroner to be used to strengthen Sjaelland's defenses.

The extra 36 million kroner would be used for the Home Guard (20 million), and the extension of the life of four motor torpedo boats of the Sealion class (16 million), sources close to the government told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE.

A total defense budget increase of 80 million kroner represents a 1 percent increase over the 1980 defense budget.

However, this move by the government is still far from the wishes of the four nonsocialist parties. The Liberals, Conservatives, Center Democrats and the Christian People's party in their proposals for a new defense settlement, given to the government on 9 June, proposed an increase of 1.8 billion kroner in the defense budget over 4 years, corresponding to an average of around 450 million kroner per year.

The largest part of the 1.8 billion kroner would be used, the nonsocialist parties said, to increase the number of army personnel by 600 per year over 4 years, a total of 2,400. In addition, the four parties want to lease 2 Hawk missile batteries and use an extra 100 million kroner per year in material purchases.

The four parties also want to devote another 20 million kroner to the Home Guard and to extend the life of the four Sealion motor torpedo boats--and the government is now going to ask for the support of its Folketing group for these proposals.

After a cabinet meeting at Marienborg yesterday, Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen confirmed that the government has worked out new proposals to be put to the Social Democratic Folketing group. But he did not want to comment on its details, apart from saying that it resolves the question of Sjaelland's defenses.

He indicated that the government is ready to implement its proposals alone, if this should be necessary.

The nonsocialist parties also consider their proposals to be more or less final. Thus in their proposal, the four parties have refrained from demanding that the number of aircraft and ships in the defense forces be brought up to the level which was recommended in the 1973 defense settlement, and which has up to now been the defense forces' target.

The government and the nonsocialist parties meet for new negotiations 7 July. If this meeting also ends without definite results, the government can either present a new defense bill to the Folketing, or fix the defense forces' budget in the finance bill, which will be passed in December. In neither case will it be possible to muster a majority against the government's proposals.

Editorial Comment

PM290918 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 25 Jun 81 part 1 p 8

[Editorial: "A Little Movement"]

[Text] Slowly, slowly the government is moving away from its zero-solution in the defense settlement negotiations. After the government meeting at Marienborg this week, the prime minister confirmed his offer to the opposition to maintain the present structure of Sjaelland's defenses at a cost of 44 million kroner. And at the same time the government decided to seek the support of the Social Democratic Folketing group next week for a further offer to strengthen the Home Guard and the navy for an additional 36 million kroner. These are small steps, but it is nevertheless a sign of some progress that the government has begun to admit the real need to strengthen Denmark's defenses where they have been weakened. It has been really damaging that the government adhered so long to the position that only the prices and incomes index could have an influence on the size of defense spending, as if inflation were the only significant factor threatening Denmark's security. This was a destructive line to follow, both in relation to our allies and for the cooperation between the old parties which have supported a joint defense policy through these decades, but first and foremost for the effectiveness of Denmark's defenses in the widest sense. It weakened confidence abroad that Denmark was still serious in its approach to defense issues, and it has undermined the fundamental perception of the defense forces' adequacy, which is an essential part of the population's own psychological readiness.

It is not for the sake of the conservatives or the liberals that the government is now going to give way and stand firm on the defense of Sjaelland. But the government has been trying to give the impression that it is because of them that it is now doing so. The government must not be ridiculed, because it is now moving, but it must not think that there is such great satisfaction that it does not need to move further. Much needs to happen before a tolerable and useful foundation for a defense settlement will have been created. The improvements the government is prepared to make to combat wear and tear and to make good the damage done to the defense forces cannot support the defense forces in the coming years. It is unavoidable that the government must find a way out of its present position and must effect an increase in the strength levels of the defense forces.

This modest movement shown by the government may be enough, however, to avert the breakdown of the defense negotiations which had otherwise been predicted for the meeting in early July. The gulf between the nonsocialists' proposals and the government offers is big enough to seem unbridgeable. But out of this sham fight there have at least come some serious consideration of some of the problems facing the defense forces. It has come late, but there is some movement, and the opportunity to find a solution to the problems of army staffing will not be allowed to slip away without further serious efforts. It would be of the greatest value, both at home and abroad, if Danish defense policy once again could be based on agreements lasting several years supported by the four parties who traditionally take part in defense agreements. This would strengthen our own modest contribution with the element of stability which the alliance is accustomed to expect from Denmark and which is also a guarantee of our solidarity.

VISITING IRAQI MINISTER HAILS DEVELOPING TIES

PM291513 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 25 Jun 81 p 5

[ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT report: "Iraqi Trade Minister Talks on Iraqi-British Relations and Trade and Technical Cooperation Agreement"]

[Excerpt] London--Speaking at a conference yesterday on the outcome of his visit to Britain, Iraqi Trade Minister Hasan 'Ali said that the visit resulted in the signing of a trade and technical cooperation agreement between Iraq and Britain after talks lasting over 1 year. The agreement covers cooperation between the two countries in the economic, industrial, agricultural and technological fields. The two sides also agreed to establish a joint high level committee to follow up the implementation of the agreement.

The Iraqi minister praised the development of the political relations with Britain. He said that the destruction of the Tammuz nuclear reactor will not affect Iraq's trade relations with the EEC countries especially since these states have denounced this aggressive act.

However, he added, Iraq will take into consideration the stands of "some states" which tended to support Israel.

In his reply to a question, the Iraqi official denied that his country has diplomatic or economic relations with the United States. He said that the Arabs have the right to confront the aggression in the manner they deem appropriate. He added that there is no official Iraqi decision to use the oil weapon against the United States. He explained that such a measure, which has been proposed by the Arab people, requires study and coordination so that it may be used effectively and correctly.

ISRAELI NAVY TRAINING SHIP ARRIVES IN LIMASSOL

NC291158 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 29 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] Last week an Israeli Navy training ship arrived in Cypriot territorial waters in absolute secrecy, but with the knowledge and complicity of the Cyprus Government. The ship remained 1 mile outside Limassol and Israeli marines came ashore in rubber dinghies at the old jetty at Limassol.

Political circles in Limassol learned of the Israeli ship's visit and justifiably became uneasy. Specifically it is being asked: Why was the Israeli ship's visit permitted? What was the reason for its visit? Why did the ship stay outside the harbor and why was "a landing" made in the old Limassol harbor? Why was this Cypriot-Israeli arrangement not announced?

In addition to these questions, political observers wondered over the meaning of this kind of cooperation with the Zionist regime--especially at a time when an international uproar is directed against it--and the repercussions this could have on Cyprus-Arab relations.

O ANEXARTITOS REPORTS INCREASE IN U-2 PLANES

NC291038 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 29 Jun 81 p 1

[Text] The number of U-2 spy planes stationed at the British bases was recently increased from two to four. This was revealed to O ANEXARTITOS by a well informed source which recalled that the reason for allowing the U-2's to be stationed at the British bases has been eliminated.

The mission of the U-2's was to supervise the cease-fire in Sinai and two planes could carry out this task. Developments since than have rendered the supervision superfluous and these two spy planes should have been withdrawn. Instead, the number of planes has been increased to four and it is obvious that now they are carrying out a different mission. They are spying on the entire area.

TURKISH PAPER OUTLINES POSITIONS FOR NORTH

NC292212 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 20 Jun 81 p 2

["Viewpoint" column by Mumtaz Soysal: "Hindrance"]

[Excerpts] When great interests and great anxieties are at stake, the "great" states tend to belittle the "vital" interests and the "vital anxieties of those states they consider small. They tend to look upon them as mere hinderances. This is the aspect the Cyprus issue presents when compared with interests in the Persian Gulf and anxieties over oil. This is how those who are after new designs connected with these interests and anxieties will look at the Cyprus issue, which they consider to be an obstacle. This is the fundamental reason for the pressure that will be intensified on the Turkish Cypriot community and Turkey in the next few weeks.

In actual fact, nothing is more "vital" or less "vital" once it is considered vital. When people are forced to forgo certain rights, which would be described as "the minimum prerequisite for a decent existence," you cannot be considered as having removed the obstacles. On the contrary, new stumbling blocks are bound to crop up.

From this point of view, it would be useful for everyone concerned to know what cannot be given up in respect to the territorial as well as of constitutional issues in Cyprus.

The first condition for coexistence with the Greek Cypriots to which the Turkish Cypriot community consents is "bizonality." That is, every community should live on a piece of land of its own with marked boundaries. This concept is different from that of "biregionality," which is a mere geographical term the Turkish Cypriots are being forced to accept.

The second inalienable aspect is the need to restrict, at least at the beginning, the powers of the joint organs that will operate the federation to be established. If you start off with extensive powers in resolving issues, at the basis of which lies mutual distrust, you do nothing but make coexistence difficult. That is why a weak federation, which is essential to the Turkish Cypriot community, is a formula that can put the Greek Cypriots at ease too. Joint organs coexisting in Cyprus can gather strength only through the passage of time and through the restoration of an atmosphere of mutual confidence. However, the development of such confidence depends, above all, on the unconditional acceptance from the beginning of the principle of equality, which is absolutely essential as far as the Turkish Cypriot Community is concerned.

For a community which was recently subjected to massacres and to plans of annihilation designed by the "Akritas plan," as well as to surprise attacks and killings, Turkey's protective presence is also inalienable.

When the big problems of the world are taken into account, Cyprus may be seen as a small island in the Mediterranean and the Turkish Cypriot community as a small community. But big or small, since all problems in the world exist for "man," solving issues by crushing people is no solution at all. We have to explain to friend and foe alike that imposing solutions on Cyprus which are neither just nor humane will yield no result other than belittling in the eyes of the people those causes some consider to be great.

Makes Statement

NC292125 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 29 Jun 81

[Text] Mr Averof, deputy prime minister and national defense minister, has made the following statement:

I will be constantly following the Defense Ministry in which, thanks to brilliant associates of all ranks, we have been carrying out useful work for the nation for 7 years. However, I will spend most of my time supervising the economic sector. I know that no quick and spectacular results can be achieved. However, my primary aim is to assist in strengthening the citizen's confidence in the economy. Believing in the principles of private initiative, which have been fruitful wherever they were implemented, we will proceed with skilled associates to strengthen this initiative in all its forms. A spirit of ability and consistency as well as imagination and courage are necessary. Thus, we will overcome our weakness, utilize our great potentials and improve our people's standard of living which, in the last analysis, is the target of our economic policy.

CUMHURIYET Comments

NC271824 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 20 Jun 81 p 1

[Editorial by Nadir Nadi: "Toward the Constituent Assembly"]

[Text] The honorable head of state announced weeks ago that the constituent assembly will meet between 30 August and 29 October and begin work. We know this, but what we do not know is how this assembly will be formed, which social sectors will be represented and by whom. In a way, this assembly will be in the form of a consultative assembly with the National Security Council having the last say, and the constitution that will be submitted to popular vote will carry the weight not so much of the constituent assembly as that of the National Security Council. The form of the constituent assembly may not, therefore, be of much importance in the same way that the 1958 constitution submitted to popular vote in France carried General de Gaulle's stamp. However, our situation is different; that is, our constitution will be proposed not so much by this or that general, but by the National Security Council in general and by the entire armed forces in particular. And when it is approved by the people, it will belong to the Turkish nation.

The Turkish Armed Forces, which intervened on 12 September for the purpose of eradicating anarchy and saving our country from the perils of an internal strife toward which it was rapidly drifting, undoubtedly share our desire to achieve a normal and healthy democratic order. The National Security Council is making efforts in this direction. It is the wish of all to develop such a constitution, which will prevent the rotten regime of the past from coming back and which will enable us to establish a civilized regime respecting human rights and the supremacy of law.

Even if in the form of a consultative assembly, we consider the composition of the constituent assembly important. Naturally, the honorable members of the National Security Council will expect the assembly to provide a text that will comply with the conditions of our country and which will protect rights and freedoms and aim at the eradication of anarchy and separatism without resorting to fantasy. This is possible if knowledgeable, tested members, who attach more importance to the realities of our country than to theoretical ideas, are allowed to be in the majority in the assembly.

To what extent can this desire, which the majority of our people share, materialize?

In a statement made in Amasya the other day, Honorable Evren stressed that none of the parliamentarians who served before 12 Septembe would be allowed to enter the constituent assembly, and that some of them would not even be allowed to participate in the subsequent elections for a while. We wonder whether such a decision will not cast a fairly heavy shadow on the desire we have expressed above? We surely know more or less the reasons which compel the honorable head of state, who also reflects the tendency of the National Security Council, to talk like that. The previous parliament set a very bad example by failing to enact necessary laws, acting as a mere onlooker in the face of anarchy. And far from containing inflation, it pumped it.

It failed to muster a majority on most important issues and was unable to elect a president of the republic for months. But can all the parliamentarians be held responsible for this? Didn't the political parties law, the electoral system, and the government, which ignored the constitution and the ministerial practices, play a role in this? We believe they did, and what is more, to a large extent. We might say that at least a section of the parliamentarians who held office before 12 September are among those who have learned most from the bitter experiences we have gone through. If we miss the opportunity of benefiting from them, as a nation, we fear we may lose in the end.

The matter must be discussed at great length by public opinion before it is too late.

COUNCIL AMENDS LAW ON ATTORNEY GENERAL SELECTION

[Text] Ankara, 26 Jun (AA)--The attorney general will in the future be appointed by the head of state from among five candidates nominated by the justices of the Court of Cassation from among members with at least 8 years of seniority, according to new legislation adopted Thursday by the National Security Council.

Under law No 1730 on the Court of Cassation before the amendment, the attorney general was elected directly by the members of the court.

A temporary article to the new amendment allows the head of state to appoint a new attorney general immediately, waiving the requirement for nomination of five candidates. Attorney generals and their deputies will be appointed for 4 years, and will be eligible for reappointment.

OZAL REVIEWS RELATIONS WITH ISLAMIC COUNTRIES

TA271653 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 27 Jun 81

[Excerpt] The issue of promoting economic and cultural relations between Turkey and Saudi Arabia was discussed in a meeting held in Ankara today. Speaking at the meeting organized by the Turkish-Saudi Arabian Friendship and Cultural Association, State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal said that the high level technology and know-how that Turkey possesses could greatly contribute to the economic development of the Islamic countries.

Ozal added that Turkey's potential in manpower and the scientific field would undoubtedly yield very good results when joined with the capital and resources of the Islamic countries. He recalled that some 40,000 Turkish workers, engineers, technicians and businessmen engaged in economic activities in Libya were contributing to the economic development of that country.

Referring to Turkey's exports to Islamic countries, Ozal said that Turkey was expecting to fulfill its target of increasing its exports by $1.5 billion in 1981, mostly through exports to Islamic countries. Recalling that exports to Islamic countries during the first 4 months of 1981 reached $471 million, Ozal said that this amount was $44 million more than all Turkish exports to Islamic countries in 1979.

Praises Economic Measures

TA271515 Ankara ANATOLIA In English 1455 GMT 27 Jun 81

[Text] Ankara, 27 Jun (AA)--Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal said the current economic policy of austerity was the "one and only way out" for Turkey, and Turkey had "no other alternative" than to go on with it for a few more years. He made the comment in addressing the general assembly of the Association of Shopkeepers and Artisans Credit Guarantee Cooperatives.

He warned if an attempt was made to drop the current economic program halfway, there would be a return to the conditions of late 1979. Inflation had been curbed, he announced, and if everyone could put up with inconveniences for 3-4 more years, everyone would be living in a better and happier Turkey. "I believe in the future of Turkey as I believe in the Almighty," Ozal declared.

OUR RADIO REVIEWS 'FABRICATED' DISK TRIAL

TA261055 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Station commentary]

[Excerpts] Turkish Radio and Television reported yesterday that the prosecutor's office of the Istanbul Military Court has initiated charges, with a demand for the death sentence, against 52 members of the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK]. These include its leader Abdullah Basturk and the members of the executive, administrative, discipline and auditing councils as well as regional representatives of the confederation.

The news report adds that an investigation in connection with 2,000 more workers and union officials is continuing and that charges will be filed as soon as this process is completed. In his indictment, the military prosecutor charges the DISK officials of encouraging workers to strike in a bid to drag the country into an atmosphere of anarchy, and with inciting the people against the existing order.

This fabricated suit filed against the DISK officials and members is a part of the aggressive campaign directed against the progressive forces in our country accompanied by anticommunist provocations, in the wake of the indictment against the NAP.

In its statement dated 12 May, the Central Committee of the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] pointed out that the most reactionary profascist forces both within and outside the armed forces would soon undertake a vindicative action in a bid to condemn the trial of the fascist NAP to oblivion and try to provide the acquittal of the members of this nest of murderers. Mass arrests and tortures conducted in the country at large during the last weeks, and now this trial undertaken against the DISK officials and members, have proved the veracity of the TCP views.

Today more than ever, heightening solidarity with the DISK officials and members, as well as all the prosecuted and tortured progressives and democrats has become a burning issue. This is the main objective of all those who oppose dragging our country into imperialist adventures and who support the punishment of the fascist NAP as it deserves.

Hands off the DISK officials and members! Let us not permit the trial of the NAP to go into oblivion! An end to the prosecution and torture of the democrats!

Together with the noncommissioned officers and officers who defend the national interests, and together with all antifascist forces and the people, let us foil the aggression of those who want to revenge the trial against the NAP.

VOTCP: PARTY SENDS CONDOLENCE MESSAGE TO KKE

[Text] Dear comrades: We share the grief of Greek Communists and the Greek working class and people following the death of Comrade (Apostolos Grodos). Comrade (Grodos) struggled, from the beginning, in the ranks of the KKE for national independence, democracy and socialism and served in the highest and most responsible administrative organs of the KKE. He was the honorary president of the KKE. Until the last moment, he remained loyal to Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. (Grodos) was the closest friend of peoples struggling for their national liberation and specifically of our people and of the Turkish working class.

We--the Turkish Communists--will always remember Comrade (Grodos) with respect. We extend once more our condolences to you and his relatives on the death of Comrade (Grodos).

COUNCIL PROPOSES CONFERENCE ON AFGHANISTAN

NC301452 Paris AFP in English 1441 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] Luxembourg, 30 Jun (AFP)--The European Council today proposed a two-stage international conference on Afghanistan, after adopting a resolution noting "with deep concern" that Soviet troops remain in occupation and that the "sufferings of the Afghan people continue to increase."

As the heads of government of the ten European Economic Community members wound up a two-day summit, the Foreign Office confirmed in London that Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington would go to Moscow on Monday to discuss the EEC proposal.

The Moscow discussions are at the invitation of Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko. Lord Carrington takes on the chairmanship of the European Council tomorrow.

The text of the statement on Afghanistan said that the situation was a major cause of international tension and the council believed that the time was ripe for a new political initiative.

The text reads: "The European Council proposes that in due course the permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, Pakistan, India and the secretary-general of the U.N. and the secretary-general of the Islamic Conference, or their representatives, be invited to participate in stage one of the conference."

The council suggested that the first session would work out "international arrangements designed to bring about the cessation of external intervention and the establishment of safeguards to prevent such intervention in the future, and thus to create conditions in which Afghanistan's independence and non-alignment can be assured."

Stage two would be attended by the participants in stage one plus "representatives of the Afghan people."

On the Middle East, the council noted that it had studied a report and personal comments from outgoing Council President Cristoph Van der Klaauw, who recently returned from a round of consultations in Mideast capitals.

The council issued a statement reiterating its commitment to the search for a peaceful solution and added that each European government would continue "appropriate contacts" with all parties concerned, including the United States, to determine what useful contribution Europe could make.

The council made a special reference to the June 7 Israeli attack on Iraq's nuclear research station at Tammuz, adding that Europe could only subscribe to the resolution adopted in the U.N. Security Council. This resolution, adopted unanimously, sternly condemned the raid as an act of aggression.

Turning to Lebanon, the EEC statement said that the council had noted "with interest" results achieved by a four-party Arab committee. The statement hoped that the next meeting of the committee--grouping Lebanon, Syria, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait--would bring a genuine national reconciliation in the war-torn east Mediterranean state.

The European Council noted that such a reconciliation of Christians and Moslems, leftists and conservatives, was the only sound basis for internal security and stability in the region.

Moving to Asia, the EEC statement said that the "European Council recalls the position it has adopted in favour of an independent and neutral Cambodia with a genuine representative government, free from any foreign military presence and maintaining friendly relations with all the countries of the region."

It added: "Convinced that a genuine solution to the problem of Cambodia will be possible only on the basis of the United Nations General Assembly resolution 35/6, the Ten declare their readiness to contribute to the success of the international conference on Cambodia called by the U.N. secretary general" for July 13.

"The European Council noted the future presidency's intention to be represented there by its foreign minister."

Islamic Conference Support

PM301623 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 Jun 81 p 6

[Excerpt] The Islamic Conference "supports the proposal of Europe's Ten to hold an international conference to guarantee Afghanistan's independence," Secretary General of the Islamic Conference Habib Chatti said on 24 June in Paris. "It is not a matter of neutralizing Afghanistan," he added, "it is a matter of having guarantees from all sides concerning,specifically the USSR, the United States, Pakistan and China, that they will refrain from intervening and will observe the country's independence.

"We believe," Chatti added, "that an Afghan national conference could precede this international conference so that all sides in Afghanistan could reach agreement on organizing free elections in the country, following the Soviet troops' withdrawal." However, the Islamic Conference secretary general said: "We are still in a stalemate situation since the USSR persists in saying that its intervention was legal, having taken place at the request of a legitimate government. Everything now depends on Moscow and we hope that the Soviets will accept the international conference advocated by Europe."

MITTERRAND, SCHMIDT COMMENT ON LUXEMBOURG SUMMIT

French President's Statement

LD302024 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Statement by President Francois Mitterrand following the 30 June session of the EEC summit meeting held in Luxembourg--recorded]

[Text] I have noted that Europe must take on a new lease. I am not alone in my thinking. It is now more necessary than ever that Europe widen its views. It is a vast, ambitious reconstruction corresponding exactly to the needs of our time.

Within this reconstruction, France can play the part reserved for it by history, but this must not authorize one to think that France would not be in a position, would not be determined, to play the part which pertains to it in fields where it has opinions--which are numerous. I think that one can harmonize these two obligations--obligations of solidarity. France is inside Europe and intends to participate fully in it and to act in accordance with this historic purpose and to assert itself--which I have endeavored to do myself throughout today.

German Chancellor's Interview

DW010813 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1800 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Reporter Martin Schulze interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Luxembourg--recorded]

[Text] [Question] French President Francois Mitterrand today was the dominating figure at the summit meeting. He strengthened the German federal chancellor by unequivocally supporting NATO's dual decision and he stuck with his vision regarding a completely new social effort in the European Community. I asked Helmut Schmidt whether the spiritual climate in Europe will change due to the French Socialists?

[Answer] I am careful with my prognoses. I feel that many people in France expect many things to change there. And some things will probably change, not immediately and from one day to the other because some things need time, need years--but probably some things will change in France.

[Question] The French can probably be won over more easily for protectionism. The French can be won over at the expense of quick growth for the support of the socially weak. These aren't your positions. In other words, disagreement is inevitable in West Europe, or don't you see that?

[Answer] I don't see it yet. If Mitterrand wants to create new jobs for hundreds of thousands of people, I do not see how that should lead to renunciation of growth in the country. If it works, it will lead to stronger growth.

SCHMIDT DISCUSSES NATO DECISION, DISARMAMENT

DW301025 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 30 Jun 81 pp 9-10

[Interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt by chief editor Werner Holzer and Bonn correspondent Eghardt Moerbitz in Bonn; date not given]

[Text] FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU (FR): Mr Federal Chancellor, you have tied your political existence to the fact that the Americans will negotiate with determination on arms limitation. And you are convinced that this isn't foolhardy. In the meantime, however, President Reagan said at West Point that the question is what kind of arms the United States should produce and not whether one should renounce weapons for the sake of treaties and agreements. My question is: Isn't it almost foolhardy in view of the limited possibilities of the German federal chancellor to exert influence on both world powers, to base your political existence on hope?

Schmidt: I have tied my government office in a two-fold manner to the so-called dual decision. First, everybody in the Federal Republic has understood for quite some time that I cannot bear the responsibility for it and that I will have to resign if the first half of the dual decision is abandoned, namely, the intended U.S. counterarmament in accordance with the Eastern armament lead involving SS-20 missiles and Backfire bombers. I have made it clear to the whole world that I cannot bear the responsibility if the second part of the so-called dual decision is not handled seriously, if Washington and Moscow would not seriously negotiate with the aim of limiting the number of medium-range missiles and--in a theoretical case--bringing it down "to zero."

You now ask if it was foolhardy to tie my political fate or the fate of this coalition government with both parts of the dual decision. My answer is no. This was considered long ago, thought through, checked and confirmed. I also believe today that I could not bear the responsibility of staying in office if the first or the second part of the dual decision is rendered worthless. In such a case others would have to be found to bear the responsibility for this. Simultaneously, I am aware that the announcement of a possible resignation in the direction of both addresses would bear considerable political weight.

FR: Just to continue these thoughts, Mr Federal Chancellor, it is somewhat difficult to understand U.S. policy. Lawrence Eagleburger stated recently in Bonn that he is slowly losing his patience because he has to stress over and over again that America is determined to seriously negotiate with the Soviet Union. Shortly thereafter Eugene Rostow, President Reagan's appointed disarmament director, said that the SALT II round could begin in 9 months at the earliest, which would be in March 1982, because what to negotiate with the Soviets is still not known. I add that because the SALT process and the medium-range arms naturally are linked with each other from a European point of view, but actually even more so, because one has the feeling that this new U.S. Government makes it sometimes difficult even for good friends to believe at the moment in its will and ability to negotiate. Do you see that differently?

Schmidt: I do not have the slightest reason to doubt the U.S. President's will to negotiate. On the contrary, I am convinced of this will to negotiate. I cannot rule it out. However, individual statements of secondary people are creating unfortunate effects because of their misleading formulations. Eugene Rostow, whom you just quoted, has made general statements on the SALT process, as far as I understand it, and not on negotiations on medium-range missiles, which are not within his competence at present, by the way, but which are being prepared by another U.S. authority, namely, the State Department.

FR: You assume not only the will to negotiate exists, but that the U.S. Government will be able to negotiate this year.

Schmidt: A new President, a new parliamentary majority, a new government, a completely new administration need considerable time in every world democratic state to make concrete preparations for the handling of the tasks they have found waiting for them. That must be also conceded to a new U.S. administration. By the way, not only are the economic, physical or geological resources of the United States almost inexhaustible, but the spiritual resources are also enormous. It is a nation with many talents and experiences. No doubts exist at all that the Americans will be in a position to negotiate factually and that negotiations will begin this year.

FR: Isn't it foolhardy to create the impression that a zero option is still possible?

Schmidt: I would not like to create the impression of foolhardiness. I just spoke very clearly of an ideal theoretical case. I don't want to rule it out. But it is not likely to take place. The Russians have deployed too many SS-20 missiles, namely, almost 230 in the meantime. A new one is added every week. Everyone has three warheads and it is not easy to imagine that they would scrap all of them. But after all, I want to add that the Soviets once accepted the commitment to scrap several hundred missiles which they had built.

FR: When was that?

Schmidt: In connection with SALT II, at the time the two parties to the treaty, the United States and the Soviet Union, figured out a balance of intercontinental weapons through negotiations. It turned out that the Russians had several hundred missiles too many and they were ready to scrap them. Unfortunately, this treaty has never been ratified. This shows that both world powers, despite their tough statements, deal with each other very carefully. However, there is one exception. The Russians to date have not fulfilled their obligation to scrap these several hundred intercontinental missiles and, God knows, I cannot blame them for that. On the contray, I understand them. Because the treaty has not been ratified, they don't know if the other side eventually will cease to observe the treaty.

FR: Mr Federal Chancellor, in the past weeks, your book "Defense or Retaliation" has often been quoted. You were asked why your assessment of nuclear missiles has changed since 1961, regarding, for instance, their stationing on the land or at sea.

Schmidt: You are talking about a book published 20 years ago. At the time, this type of medium-range weapons did not exist at all. By the way, intercontinental missiles did not exist either. We were at the beginning of the missile age. Compared to those we had at the time, the present medium-range weapons are mobile, mobile partly at sea, mobile partly on the land. So today they can be here, tomorrow they can be 250 km away in a clearing surveyed in advance, and on another day somewhere else. That holds true for both sides. By the way, I have commented on these subjects several times in the past 20 years. I wrote a second book in 1969, its title is "Strategy of the Balance," and it has the significant subtitle "German Peace Policy and the World Powers." Like the first, this book anticipates a policy which has actually been carried out by the social-liberal coalition in the past 12 years.

It is a policy which seeks to stabilize the balance of military options through our own defense but especially also through arms limitation treaties and which on the basis of the balance undertakes an effort for cooperation, cooperation between the West and the East. This is the core of detente policy which began under Walter Scheel and Willy Brandt and has since been continued. Naturally, it is possible only if the two world powers permit it, meaning, strictly speaking, if they want to have it that way. Meanwhile, the balance of military options has become an indispensable requirement for the stabilization of global peace. It is a requirement which is not sufficient as such. There must be many other things added to it. But this requirement is necessary and it applies to intercontinental weapons, it applies to medium-range weapons and it applies in particular also to conventional armed forces, conventional armed forces also here in Europe.

FR: Isn't a balance absurd, given the mass of nuclear arms?

Schmidt: The idea of the balance which lately has been intellectually attacked by some, also is an urgently necessary idea because otherwise treaties between the West and the East on arms limitation are not conceivable. No one can ever negotiate and then ratify a treaty by recognizing that the other world powers may be stronger, much stronger than he. An approximate balance is necessary so that the policy of arms limitation can remain possible. An approximate balance is a key idea, as it were, of every realistic and seriously pursued arms control diplomacy. By the way, you also find it in a joint statement signed by Soviet General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev and me here in Bonn in May 1978. It expressly mentions an approximate balance--both of nuclear and of conventional weapons. I stress, in the context in which you asked me, nuclear weapons as well.

FR: Let me ask you again because obviously it is very much on people's minds in our country: Why not station these medium-range nuclear missiles, not in the densely populated countries of West Europe, but at sea--don't you see this possibility any more? And if you don't, why?

Schmidt: It is known publicly that in the discussion within NATO's special work group, which preceded the dual decision, we seriously and expressly advocated stationing the U.S. medium-range weapons, which are to be deployed in the West by the end of 1983, on ships. We did not succeed with this idea. By the way, it was not really backed by the other European partners either. We were the only ones. There are several reasons for it. One of the reasons is that it would have become much more expensive.

I would consider it precarious to change it now. The counterarguments produced at the time still exist, but a change at this point naturally would complicate matters vis-a-vis the Soviet Union because the degree of vulnerability of sea-based mobile missiles is smaller than the degree of vulnerability of land-based mobile missiles. I am aware that there also are different views in this respect. They also all played a role at the time. But considering the present assessment of the situation by the Soviet leadership, I would not find it reasonable at this point to complicate the situation even more and to produce the impression that a change was planned to the disadvantage of the future strategic position of the Soviet Union.

Finally, we must also take into account that sea-based missiles--as a counterweight to the land-based SS-20 missiles--would very much complicate arms control negotiations.

I think it extremely important to place yourself in the other side's position time and again in dealing with all these problems and their solution. The West must place itself in the Soviet position time and again. But the Soviet Union must also place itself in the position of the West and the Germans whose cities and whose small country are threatened by the Soviet SS-20 missiles, without our having given them a reason for it. I also ask my Soviet interlocutors time and again to do that.

This is one of the lessons, I think, the many lessons that must be drawn from World War II. Just 40 years ago Hitler invaded the Soviet Union. If the horrors of the past are not to happen again--and they must not happen again--everybody must always be prepared to consider the same thing twice. But the second time from the angle of the other side.

By the way, I consider it extremely dangerous for the Federal Republic to be given a direct share in the control over the use of nuclear arms. We can and must not become a nuclear power or half a nuclear power. That would be a threat to world peace. Because it would trigger so much fear with our neighbors that this fear alone would constitute a threat to peace.

FR: Do you share the apprehension of your vice chancellor that sea-based arms could create the danger of the Federal Republic becoming involved in conflicts outside Europe?

Schmidt: I don't want to make a detailed statement on sea-based arms. Many things must be considered in this connection. Instead, however, I want to quote a general consideration also from the book "Defense or Retaliation," from an additional chapter I wrote in 1965 for the third edition:

"From the standpoint of German interests, the indispensable tasks of the alliance can be summarized in three brief formulations:

"1. Lasting interlocking of the European partners with the United States for common defense of freedom;

"2. Preservation of the political and military effectiveness of the Western defense alliance, including a uniform, rationally conceived military strategy;

"3. Facilitation of a uniform, politically and militarily rationally conceived strategy of arms control policy.

"These three tasks can be solved in the long run only if and as far as the legitimate interests of the alliance partners can be brought to accord and if this accord can be made perceivable to all partners."

These are the core sentences, and today, some 16 years later, I could also formulate them. They do not take into consideration individual arms, missiles, ships or planes, but they are core sentences formulated in the German interest. These are core sentences, if I may put it that way, representing the outward conditions of German detente policy vis-a-vis the East, core sentences formulating the conditions under which German detente policy toward the East could be pursued from 1969 up to this date.

FR: If I remember correctly, you recently mentioned U.S. reservations that a decision in favor of sea-based arms would rule out the European atomic risk, so to speak, increasing the U.S. risk accordingly, so that the United States alone would then bear the atomic risk.

Schmidt: I think, Mr Holzer, that the formulations you are using here are going a bit too far. It is correct that in the U.S. side's rejection of sea-based arms, the motive of a mutual linkage of risks has played a role--American and European risks.

In connection with this issue, I would like to cite one more of my quotations, which is also 16 years old. It says: "If it is correct that the common interests must be perceivable, this will be obviously most easily achieved if analyses and prognoses will be worked out together and not announced one-sidedly."

That is more thoroughly explained in following chapters. This wisdom is naturally still valid today. The Americans cannot and do not want to say one-sidedly what has to be done. But the Germans cannot do it either. Therefore, many details were discussed for months prior to the dual decision in order to find a common acceptable compromise.

FR: Henry Kissinger, the former secretary of state, once pointed out to the Europeans, after quitting his office, that the U.S. nuclear umbrella could possibly not be as available in the mid-1980's as it used to be, mentioning in this connection the necessity for a change in the field of medium-range missiles. That was perhaps the beginning of Europe's apprehension that detachment ideas existed at least in the United States. Don't you see them?

Schmidt: This concern has existed for more than 20 years on both sides. There are Europeans, political or strategic thinkers to be taken seriously, who are concerned that America could detach itself from Europe. On the other hand, however, there are American analysts to be taken seriously, who fear that Europe could detach itself from America. But there are always politicians on both sides who have said that one should not become too dependent on the other. An outstanding example of the latter category was Charles de Gaulle who wanted Europe to be considerably independent of America, at least he wanted France to be considerably independent vis-a-vis America and all others, and he implemented this. But it was also De Gaulle who stressed most naturally at the moment of a deep crisis between the East and the West, namely, during the Cuban missile crisis in October 1962, to U.S. President Kennedy, France's loyalty to the alliance and its preparedness to fulfill its alliance duties, speaking for France as the French state president. "If there will be war, I will stand on your side," he said.

It means that the greatest European skeptic, with regard to a close tie of the fates of both continents, tied in an emergency the fate of France to that of America. De Gaulle's example in the Cuban crisis shows that the independence fears and hopes, which were worked out reasonably in a study, must not be considered absolute.

FR: May I take up the keyword "fears?" In the discussion, including at the Protestant church congress in Hamburg, it is feared that nuclear war in Europe has become possible again or become possible at all.

Schmidt: That's a wrong formulation. It has always been possible and statesmanlike wisdom and restraint have always been necessary on both sides, in the West and the East, to prevent an outbreak of war. Soviet missiles have been targeted on Europe since 1956. The first Soviet missiles were unable to reach America. They were only able to reach Europe and there have always been Russian missiles with a European range. Theoretically, they could always be used in a war in Europe and this means that the Soviet side has always had weapons for a nuclear war in Europe.

By the same token, the Western side since the 1950's has had nuclear weapons in Europe for a war against the Soviet Union. This has been so far 2 and a 1/2 decades.

FR: Mr Federal Chancellor, you mentioned and quoted Charles de Gaulle. We now have a new, a very different French president. How do you see the situation in the Western alliance following this French election decision which surprised many? Above all, do you think it could have effects on the security policy?

Schmidt: I believe it will have the greatest effects on French domestic policy, on French economic and social policies. Possibly some effects on France's Third World policy will also manifest themselves clearly.

I believe the effects on the French foreign policy, as far as East-West policy is concerned, the effects on the French security policy will be relatively small. I expect much continuity in the French foreign and security policy, including the French disarmament policy which has taken a much more continuous course from De Gaulle and Pompidou, from Giscard d'Estaing to this day than some American analysts have claimed or feared time and again. I don't see that this will change very much.

On the contrary, my first talk with Francois Mitterrand also confirmed this assessment emotionally. The direct impression in a talk is bound to play an important role, in addition to the result of one's own analysis.

As for NATO's dual decision, Mitterrand as president said three remarkable things. First, that the Soviet SS-20 armament is about to sensitively disturb the balance in Europe; second, that France because of the independence of its nuclear forces and because it is not a member of NATO--a member of the alliance but not a member of the military organization--as before will not participate in the implementation of the dual decision; but, third, that France is very much interested in the dual decision being implemented in the interest of preserving the balance. These are remarkably clear statements which have not yet received due attention in Germany.

FR: Do you consider it supportive of your argument on counterarmament that Communist government members in Paris now practically shield counterarmament, although they do not expressly approve of it?

Schmidt: No, I don't think a German federal chancellor needs the French communists to confirm his view. But it is interesting enough that four French Communists have become members of the Mauroy government on the basis of their recognizing the dual decision and on the basis of their condemning the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. That is extremely interesting.

FR: Is it correct, Mr Federal Chancellor, that during your visit in Washington, you advised President Reagan to receive the new French president with open arms?

Schmidt: I didn't give recipes or advice, but my American host could not doubt that the European governments would meet the new French Government with open arms. And President Reagan in his talks with me left no doubt that he also would do that.

FR: Back to us, Mr Federal Chancellor. Western observers in Moscow now are concerned or under the impression that the Soviets--rightly or wrongly--no longer expect to enter into serious negotiations with the Americans in the foreseeable future. What can you do? What can the Federal Republic do to counteract Moscow's impression?

Schmidt: The apprehension spread by Soviet propaganda, indicating that the West isn't striving for serious negotiations, will not be published in a few months because negotiations will be underway by then. That can be left to itself, I have no fears in this respect. By the time General Secretary Brezhnev visits here in Bonn in late fall in response to the work visit Mr Genscher and I made to Moscow last summer, no doubts will exist with regard to the seriousness of negotiating.

FR: What significance does Willy Brandt's visit to Moscow have in this connection?

Schmidt: The visit must be seen in a greater and wider context. It is certainly not Willy Brandt's task to eliminate the doubt of the Soviets, of Soviet propaganda, doubt regarding the serious will of the Americans to negotiate. Willy Brandt is not going there as a spokesman for the U.S. Government. Willy Brandt goes to Moscow, after being carefully informed about all current conditions and considerations by the German Federal Government and high officials of the alliance, as one of those West Europeans whose basic approach to the balance and treaty policy is beyond any doubt. He goes there as a man who has demonstrated that he is in a position to see the Soviet interests, simultaneously, however, also as a man who has demonstrated that he will not ignore the interests of his own people and state.

In other words, he will have to answer many questions because he will face the Soviet general secretary as a particularly credible West European witness, not just questions pertaining to the seriousness of the will to negotiate. And he will answer many questions. He doesn't go there to tell the Soviets many things they would like to hear, but he goes there to say what is true, what is necessary. And Moscow may not want to hear some of it.

FR: The CDU-CSU has voiced reservations...

Schmidt: I find that the natural way in which West German politicians go to France for talks or to England and particularly the United States or other Western states should also develop in the course of the years vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, not only vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, but also--and we have made quite some progress there--vis-a-vis relations with the People's Republic of Poland, Hungary or other East European states, and hopefully also vis-a-vis the GDR in the course of the years.

Seen in this connection, I consider the Moscow visit of an outstanding political leader, which Willy Brandt doubtlessly is in the FRG, as urgently desirable because it will contribute to normalization.

FR: You just mentioned Poland. All the things we have discussed so far are somewhat overshadowed by developments in Poland, or could be very much overshadowed by these developments if political tension continues to worsen in Poland and if the economic situation worsens even more. As far as I know, Arthur Burns, the U.S. ambassador to Bonn, has just urged the Federal Government to support Poland financially even more than before. How do you see that?

Schmidt: At the moment, our financial means of assistance are as good as exhausted. We have helped very much. First of all, there were the German business banks, but our state has also given high guarantees which go now at the expense of the German taxpayer, at the expense of the federal budget. I don't want to name the sums at the moment, but they are considerable. In addition, we must make quite some effort to offset the foreign trade balance of our country. We have an extraordinary deficit.

Ambassador Burns, who will take office in Bonn next week, is an expert on problems related to payments balances and the international credit system. When he comes here, he will see that we presently live under extremely strained circumstances regarding our international payments. We pay to the European Community 5 or 6 million marks more than we get from it. In addition, we pay roughly the same amount in development aid. We make huge payments for NATO, for Poland and Turkey--to mention but a few examples.

One must keep all thus in mind to know that the possibilities of German financial aid for other states actually are limited.

I want to say a word about Arthur Burns with whom I have a cordial relationship and with whom I worked very well when he headed the U.S. central bank, the Federal Reserve Board. I am very happy at this personnel decision by President Reagan.

FR: And the political situation in Poland?

Schmidt: I don't want to additionally burden the political situation at this point by commenting on it.

FR: Mr Federal Chancellor, at the recent Protestant church congress in Hamburg, you talked to many young people. You talked to them and with them. And you certainly felt, not only there but also in other places how widespread the sorrows, the fears and concerns of young people in our country, and possibly not only in our country, are today. My question: How can politicians--you yourself and others--really establish geniuine contacts with this much younger generation.

Schmidt: Some parents obviously have the same problem. And some teachers obviously have it. There are many persons who have such problems. I am not sure whether I am among these many. This year, I had many discussions with young people, in small and large circles. Many people likely saw the television discussion with many mostly young people at the Trinitarian church in Hamburg-Altona.

I always think that we must try to answer their questions, to answer them honestly, even at the risk of not being convincing, even at the risk of being unwelcome. If a thing is wrong, we must answer with no. Conversely, if a question is asked rightly, it must be answered with yes, even if the one who answers doesn't like it and gives the answer unwillingly. If a question is asked rightly, it must be answered with yes.

We have known since Sartre, Freud and Jung that there is always anxiety among men and even without psychology, we would know that there is always anxiety. The whole of the Christian promise would not have its great significance unless there had always been fear in mankind, fear which is confronted with hope. So basically, it is a deeply human category, given man by the creator, to be in fear.

It is important not to let fear have the upper hand. I am 63 now and I have no qualms about confessing that I was afraid very often in my life. The older you are, the less afraid you are, but we really were afraid, above all, during the time of the Third Reich and the war. If there is a basic disposition toward fear, it makes use of certain release mechanisms to enter into conscience. These mechanisms can be different. There is also the phenomenon of the anxiety of one person communicating itself to another person. Anxiety has an infectious effect, just as euphoria can be infectious.

In our times when fear manifests itself regarding a concrete problem--fear of a nuclear powerplant, for instance, or the armament problem or insufficiently agreed arms controls--talking with each other and approaching the problems with sensible arguments, questions and answers help. But lastly, the only thing which helps against fear is the pastor and in the last instance confidence in God.

In a way, politicians sometimes also have pastoral tasks. There is no doubt about that. But this is not their real task and they are not the most qualified for it. But they must face the debate with those who are afraid. And as for me, I do that.

CHANCELLOR COMMENTS ON PCF'S NATO STANCE

LD302016 Hamburg DPA in German 1624 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] Hamburg, 30 Jun (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt finds it "quite remarkable that, under pressure from the French president, the French Communists, with regard to NATO's counterarming dual decision, have adopted a position that is far to the right of the German Young Socialists."

Schmidt was replying to a north German radio interview today to the question of whether, given the fact that the French Socialists "are placed somewhat to the left of the German Social Democrats," he would mediate in the EEC and possibly try to see that the French Socialists adapted to the maxims of German Social Democratic policy. Schmidt first of all described the concepts of "left" and "right" as being no longer clearly defined and said, following a reference to the French Communists' tolerance of the NATO dual decision: "There is nothing to mediate about there."

SPOKESMAN CITES SUPPORT FOR BRANDT'S MOSCOW VISIT

LD301104 Hamburg DPA in German 0958 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 30 Jun (DPA)--The Federal Government supports SPD Chairman Willy Brandt's visit to Moscow as useful and a chance for bettering the difficult position between East and West. Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl said today in Bonn that Brandt has the unconditional support and trust of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and the entire federal cabinet. The chancellor and the foreign minister repeatedly said in talks with Brandt, and on other occassions, that they consider his talks with the Soviet leadership at the present time to be useful as well as in the German and joint Western interest. Referring to the chancellor's meetings with Brandt before the SPD leader's journey, Ruehl spoke of complete, clear and binding agreement.

POEPPEL SEES COMBAT READINESS IMPAIRED BY TORNADO

LD301238 Hamburg DPA in German 1039 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 30 Jun (DPA)--Army Inspector Lt Gen Hans Poeppel is concerned about the future fighting ability of the armed forces. Speaking to the commission of inquiry on the Tornado aircraft in Bonn today, Poeppel pointed to the serious consequences of financial problems with the new fighter plane as regards the army's combat readiness. The army has had to sacrifice some of its budget to the air force.

According to Poeppel, special problems exist in maintenance, purchasing, munitions, infrastructural measures and recruitment of volunteers. Poeppel did not want to give details in the open session. Tommorrow commission members will question the general on these points behind closed doors.

CHEYSSON READY TO STEP UP NUCLEAR CONTROLS

PM301355 Paris LE MONDE in French 28-29 Jun 81 p 3

[Text] Following Iraqi President Saddam Husayn's call for an Arab nuclear bomb to be produced and Moshe Dayan's statement that Israel is capable of building a nuclear bomb, [External Relations Minister] Cheysson said on 26 June on French Television Channel 1 that these two pieces of information "sent shivers down his spine." "This threat to build nuclear bombs, of nuclear building in countries which are actually presently at war is dangerous," he added.

On the problem of nuclear cooperation with Iraq, Cheysson said: "We will have no nuclear cooperation which risks becoming military; we will double, triple and quadruple the controls."

PCF AIDES VIEW APPOINTMENT OF COMMUNIST MINISTERS

PM301044 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 25 Jun 81 p 3

[Text] PCF Central Committee Secretaries Paul Laurent and Maxime Gremetz were interviewed yesterday morning by France Inter and Europe 1 respectively.

Paul Laurent stressed "the fairly considerable importance of the presence of four Communists in the government." He next refuted the argument that the Communists were only granted "technical" ministries.

"We were keen to have a ministry of state and we are happy to have secured it," he said, adding: "We participated fully in the government debate. As for so-called technical ministries, they concern decisive areas of national activity embracing millions of wage earners and are of interest to tens of millions of French people. Therefore, I believe that the Communist ministers' action will greatly influence French people's actual lives. This constitutes both an honor and an obligation for us."

With regard to the political agreement on government solidarity, Paul Laurent said that "on issues such as Afghanistan and Poland we reached a government compromise between Communists and Socialists without either of the parties at all abandoning its positions."

Sovereign Country

"On Poland, for instance," he said, we have maintained exactly the same position for months. We simply feel that in the situation which characterizes that country it would be best to allow it calmly to settle its own affairs."

With regard to the rate of social transformations, Paul Laurent pointed out that "workers who organize themselves into trade unions are totally independent and masters of their own actions.

"France is a sovereign country which governs as it wishes even if it does not please the U.S. Government," he replied to a question about Washington's anxiety about the presence of Communist ministers.

He discussed the PCF's internal debate, "which will be neither facilitated nor complicated by the Communists' entry into the government." "It will," he added, "be an important element in all the decisions that we will reach on all recent evolutions, but the debate must go on. It will go on and we will take into account every aspect of recent happenings."

Maxime Gremetz stressed that "in the great event that has taken place and which is recognized as such, especially by the workers, the Communists played a very decisive role.

"The presence of Communist ministers is the logical and natural conclusion," he added. "And it is also included in the decisions of our 12th and 13th congresses. We explained that there could be no real change or implementation of a different policy without union of the left and without Socialist and Communist participation in the government."

Personality of Each Party

"We decided democratically on who should participate in the government," he added. "We believe that PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais has much to do. We chose what seemed to us to be the best solution... There must be a distribution of tasks and that suits me entirely."

As for "people's fears," as suggested by journalists, Maxime Gremetz replied: "The only thing to fear is the failure to effectively implement the promises and the policy ratified by the country, with the Communist ministers' active help.

"We are Communists and intend to remain so," he concluded. "With the Socialists, we strove together to find government stances which preserve the personality of each party.

"We are also people who respect universal suffrage and promises. We have always proved this. Well, the Communist ministers will implement and keep these promises."

L'HUMANITE CRITICIZES BUSH, STATE DEPARTMENT

PM301520 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 26 Jun 81 p 1

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "Our Ambition"]

[Text] When U.S. Vice President Bush decided to officially visit to France, he clearly did not foresee that, on the very day he arrived in Paris, he would hear of the inclusion of four Communist ministers in the government.

This news, it is said, did not please him, but we can hardly hold this against him since everyone has the right to profess the political opinions of his choice: That is the law of democracy.

While Bush displayed relative discretion on this occasion, as I emphasized yesterday, limiting himself to voicing his "concern," the same was not true of the U.S. Government, which after 24 hours' reflection, published a communique expressing its disapproval.

After asserting that it "fully respects the right of the French Government to determine its own composition," it demonstrated this in a curious way by adding immediately that "the basis and essence of our relations as allies will be affected by the inclusion of Communists in that government."

This can only be regarded as pressure and as typical interference in France's internal affairs.

In fact, this attitude is not new and the U.S. leaders have previously voiced their dissatisfaction at the thought of Communists being called upon to exercise responsibilities in European governments. This was the case with General Haig, the then military commander of NATO forces, who in 1975 issued a public warning against ministerial participation by Communists in Italy. It was the case with the U.S. ambassador in Rome, Secretary of State Kissinger, President Ford, President Carter and today President Reagan.

What is new is that the French Government, the result of an election victory to which the Communists made a great contribution, includes Communist ministers. That is a reality which accords with the democratic rule and the majority will of our people.

The governments of other countries--and especially when it is a question of a superpower like the United States--have no right to call this will into question. In any case, they do not have the power to do so.

The interest of all peoples, whatever their government and their regime, is to live in peace. French Communists are friends of the American people, with whom they sided in the war against fascism. We want to live on good terms with them.

As for their choice of leaders, that is their affair, not ours, and we respect the verdict of universal suffrage, whatever the verdict may be and even if it doesn't meet our wishes.

We are within our rights to ask Reagan and his friends to show the same restraint. France is sovereign country, an ally of the United States. It is not a U.S. protectorate.

It is better, in the common interest and in the interest of our two peoples, to work for peace and not war.

In the joint declaration which they have just adopted, the PS and the PCF pledge themselves to maintain France's international effort--while respecting its alliances--for peace and progressive disarmament, with a view to the simultaneous dissolution of military blocs, while ensuring the balance of forces in Europe and in the world and the security of every country.

They advocate international negotiation on arms limitation and reduction in Europe, which would affect both the Soviet SS-20 missiles and the U.S. Pershing II missiles.

Such a step would seem to us to benefit not only the peoples of Europe but also the American people. That is, at any rate, our ambition.

MINISTRY ANNOUNCES NAVY REPLACEMENTS IN BANGUI

AB302122 Paris AFP in French 1806 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 30 Jun (AFP)--The replacement of a 130-man company, a unit of the 3d Navy Infantry Regiment, (3d RIMA [Marine Corps Regiment]), stationed in Bangui since the beginning of the year, began on Tuesday, French Defense Ministry sources announced Tuesday in Paris.

That company will be replaced within 48 hours by another company from the 8th Navy Infantry paratroops, (8th RPIMA [Naval Infantry Paratrooper Regiment]). All these troop movements do not affect the strength of the French operational assistance troops stationed in the CAR since the withdrawal in April 1980 of French units from the Chadian airport Ndjamena.

Last month, a subunit of the 3d Navy Infantry Regiment stationed in the eastern city of Bouar was replaced by another subunit from the 8th RPIMA, composed of three combat companies and a command company.

Earlier this month, the withdrawal of a 130-man navy infantry company stationed in Bangui reduced the strength of the French troops in the CAR to (?1,160) men, 380 of whom are stationed in the capital city and the rest in Bouar where there is a light armored car squadron.

PARTIES BEGIN CRITICISM OF SPADOLINI GOVERNMENT

AU300900 Rome ANSA in English 0827 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 30 Jun (ANSA)--The harsh reality of Italian politics has come down fast on Premier Giovanni Spadolini's 2-day-old government, battered from the outside by a vociferous opposition and from the inside by factional discontent.

The Communist Party's immediate announcement that it will wage a tough opposition was quickly followed by similarly bellicose statements from the Radical Party, the Proletarian Unity Party (PDUF) and the neofascist MSI-DN Party.

Complaints from the Social Democrats (PSDI), Socialists (PSI), Liberals (PLI) and Christian Democrats (DC), four of the five parties making up the coalition, mainly have to do with the way the Cabinet posts were divided up.

Spadolini's small Republican Party (PRI) rejected these criticisms in an editorial appearing today in the party newspaper, LA VOCE REPUBBLICANA, dismissing the charges that the Cabinet reflected the logic of factional politics as "unjust and abstract."

But the PSDI party organ, L'UMANITA, insisted today "it was easy to discern the rainbow of Christian Democrat party factions" in the colors of the Cabinet.

Another "negative" sign cited by the PSDI was the absence of [words indistinct] figures in the executive, an expression meaning that none of the ministers were picked on the basis of their fields of specialization without regard to factional affiliations.

A similar criticism was aired yesterday by Michele Achilli, a spokesman for the Socialist Party's leftist faction, who voiced skepticism about the new government's survival prospects.

According to Achilli, the Spadolini government was "heavily conditioned" by the Christian Democrats and their factional infighting.

PLI Deputy Secretary Antonio Poatuelli said he had hoped the new coalition would have been tougher in its refusal of what he called "party-cratic" degeneration.

Christian Democrat Senator Luigi Granelli, meanwhile, charged that Spadolini had "missed the objective of setting up a trim and authoritative executive structure."

Discontent appeared to be mounting inside Christian Democrat ranks over the loss of the premiership after 35 years of uninterrupted government leadership, with DC Secretary Flaminio Piccoli bearing the brunt of the criticism.

DC lower house floor leader Gerardo Bianco, the leader of the party's rightwing factions, lost no time in calling for an immediate check on Christian Democrat policies and the men who make them.

Bianco's challenge appeared today on the pages of the economic IL SOLE 24-ORE daily just as the party's lower house whips were about to hold a post-electoral meeting.

The leaders of the DC caucus were formally summoned to today's meeting to discuss the situation following the June 21-22 local elections, in which the party suffered major setbacks in many cities.

Piccoli girded himself for today's meeting with a note to the party rejecting all the criticism against him as "superficial" andurging members to close ranks and "renew party unity."

GOVERNMENT PUBLISHES REPORT ON TERRORISM FIGHT

AU301628 Rome ANSA in English 1545 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 30 Jun (ANSA)—The battle against terrorism in Italy will be won or lost on the basis of specifics outlined in a report published today by the government. The report covers secret service activities over the period November 22, 1980 to May 22, 1981.

The factors which will greatly effect the waxing or waning of terrorism in the country were seen as:

—The situation in the jails.

--The state's capacity to crack down on subversion.

—Encouragement of the phenomena of turncoat terrorists who cooperate with the law in return for eased sentences.

--Exploitation of dissent within terrorist groups.

With regard to international terrorism the report said that the government had no information that would prove the existence of an international power center which organizes at a strategic and executive level the various groups working in Europe. The links uncovered between one terrorist group and another were just that--between groups not nations, the report said.

Nevertheless, in many situations over recent years, terrorism has taken on characteristics and dimensions that have made it a new element in relations between states, even in function of international conflicts and interferences, the report said.

The report said that international terrorism seemed to be on the wane at present but that possibility always existed that tension in foreign countries could have repercussions on Italy. The report also stressed the growing efficiency of Italy's security service network which has also beefed up its cooperation with the EEC and NATO states.

SPAIN'S CARRILLO, BERLINGUER HOLD NEWS CONFERENCE

AU301942 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 30 Jun (ANSA)--The head of the Spanish Communist Party, Santiago Carrillo, said here today that there would be "no sense" in putting the French and Italian political situations on the same plane or comparing Communist Party participation in the French and Spanish governments.

The Communist Party leader's statement came [word indistinct] a joint news conference held with the secretary of the Italian Communist party, the biggest Marxist alignment in the West, after a round of consultations held yesterday between the two secretaries and their delegations.

Berlinguer, in his reference to the presence of four Communist Party members in the French cabinet, said that the lack of Communist representation in the Rome government is a very different matter and has no relation to the international situation.

The two party leaders, in their statements on Eurocommunism and the prospects that they might attend the Polish party congress scheduled for the end of July, reconfirmed the sugstantial agreement between their two parties.

With reference to the domestic situation in Spain, Carrillo said that he was worried about terrorist activities, especially the terrorist acts and kidnappings in the Basque regions. The dangers of a coup mounted by the extreme right, the Spanish party leader said, can be defused and [word indistinct] only by the democratic forces within the country and not by mere expressions of sympathy and solidarity from the international community.

The opposition of the Spanish party to membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization was supported by Berlinguer who said that Spain's entry could snap the balance between NATO and the Warsaw Pact. Carrillo reported that according to the findings of a recent public opinion poll in his country, most of the people of Spain are against membership in NATO.

With reference to Eurocommunism and the decreasing frequency of contacts between the Spanish and [Italian] Communist parties, on the one side, and the French Communist Party on the other, Berlinguer declared that the Italian party has never broken relations with the French alignment despite the differences which have cropped up between them.

After explaining that their current consultations had been scheduled before the French elections were held, the two party leaders declared that the concept of Eurocommunism must not be limited to the communist parties. "For the success of Eurocommunism", they said, "a search for an understanding among the other democratic, socialist and social democratic forces is indispensable".

Carrillo and Berlinguer then disclosed that they did not plan to attend the Polish communist party congress.

Accord Signed

LD302244 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1900 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo has signed an agreement with his Italian counterpart, Berlinguer. Rafael Ortega now reports from Rome:

[Begin recording] [Ortega] For almost 2 days PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo has had meetings with his Italian counterpart, Enrico Berlinguer. What are the main points of this communist document which you have signed?

[Carrillo] In the document--I am not perhaps following the order--there is in the first place, from my viewpoint, an affirmation of the joint position of the two parties in favor of Spain's entry into the Common Market. There is a clear and radical stance against terrorism and a denunciation of terrorism and defeatism. There is also the argument that Spanish entry into NATO would be a negative step, because it would upset the present strategic balance which is one of the elements which today help maintain peace in Europe and in the world. There is (?encouragement for) the development of our position in favor of an autonomous policy in Europe on such fundamental subjects as the economic crisis, action for peace and, specifically, to achieve (?with regard to the tendency) to increase both sides--in the East and the West--nuclear missiles, negotiations to reduce the existence of these missiles to a minimum until they disappear completely in this century.

The document also contains the affirmation of our concept of emphasis on plurality, of democratic socialism, this concept leading us to express our disagreement with the entry of Soviet troops into Afghanistan and to affirm that Poland's problems should be resolved by the Poles themselves by means of an agreement among all sectors of Polish society. LA REPUBBLICA PRAISES MITTERRAND REPLY TO BUSH

[Commentary: "Example For Europe"]

[Text] NATO, God willing, is not the Warsaw Pact, and the alliance's members are, and remain, sovereign states. We, both Americans and Europeans, have always said this with some pride but also--particularly as far as we Italians are concerned--with considerable insincerity. We are indeed sovereign states if we want to be, or states with limited sovereignty, as provinces of the empire, if that is our vocation.

From this viewpoint, the standard has been set by events in France; the Communist Party's entry into the Mauroy government, U.S. Vice President Bush's protest during his visit to MItterrand, and the latter's very firm reply. Mitterrand told his U.S. interlocutor, when the latter presented objections about the four ministries entrusted to PCF exponents, that "French policy belongs to France and will remain French."

When a major European country has the strength to adopt stances of autonomous dignity, it is doing a service not only to itself but to the entire community; not by eliminating anti-communist discrimination, because in this connection every political force is free to behave as it believes best and its assessments do not necessarily have to be taken as a model, but by showing and proving that the U.S. ally does not have the authority to interfere in domestic policy matters concerning other members of the alliance.

In fact, if this were not the case, NATO and the Warsaw Pact would be the same. Fortunately for us, they are not, unless we decide to forget the fact....

PM301528 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 19 Jun 81 p 3

[Report on PCI Secretariat Member Adalberto Minucci 18 June television interview: "Mitterrand Has Shown Us That Our Flirtation With DC Was a Mistake"]

[Excerpt] How does the PCI judge Mitterrand's major victory and Marchais' parallel defeat? What repercussions will the French election result have on PCI-PSI relations? Are the Italian Communists a social democratic party? Or do they want communism? Why is Berlinguer unwilling to grant abstention to the government that Spadolini is preparing to form? Might he do so later? What does PCI headquarters think of the Calvi-Rizzoli operation in connection with CORRIERE DELLA SERA [to appoint a new editor]? These and other questions were answered by PCI Secretariat member Adalberto Minucci in an interview with Gianna Rocca screened this evening by the "Modulo '81" television network.

Here is a summary of the conversation:

[Question] What reflections have the French election results prompted you to make?

[Answer] We are enthusiastic about the leftward shift in France and about the fact that this shift has tken on the configuration of an alternative to the Giscardian power system, because here we find a coincidence with our own fundamental demand. We too want an alternative to the DC power system and maintain that this requires first and foremost leftwing unity. But it is not we in Italy who are challenging leftwing unity....

Differences Between PCF and PCI

[Question] Marchais' PCF has suffered a heavy defeat....

[Answer] There are very profound differences between the PCI and PCF. I would like to underline one of them. We have always raised the issue of the government participation of the united left. We have never created any problems of hegemony within the left. This error has been committed by the French Communists, by claiming some kind of primacy within the left which should be acknowledged a priori. Paradoxically, in Italy this is the stance adopted by Craxi. It is Craxi who maintains that the left can only be united when the Socialists are stronger.

[Question] Craxi's opinion is that the PCI has not yet covered all the necessary ground in revisionism. A few evenings ago he said on television: It is a matter not of doing without the Communists but of doing without communism. What is your answer to that?

[Answer] My answer is that the concepts of communism and socialism are spiritual categories, which it is perhaps better to leave to the philosophers, rather than politicians, to discuss. We are dealing here with political forces that have taken shape through history, namely the PCI and PSI. After all, what is communism? According to Marx's ideas it is a distant prospect of utopia, toward which it is the historical process even more than human will that leads. It is a matter of discussing the parties' specific policies and plans, and it is my impression that in this field, artificial differences are being sought more than real ones. From this aspect we too have some objections to put to Comrade Craxi, because while he can now certainly hail Mitterrand's success, it must be said that his policy is closer to that of Mitterrand's adversary in the French Socialist Party, Rocard. It is no accident that Rocard seemed like the man who could form a center-left in France, in agreement with Giscard. And I have the impression that until then, Craxi felt more sympathetic toward Rocard than toward Mitterrand.

[Question] It is said that the Italian Communists still have a particular aversion for the term social democracy....

[Answer] The PCI is now one of the major workers and socialist parties of socialist inspiration in Europe. It has very positive relations with the European social democratic parties. Let us not regard social democracy as an absolute concept, either; let us look at what it is specifically. Today the European social democratic parties are experiencing a crisis that I consider salutary. They are not all equally affected by it. But it must not be forgotten that the French Socialist Party is now a major leftwing and anticapitalist party and that it has a negative history behind it—Guy Mollett's French section of the Workers International and the colonial adventures. A process took place which made the French Socialist Party grow and which prompted it to adopt stances which very often coincide with the PCI's.

Then let us take the Labor Party, within which the left won the congress, the right failed to accept the verdict and there is a furious struggle, a radicalization of anticapitalist thrusts. Let us consider the experiences of the Swedish Social Democratic Party, which has defined a strategy of anticapitalist structural reforms with which we have many points of contact. The SPD, on the other hand, is the party most reluctant to accept a fundamental change, although it too is full of crises and internal struggles. So the spectrum is a broad one. The leftward thrust in Europe, wherever it occurs, is the result of self-criticism by the social democratic parties and their more consistent adoption of a leftwing stance.

[Question] Does this imply a shift toward the somewhat mysterious thing that you call "The Third Way?"

[Answer] The Third Way is a path to socialism within observance of all democratic freedoms and of pluralism. This is something different from the social democratic experience, because social democracy has no experience of socialism, and something entirely different from what exists in the countries of real socialism, because there is a single-party system, a limited democracy and a fundamental distortion.

[Question] Mitterrand has now gained 38 percent of the votes. In 1975-76, the Italian Communists reached almost 35 percent. On the morrow of that resounding success, the PCI imparted a new thrust to and strengthened the historical compromise line. Was that response to the Italian people's expectations of change a mistake?

[Answer] Following the 1976 elections, the left was driven by its voters to adopt government stances, but it had insufficient strength in Parliament to govern. Moreover, we did make a mistake, not in backing the historical compromise itself, but in reducing it to a formula, a leadership agreement, whereas the historical compromise is a long-term prospect. Togliatti started talking about it back in 1944. It is a proposal for an understanding among all the major democratic political forces. To some extent it is also a relationship among classes which want to reform the country, and it therefore cannot be reduced to a government formula. We made that mistake and we have paid for it. At one point, following Moro's death, we also found ourselves confronted with a negative swing within the DC and we did backtrack to some extent. Because we are capable of making every mistake apart from that of damaging our party's autonomy.

PCI SENDS MESSAGE TO CONGRATULATE CHINESE PARTY

AU301544 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] Rome, 30 Jun (ANSA)--The Italian Communist Party has sent a congratulatory message to the Chinese Communist Party, which is celebrating the sixtieth anniversary of its foundation.

The celebration of the Chinese Communist Party was a great event in the life of the Chinese people and their revolutionary movement, the PCI telegram said. Over the pasty sixty years, the Chinese party has known how to guide the people to victory for their revolution to the foundation of the Chinese People's Republic, and to important conquests along the path of socialist construction, the telegram continued. This was a great event for the development of the revolutionary process, the cause of liberation, human emanicipation and the advancement of socialism in the world, the message continued.

The PCI wished the Chinese party and people future successes in terms of modernization and socialist building and hoped that the Chinese People's Republic would contribute to the safeguarding of world peace and the establishment of ties of friendship and cooperation among all the states and peoples of the world.

SPANISH MINISTER CITES 'GOOD RESULTS' OF VISIT

PM291407 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 20 Jun 81 p 16

[EFE dispatch]

[Text] Copenhagen, 19 Jun--Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca today expressed his satisfaction at the "considerable Danish support" for the Spanish stance on Spain's entry into the EEC.

At the conclusion of his talks with his Danish counterpart, Kjeld Olesen, the Spanish minister emphasized at a news conference with Spanish correspondents "the good results" of his working visit to Copenhagen. After stating that the emphasis of the Spanish-Danish dialogue was on the EEC issue, Perez-Llorca said that the Danish stance on Spanish entry is one of "great political support." Regarding the agenda of his talks, he did not conceal the fact that the Spanish Government's desire to seek entry into the Atlantic alliance was raised and that the issue "posed no problem" when it was discussed.

Reviewing the international situation, the two ministers discussed the situation in Poland, north Africa and Namibia, and the Madrid Conference, ascertaining "substantial agreement" in their joint assessment, Perez-Llorca said. The predominantly "European" nature of the visit was made clear by the presence in the Spanish delegation of Secreatry of State for Relations with the EEC Raimundo Bassols and of Director General for Europe Juan Duran.

AKTUELT CALLS NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE IDEA 'ILLUSION'

PM301455 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 27 Jun 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Brezhnev Demarche"]

[Text] It is possible to see the whole campaign for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries either as a Soviet propaganda crusade or as an honest desire to make a contribution to peace. No matter which view you take of the Soviet Union's proposal, certain facts are crystal clear: The Nordic countries are free from nuclear arms. In addition, the Nordic countries' security policies are based on very different premises. Finland's security policy is closely tied to its proximity to the Soviet Union. Denmark and Norway have their security policy connections with West Europe and the United States and Sweden balances neutral in the middle. If these countries bind themselves to one other through a treaty, the whole of Scandinavia would become involved with the peculiar problems facing Finland. The reverse would also be true--changes in the security arrangements in West Eueope would have repercussions for Finland in its relations with the Soviet Union.

Bearing in mind the stockpiles of nuclear arms maintained by the Soviet Union in the Kola and Baltic regions, the proposals for a legalized nculear-free zone--in an area already without nuclear arms--seems like a colossal magician's illusion.

The spokesman made the following statement: "There has not been any change in the arrangements for the stationing of one U.S. U-2 plane at the Akrotiri base in accordance with the 1974 agreement on the supervision of the cease-fire between the Egyptian and Israeli troops. KIPRIANOU STATEMENT ON ATHENS VISIT

NC301808 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] In a statement to the Athens News Agency [APE] in view of his visit to Athens tomorrow, President Kiprianou said that he will exchange with the Greek Government views, appraisals and information in order to chart, as always, a joint line in connection with the handling of the question. He said: Following various promises, it is expected that the Turkish side will submit proposals on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem. At least, many such promises have been given. If, finally, the Turkish side submits such proposals, these proposals will have to be constructive and substantive in order to secure a substantive dialogue.

The president of the republic said that during his talks with the Greek Government, all possibilities will be studied and views will be exchanged on various other activities that might be necessary to promote a Cyprus solution based on the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. He added: These contacts with the Greek Government are within the framework of the close cooperation that always exists between the two governments--cooperation which we are determined to safeguard in every way because it is one of the basic prerequisites for the successful outcome of the Cypriot people's struggle for freedom and justice.

The president said that during his stay in Athens he will have contacts with other political personalities so that he may be briefed on the national question. [as heard] He said: It is well known that the political world of Greece--the government, the opposition and, in general, the entire political world and the people--unanimously support the Cypriot people's struggle for freedom. He concluded: In substance, Greece's multifaceted support is our prime mainstay in the difficult struggle that we are waging.

NATIONAL COUNCIL ADOPTS CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY LAW

TA201817 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] The law on the formation and duties of the Constituent Assembly has been adopted by the National Security Council [NSC]. The Constituent Assembly will be composed of the NSC and 160-member Consultative Assembly. Persons who were members of a political party on 11 September 1980 will not be able to enter the Consultative Assembly. The members of the Constituent Assembly will not be able to be members of a political party during the first general elections. The Constituent Assembly, which will draft the new constitution, the bill of referendum on the constitution as well as the political parties and election bills, will function as the legislative organ. The Constituent Assembly will cease to exist as soon as the Turkish Grand National Assembly begins to function following the general elections.

The date of the first meeting of the Consultative Assembly and the application date for membership will be determined by the NSC at a later stage. The draft bill on the Constituent Assembly was prepared by the following NSC members: Ground Forces Commander Gen Nuretting Ersin, Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya, Navy Commander Adm Nejat Tumer and Gendarmerie General Commander Gen Sedat Celasun. The preamble of the bill stated that the Turkish Armed Forces conducted the 12 September operation within the chain of command out of a feeling of historical responsibility in an atmosphere where the parliament--the basic institution of a multiparty democratic system--was rendered ineffective and the country was driven to the verge of civil war. The draft bill further stressed that the aim of this operation consists of establishing a sound and solid democratic order, and noted that, for this reason, it is beneficial to establish an assembly which will support the legislative duties of the NSC and secure wider public involvement through open debates and discussions.

The introductory provision of the law on the Constituent Assembly, which is composed of 33 articles, states: It has been decided to establish a Constituent Assembly, which will produce the legal arrangements for establishing a democratic, secular and legal state that will ensure the prevalance of law and will allow everyone to benefit from human rights and basic freedoms in an understanding of national solidarity and social justice and by safeguarding the existence of independence of the Turkish Republic; which will ensure the integrity and indivisibility of the country and the nation and the tranquillity of the population; and which will draft the constitution and the bills on political parties and the elections. This Constituent Assembly will cease to exist as soon as the Turkish Grand National Assembly--that will be established through general elections--actually begins to function.

According to the law, the Constituent Assembly will consist of the NSC and a 160-member Consultative Assembly. The Constituent Assembly, acting as a legislative body, will draft the new constitution, the bill on referendum on the constitution, and the political parties and election bills. On matters not related to the provisions of these laws, the NSC will, in accordance with the law on the constitutional order, fulfill the duties of the Turkish Grand National Assembly, the National Assembly and the Senate, and exercise their authority.

Forty members of the Consultative Assembly will be directly appointed by the NSC. The other 120 members will be selected by the NSC from candidates chosen and proposed by the provinces. The recent census was taken into account in determining the number of delegates to be sent to the Consultative Assembly from each province. According to the law, Istanbul will send nine members to the Consultative Assembly, Ankara will send eight members, Izmir five members, Adana and Konya four each, and Bursa, Samsun and Zonguldak will send three members each.

The following provinces will be represented by two members: Afyon, Antalya, Aydin, Balikesir, Corum, Denizli, Diyarbakir, Erzurum, Ganiantep, Hatay, Icel, Kahramanmaras, Kars, Kayseri, Kocaeli, Malatya, Manisa, Ordu, Sivas, Tokat, Trabzon, and Urfa. The other 37 provinces will send one member each to the Consultative Assembly. These provinces are: Adiyaman, Agri, Amasya, Artvin, Bilecik, Bingol, Bitlis, Bolu, Burdur, Canakkale, Cankiri, Edirne, Elazig, Erzincan, Eskisehir, Giresun, Gumushane, Hakkari, Tsparta, Kastamonu, Kirklareli, Kirsehir, Kutahya, Mugla, Mus, Nevsehir, Nigde, Rize, Sakarya, Siirt, Sinop, Tekirdag, Tunceli, Usak, Van and Yozgat.

According to the law, higher education graduates over 30 years of age will be eligible for membership in the Consultative Assembly. Those who were a member of a political party on 11 September 1980 will not be able to participate in the Consultative Assembly. Those who are under interdiction or barred from public service, those who have been sentenced to over 1 year in jail--except for heavy imprisonment or discretionary crimes [as heard]--and those who are guilty of offenses such as embezzlement, corruption, bribery, stealing, fraud, misuse of trust or fraudulent bankruptcy, will not be eligible for membership in the Consultative Assembly. Application for membership in the Consultative Assembly will be made to the governor's office. Candidates will be able to apply to the governor's office of provinces where they have studied or where they have resided for 5 years with interruption, for 3 years without interruption, or for the past 2 years. Whether or not candidates have the necessary qualifications will be studied by the governors. Following their analysis, each governor will select three times the number of candidates for his province from people who they are convinced are well known and liked and fulfill the conditions envisaged in the law. The names of these candidates will be given to the NSC. Consultative Assembly representatives for each province will be selected by the NSC from these candidates.

The candidates for the 40 members who will be directly appointed by the NSC will apply to the NSC General Secretariat through a written application. The law stipulates that these candidates need not have higher education.

The names of the members appointed to the Consultative Assembly by the NSC will be announced through the Official Gazette and Turkish Radio and Television.

The date of the first meeting of the Consultative Assembly will be announced by the NSC. The members of the Consultative Assembly will be sworn in before they assume office. The text of the oath they will take is as follows:

As a member of the Consultative Assembly, I swear upon my honor that in my work I will protect the existence and independence of the state and the integrity and indivisibility of the country and nation, that I will not swerve from the ideal that everyone benefit from human rights and basic freedoms in an understanding of social tranquillity, national solidarity and social justice; and that I will remain loyal to the principles of a democratic and secular republic that will ensure the supremacy of law.

The members of the Consultative Assembly will fulfill their duties on behalf of the Turkish nation. Except as in cases indicated in the law, it will not be possible to dismiss them. Members who were previously employed in public organizations will be considered on leave during their membership in the Consultative Assembly. According to the law, members of the Consultative Assembly will not be held responsible for the views they express during their work at the assembly. In addition, they will not be interrogated as a suspect, arrested or tried without the decision of an absolute majority of the total members of the Assembly. A sentence passed on a member before or after the elections will be postponed until the Consultative Assembly legally ceases to exist. The Consultative Assembly will conduct its work in accordance with internal guidelines, which it will establish.

The General Assembly of the Consultative Assembly will convene with an absolute majority of its total number of members. The General Assembly meetings will be held in public and committee work will be held in camera. According to the law on the Constituent Assembly, draft bills will be submitted to the Consultative Assembly chairman. Members of the NSC, the Council of Ministers and the members of the Consultative Assembly are authorized to submit bill proposals. However, a bill proposed by a member of the Consultative Assembly must be signed by at least 10 members before it can be submitted to the Consultative Assembly. Bill proposals will first be discussed in committees; then they will be discussed at the general assembly of the Consultative Assembly. Bill proposals approved or rejected at the general assembly will be sent to the NSC. The decision of the NSC will be final. The accepted text will be puslished in the Official Gazette and will go into effect.

The same method will be applied in the discussion of the new constitution that will be drawn up. The text of the constitution that is approved by the Consultative Assembly will be discussed by the NSC. The NSC will be able to amend the text of the constitution. The constitution will be submitted for a referendum in this final form.

The general and complementary budget proposals will also be discussed at the Constituent Assembly and decided upon. The same procedure that applies to laws will apply in these discussions.

The law also stipulates that those who have committed a crime against the Consultative Assembly will be subject to the punishments envisaged for acts committed against the Turkish Grand National Assembly in the Turkish penal code. Furthermore, provisions about the members of the Grand National Assembly in the Turkish penal code will be applied in crimes committed against the members of the Consultative Assembly.

Once the Executive Council is elected and begins office after the Consultative Assembly is established, draft bills that are currently in NSC committees will be sent to the Consultative Assembly chairman. However, discussion of the bills on the agenda of the NSC will be continued. The law on the Constituent Assembly will go into effect after being published in the Official Gazette.

FOREIGN MINISTRY DENIES REPORT ON IRAN EXPLOSION

TA301648 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 30 Jun 81

[Text] The Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General has issued a statement in connection with reports that telephone calls were made to certain newspaper and news agencies in Ankara, regarding a secret organization called the National Equality Party, claiming responsibility for the explosion at the Tehran headquarters of the Iranian Islamic Republican Party. The statement is as follows:

There has been a press report that a person calling newspaper offices in Ankara announced that an Iranian political party has claimed responsibility of the terrible sabotage incident in Tehran. The report, which was also carried by foreign press organs and publications, can create the impression that this party is conducting its activity from Turkey. It is impossible for an Iranian political party to conduct its activities in Turkey. It is clear that Turkey will never tolerate any activity on its soil directed against friendly and brotherly Iran and its regime. The Turkish authorities are very careful about this. The possibility that the report could have an ulterior motive should not be discounted.

CUMHURIYET ON REAGAN'S 'DANGEROUS' POLICIES

NC301040 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 26 Jun 81 p 3

["Issues in Politics" column by Ergun Balc: "Reagan's Policy"]

[Excerpts] Former U.S. President Jimmy Carter's contradictory policy disgusted even Washington's closest friends and made confidence in the White House shaky. Though in favor of a tough policy, Ronald Reagan's coming to the White House was welcomed in a number of West European capitals in the hope that it would bring stability to U.S. policy. But the Reagan administration, after only 5 months in office has truly confirmed the saying that "the successor is often worse than the predecessor."

The Reagan administration displays far more contrasts than Carter's did. Its animosity toward the Soviet Union could bring dangers to our world. This animosity has assumed fanatical dimensions. The lack of a consistent foreign policy and of wise and diplomatic flexibility, combined with the pursuance of an escalation policy in all parts of the world, are obvious charactersitics of the 5-month-old Reagan administration.

As an example--in April, U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger told his friends in Europe that talks on the control of nuclear arms should be postponed because of the Soviet Union's oppressive policy against Poland. However, only a few days after Weinberger's evaluation, Washington announced that it had decided to lift the wheat embargo on the Soviet Union. Two weeks earlier the White House displayed another contradiction. When Alexander Haig announced that the United States would sell arms to China [for defense] against the Soviet Union, a wheat agreement was being signed between the United States and the Soviet Union.

President Reagan at first strongly criticized Israel's attack on the Iraqi nuclear reactor--which can only be characterized as piracy--but only a few days later he said: "Israel may have carried out this attack for self defense purposes."

On the other hand, since coming to power, the Reagan administration has unreservedly supported fascist adminstrations in all parts of the world. The only valid principle in foreign politics is U.S. interests and the only standard for values is animosity toward the Soviets. A policy that holds the Soviet Union responsible for all problems in the world--the Palestine issue, Iranian-Iraqi conflict, clashes in El Salvador and the liberation struggle in Namibia--is far from being convincing, but it is capable of dragging our world into a very perilous situation. U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig referred to the Soviet danger in the Middle East during his visit to the area when Israel and the Phalangists, whom it supports, turned Lebanon into a bloodbath, and this reference was not welcomed by even the most conservative Arab states. Alexander Haig's attitude encouraged Israel and the Christian Phalangists and the recent attack on Iraq has revealed the true source of danger to the entire world.

Reagan entered the White House with slogans such as "Great America, powerful policy." But the argument for a strong policy that is not based on wisdom could bring unpredictable dangers to our world. The administrators of the United States do not seem to have grasped this fact.

APEL RECEIVES VISITING DANISH DEFENSE MINISTER

LD011240 Hamburg DPA in German 1103 GMT 1 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 1 Jul (DPA)--With military honors, West German Defense Minister Hans Apel today received at the Bundeswehr Danish Defense Minister Poul Sogaard. Sogaard is here for a 3-day visit. The Danish defense minister would like to have general questions about German defense answered. During his stay, he will visit a tank brigade in north Germany and the naval command at Gluecksburg. During an interview with the magazine WEHRTECHNIK, Sogaard said that Denmark could defend the entrances to the Baltic "satisfactorily." The Danish defense minister reported on a "notable increase of a positive attitude" among the population of Denmark in relation to defense questions. According to a Danish opinion poll, 80 to 90 percent of Danes are prepared to contribute to defense. An important sign of this positive attitude is the increasing number of volunteers in the Danish home defense force.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON BRANDT'S MOSCOW TALKS

DW020825 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 2 Jul 81

[From the press review]

[Text] SUEDKURIER of Konstanz writes about SPD Chairman Brandt's Moscow talks: Brandt and Brezhnev dealt relatively frankly with the issues currently dominating political discussions--disaramament, Poland and Afghanistan. All three problems indicate that the Soviet Union also is interested in loosening somewhat the tensions to find possibilities for talking with the West. It is obvious that the case of Afghanistan is being interpreted differently. It remains to be seen how the Soviets will react to the summit conference suggested by the European Community, where this issue is being discussed. The current Soviet approach to handling the problem sounds rather uncomplicated and obvious. But an old proverb says, the Russian does not say what he thinks and does not do what he says. In other words, carefulness is called for despite all respect, particularly with regard to disarmament issues and the assessment of the Polish situation.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG takes a sceptical view of Brandt's visit: Willy Brandt, who is well liked in the Kremlin, did not see a chance for a breakthrough in his exploration of the Soviet position regarding disarmament in central Europe. What Brezhnev offered, namely, not to deploy new Red medium-range missiles during possible negotiations between Moscow and Washington if the American would do the same, is just a new version of a moratorium. Brandt firmly believes in the Russians' will to neogtiate. This belief, however, can be more than just an appeal to good will only as long as the lever of NATO's dual decisions will not be split up, a decision aimed at motivating the will to negotiate.

HESSISCHE-NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE of Kassel says: It would be too optimistic to expect solutions to come in the near future from the negotiations demanded by NATO's dual decision. Willy Brandt's talks demonstrated on the contrary how complicated the disarmament policy has become and how much it is dominated by propaganda in the East and in the West. Despite all the good will, the SPD chairman cannot bring back concrete results from Moscow, indicating Soviet preparedness to compromise. Brezhnev's tempting offer to freeze the deployment of SS-20 missiles in the European part of his country at the beginning of negotiations is just a propagandistic trick which would stabilize the Soviet disarmament superiority.

STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN writes: The new moratorium demands that no missiles should be deployed on the Western side during possible negotiations. That must be rejected. Bonn should answer with a clear no. What looks at first glance like Brezhnev is compromising is actually a further attempt to drive a wedge in the alliance. Does Brandt not want to see that? If the Soviets were seriously interested in negotiations, they wouldn't cite any prerequisites.

LEADERS WELCOME ELECTION OF ISRAEL'S PERES

LD011736 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 1 Jul 81

[Text] France is fairly happy with the result of the Israeli parliamentary elections following Shimon Peres' narrow victory. As you know, he secured 49 seats against Menahem Begin's 48. To be more subtle, French leaders welcome the election of Shimon Peres with more satisfaction than they would that of Menahem Begin. One should remember that Shimon Peres belongs to the same Socialist International as Francois Mitterrand.

One of the consequences of these parliamentary elections is that Samuel Flatto-Sharon has not been reelected. As you know, he is sought by French legal authorities for fraud and tax evasion. Samuel Flatto-Sharon thus loses his parliamentary immunity and as a result there is every chance that this will mean his extradition to France.

LE MONDE VIEWS PCF POLICY CONCESSIONS

PM261529 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Jun 81 p 1

[Editorial: "The International Impact"]

[Text] Although Mitterrand's decision to include Communist ministers in the French Government primarily reflects domestic policy considerations, nobody can disregard the fact that its impact is chiefly international.

The reactions from Western capitals, notably from Washington, should be clearer after the talks which U.S. Vice President George Bush is starting in Paris this Wednesday. The American press has so far adopted a relatively understanding attitude, but less sympathy can be expected from a government team united by militant anticommunism, which will find it particularly difficult to understand the PCF's participation since its parliamentary support was no longer necessary. Nonetheless, it can be expected that, like Schmidt in Bonn, the allied governments will support the new team in power in France, if only unwillingly, and will not wish to cut themselves off from France at such a time.

Moreover, the diplomatic concessions which the PCF was forced to make are of unequal importance. It cost Marchais less than might have been thought to advocate the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan since Moscow has always accepted the principle of such a withdrawal if the "foreign interferences" in that country ended. Moreover, in January, Giscard d'Estaing has put forward a proposal for a conference on this problem, was not rejected by Moscow.

Similarly, the idea of negotiations on armaments in Europe, including but not restricted to the SS-20 missiles and future U.S. missiles, corresponds precisely to what the USSR is proposing. As for the Camp David agreements--which are not given approval but of which "note" is simply "taken"--the wording is sufficiently vague to conceal outstanding disagreements. In some cases, omissions serve the same purpose, as is the case with the expansion of the European Community, which is "forgotten" in the PCF-PS agreement.

It will not surprise anybody to hear that Poland was the main stumbling block. This is not because of the wording used but because Marchais was clearly in no position to repeat today what he had said on television channel 2 on 23 March: "I am telling you that there will not be" (a Soviet intervention). Indeed, the agreement reached with the PS forces him--and this is not insignificant--to condemn in advance such an intervention.

The return of the French Communists to government comes at a time when the international context is reminiscent not so much of the 1944-46 period, when in many European countries the Communists were called upon [to participate in the government] following a victory against the Hitlerian coalition to which they had made a powerful contribution, than the 1947-48 period when East-West tension removed them from power everywhere. Today the tension has reappeared.

FOREIGN MINISTER CHEYSSON TO MEET WITH PLO CHIEF

NC261258 Paris AFP in English 1242 GMT 26 Jun 81

[Text] Paris, 26 Jun (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson is to meet shortly with Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) Political Bureau Chief Faruq Qaddumi, the minister's office confirmed here today. But it denied that Mr Qaddumi had received an "official invitation" from France to visit here.

The Palestinian WAFA news agency reported yesterday that Mr Qaddumi had received such an invitation from French Ambassador to Beirut Louis Delamare.

Mr Cheysson will today host a dinner for the heir to the Jordanian throne, Prince Hasin Ibn Tallal, brother to King Husayn. The prince, who is here on a private visit, met President Francois Mitterrand yesterday.

GROUP OCCUPIES IRANIAN CONSULATE IN PARIS

[Text] The Iranian Consulate in Paris' Rue Fresnel in the 16th District has been occupied since 0900 this morning by about 30 Iranian extreme left militants--Mujahedin. About half an hour ago, supporters of the Khomeyni Islamic regime arrived with clubs and stones with the foreseeable result of a generalized brawl. Police tried to separate the two groups. However, the Mujahedin are still holing up in the consulate. Their occupation is intended to protest repression in Iran.

THATCHER: CARRINGTON PEACE MISSION TO USSR IS ON

LD301416 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1400 GMT 30 Jun 81

[By Geoff Meade, PA staff reported in Luxembourg]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher confirmed this afternoon that Lord Carrington's peace mission to Moscow is on. He will fly out on Sunday evening and is to see the Russian foreign minister on Monday.

At the end of the two-day Common Market leaders' summit in Luxembourg, the prime minister said that to leave Afghanistan in its present situation would be unacceptable to Western democracies. She said she was happy that now was the time to launch a new initiative. Mrs Thatcher went on: "If the Russians really do wish to withdraw from Afghanistan on the understanding that Afghanistan can return to her previous status we would like to give them the opportunity to do it. If the Russians do not, we wish to totally and utterly condemn the occupation of any nation."

Lord Carrington will be seeing Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko in the hope of persuading the Soviets to join an international conference to be staged in two parts aiming at the withdrawal of Russia's 85,000 troops in Afghanistan and nonaligned status for Afghanistan.

Lord Carrington told a press conference at the end of the summit that he felt the time was now right to have another attempt at getting a settlement satisfactory to everybody. "We have made preliminary soundings around the world on whether this is a good idea and possibly profitable. It has been very well received." He said it was possible that the Soviet Union would wish to withdraw from Afghanistan because they were in "some difficulty" for military and other reasons: "The action has proved to be exceedingly unpopular with the Third World. I would think that if a solution can be found which will be to the advantage of everybody, there is a chance--a chance--we might be able to do it."

Lord Carrington will be in Moscow not only as the architect of the initiative but also as a senior representative of the government which takes over charge of EEC policy-making tomorrow for the next six months.

Britain will thus carry the burden for the successful conclusion of phase one of the initiative--an exploratory conference possibly in October or November involving the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, France, Britain, the USA, China and the Soviet Union, plus Pakistan, Iran and India. The key task is to win agreement from the Soviets for such a move. At the end of the summit this afternoon EEC governments issued a declaration of the initiative calling on the international community to support it fully "with the aim of reducing international tension and ending human suffering in Afghanistan." The declaration stated that the European Council--the ten-member government of the EEC--noted with deep concern that the situation in Afghanistan remained an important cause of international tension. It also outlined the details, leaked last week of a two-part peace conference, the second part to take place sometime next year and involving representatives of the Afghan people. It said that the member countries of the EEC would be ready at a later stage to make further proposals on the detailed arrangements for the proposed conference.

The future of Lord Carrington's initiative now hangs largely on a successful outcome from his Moscow talks on Monday.

In London the Foreign Office said that if a settlement could be found to the Afghanistan problem then "it would make possible a fundamental improvement in East-West relations."

Apparently British diplomats have been in contact with senior Soviet foreign officials and others in the last few days and the reaction to the plan has been such that it has been considered worthwhile to go ahead with Lord Carrington's visit.

While he is in Moscow, Lord Carrington is expected also to discuss with the Soviet Union--on behalf only of the British Government--the Middle East, the European security situation and arms control. The last visit by a British foreign secretary to Moscow was when David Owen went in October 1977.

LORD CARRINGTON DISCUSSES EEC, MIDDLE EAST

PM010910 Paris LE MONDE in French 28-29 Jun 81 pp 1,3

[Maurice Delarue interview with British Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs Lord Carrington; date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] Your government is the most conservative in the community and the most liberal in economic matters whereas Mitterrand's government will be more socialist and will pursue a policy of planned economy. Does this risk new disagreements between London and Paris?

[Answer] France is an important British ally whatever the political colors of the government in either country. Our government is determined to develop French-British relations by every possible means and to avoid disagreements. After centuries of trials and mistakes, we have succeeded in bringing our common interests to a point where, if I can express myself in such a negative way, our real disagreements can be discussed and, generally speaking, overcome in a constructive and civilized way without resorting to completely outdated language. If conflicting interests remain, which is inevitable even among allies, the United Kingdom will seek to overcome them generously and in a spirit of understanding. I am convinced that this is also the French Government's aim. And it should be the aim of all those who are concerned with the common interest of the EEC.

[Question] Mitterrand and Cheysson want to extend the "European dimension" to new spheres, notably social spheres and that would help to correct the imbalances of which Britain complains. What do you think of that?

[Answer] The British Government would probably welcome proposals really aimed at balancing, expanding and extending the Community. It has always maintained that Community spending does not reflect the needs of the regional and social fund. France's support on this would be welcomed. There are sectors, like transport, urban infrastructure, regional and industrial development, in which the Community should do more. Britain is entirely in favor of the "European dimension" being extended in these directions.

[Question] How can the "Europeanization" of new sectors of activity be reconciled with British opinion's opposition to the Community? Finance Minister Delors suggests, for instance, that the Ten join together in considering reducing the working week. Are you prepared to move in that direction?

[Answer] Our government is firmly committed to Europe and determined to show the British people the advantages of Community membership. The United Kingdom is very anxious to work with its partners to solve the problems from which we are all suffering, such as unemployment and inflation. The citizens' attitude toward the Community depends largely on the effects they notice in their daily lives.

It is essential that we discuss unemployment and inflation during the British chairmanship. However, we must bear in mind that we cannot hope for a lasting solution to unemployment unless our enterprises are competitive on the international markets.

The Common Agricultural Policy

[Question] Is Britain prepared, as France hopes, to delay examination of the Community structural reforms until fall?

[Answer] We understand that the French Government needs time to think. This is not incompatible with the timetable for discussions. There probably will be discussions on the Commissions's proposals at the European Council meeting on 29 June. But there will be no essential decision before the fall. The United Kingdom hopes that an agreement on essential points can be reached in November.

[Question] What do you think of the Commission's proposals on this subject?

[Answer] At first sight, the Commission's report contains useful and constructive suggestions. It is, of course, very general and a great deal will depend on the details. The important thing is that the Community should find a lasting solution providing a sound basis for its future development.

[Question] The chancellor of the exchequer (British finance minister) stated (at The Hague on 3 June) that the Community budget should take account of the financial consequences for each state "individually." Is not Britain seeking to make permanent the exceptional treatment it enjoyed in 1980 and 1981?

[Answer] No, this is not a British but a Community problem and requires a Community solution. Today only two states are net contributors to the budget. That is not the result of a deliberate decision: It is the involuntary consequence of decisions on the policies of each. We believe that all the contributions and incomes of each state should be the subject of deliberate decisions based on equitable criteria in such a way that the resources are transferred from the richest to the poorest. The current system has perverse results. It is in the Community's interests to improve it.

[Question] Setting a ceiling for some countries' contributions leads necessarily to setting a ceiling for other countries' profits.

[Answer] It's not simply a question of setting a ceiling for the British contribution. We are asking for an arrangement which determines the budgetary flow of all member states by linking it to objective factors such as the size of population and relative prosperity. The result should be fair and justifiable for all member states.

[Question] The French Government has always considered that the agricultural surpluses, which burden the budget, came from large, highly profitable enterprises and that it is ridiculous to help them on the same footing as the small farmers.

[Answer] It's a question of social structure rather than an agricultural question. A structral change in the member states' agriculture is inevitable and necessary. The Common Agricultural Policy can deaden the blow of that change and can also encourage and help it. It would be a mistake, uneconomic and fruitless to use the Common Agricultural Policy to prevent it. It would be a mistake to try to reduce surpluses by discouraging efficient farms and encouraging inefficient ones. Therefore, we have always held the view that the guaranteed agricultural prices should relate to the needs of efficient farms. Moreover, Community incentives for efficiency should be gradual rather than revolutionary. We should discuss social structures without making the Common Agricultural Policy an instrument of inefficiency.

[Question] Mitterand is not against increasing the Community's own resources and this is logical if Community activity is extended to new spheres. Are you still opposed to this even if the Community activities are diversified?

[Answer] Exceeding the 1 percent of VAT devoted to the Community budget would require an amendment passed by the parliaments. At present, that seems impracticable since public spending is being subjected to stringent constraints everywhere. In such a climate, it would be difficult to increase the budget at least while there is no real limit to the increase in agricultural spending.

[Question] You want to strengthen political cooperation but the new French Government seems no more prepared than the previous one to strengthen the institutions. It is relying on each country's political will.

[Answer] I agree and I believe that we have that will. Nonetheless, it isn't enough to have the will, you have to have adequate means. It's not desirable to create a new bureaucracy. What I am talking about is a small team--three or four people--working with the chairman of the Community Council.

[Question] The British criticized Giscard d'Estaing for envisaging a Europe with several levels. However, isn't this the only way of making progress?

[Answer] We have never criticized anybody for wanting a Europe with several levels. We simply said that, given the Community's existence, that was not a practical objective. As long as Europe is developing, there are spheres of activity which are not yet Community spheres in which a few states can work together without everybody taking part. But a fragmented Europe would not be a good objective.

[Question] Are you less afraid of the "French-German axis" now that Mitterrand is president?

[Answer] The United Kingdom has never liked "axes" and has not found them useful to world peace and happiness. It is enough that the French Government itself repuditates the idea of a French-German axis. That certainly doesn't mean that we feared or even that we did not like our friends to have ties of friendship. Since a chain is only as strong as its weakest link, the United Kingdom thinks it is vital for all the links in the European chain to be as strong as possible. We respect the historical factors which forged an especially strong link between France and Germany.

[Question] Mrs Thatcher seems to have economic ideas very similar to Reagan's. However, Britain, like all Europeans, is suffering from the high U.S. interest rates. Are you prepared to contribute to "a common and firm attitude" by the Ten toward the United States, as advocated by Delors?

[Answer] Before the Ottawa summit (of the seven Western countries), the Ten will hold a finance council meeting to examine the impact of the U.S. interest rates on the Community. The summit will provide a good opportunity to discuss this with the Americans. It is important for us all that U.S. determination to combat inflation should be successful. It is also important that a fair balance of fiscal and monetary policies should prevent pointless pressures on interest rates. It is obvious that we and the United States have a common interest in combating inflation and restoring the right conditions for sustained growth.

No Neutralist Danger

[Question] Britain intends to take a firm line toward the USSR but is cutting its arms program.

[Answer] There will be no reduction in our defense spending. On the contrary, our defense budget over the next 2 years will maintain a 3 percent annual growth rate in keeping with NATO's objectives. The British Government will reexamine its defense program, making sure that it corresponds to the changing nature of the threat and the most advanced military technology.

[Question] What do you think of the new French Government's attitude on major East-West problems?

[Answer] I wholeheartedly approve of its attitude toward the main East-West problems. After all, that attitude is identical in substance to ours. I am convinced that President Mitterrand and the French Government share our anxiety over the growing threat posed by the increasing number of nuclear missiles deployed in Europe or directed against it in the East just as in the West. I know that the French are as determined as we are to secure a balanced reduction in their number by means of negotiation. The anxiety shared by all the Western allies over events in Poland and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan is an established fact. There may be some subtle differences but there are none regarding the strategic objectives.

[Question] Do you think there is serious danger of neutralism in Europe and even in Britain, as Cheysson said?

[Answer] A distinction must be drawn between neutralism which disregards geographical and political facts and public opinion's anxiety over the level of armaments, especially nuclear armaments. I do not think that there is serious danger of neutralism in Europe and I believe that the British neutralists will remain a small minority. But anxiety over the high level of nuclear armaments is legitimate. I believe that the British people understand that the preservation of peace and security depends both on the credibility of our defense and, at the same time, the search for an agreement on arms control.

[Question] Mitterrand has advocated an increased effort, qualitatively and quantitatively, in Western aid to the Third World.

[Answer] The quality of aid is very important. In this respect, the British are doing rather better than most donors. For instance, three-fifths of our bilateral [as published] aid goes to the poorest countries, 95 percent in the form of gifts. We recognize that financial mechanisms must be diversified in keeping with circumstances and, like Mitterrand, we think that the stabilization of the prices of essential products is important for many developing countries.

Not Wait for the American Go-ahead

[Question] Are you afraid that the revolutionary movements in the Third World feel encouraged by the accession to power of a leftwing government in France?

[Answer] Since I do not take part in the revolutionary movements' deliberations, I must admit that I am not really prepared to speculate on their feelings. What strikes me as more important is the fact that France and Britain have a common interest in the prosperity of the developing countries.

[Question] As chairman of the Ten you are going to resume the "European initiative" in the Near East. What is your view of the situation in the region?

[Answer] Recent events, particularly the Israeli attack on the nuclear installation in Iraq, are likely to further complicate the already difficult task of promoting peace. But we can't just do nothing and allow the deterioration to continue. We will seize every opportunity to move toward an overall peaceful settlement. Above all, we must persuade each side to alter its attitude toward the other in order to create a more trusting atmosphere. Only then can realistic negotiations begin. I hope that Mitterrand's friendship for Israel will help to persuade the Israelis of the sincerity of the European approach to guarantee a secure future for their country.

[Question] Do you believe, as the Iraqis do, that Israel has the nuclear bomb and that would justify the manufacture of an Arab nuclear bomb?

[Answer] Israel says that it will not introduce the nuclear bomb into the Near East but I do not know what capability it has in this sphere. Its nuclear installations are not open to international inspection and I understand why that worries the people in the region. A nuclear arms race in the Near East would be disastrous. That is why we are asking Israel and all the states in the region to sign the nonproliferation treaty and to accept the International Atomic Energy Agency's monitoring. And that is why we stress the need for an all-embracing settlement to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

[Question] What tactics will you use? Will you try to obtain a "go-ahead" from Washington before moving forward?

[Answer] It is difficult to say now exactly how we will proceed during the coming 6 months. We will examine the conclusions of the Ten's last chairman (Netherlands) and we will assess the results of the elections in Israel. The European "initiative"--decided at the European Council meeting in Venice on 13 June 1980--is a point of view and we don't need an American go-ahead. Obviously, we know the limits of what the Ten can do alone and the importance of the U.S. role but I firmly believe that the principles of the Venice Declaration are sound and should be implemented. The question to be asked is how we can do this most effectively in view of the circumstances.

[Question] What do you think of the U.S. outlook which tends to view all world problems, especially the Near East problem, in terms of East-West relations?

[Answer] I do not think that the U.S. attitude is as simplistic as your question suggests.

DAILY TELEGRAPH VIEWS FITZGERALD ELECTION

PM011425 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 1 Jul 81 p 16

[Editorial: "The New Irishman"]

[Text] It remains to be seen whether Dr Fitzgerald, who was elected prime minister of the Irish Republic yesterday, will find that he has been handed a poison chalice. His majority of three is minute even by Irish standards, and his predecessor has bequeathed him a grieveously failing economy which demands urgent attention. The prime minister is a man of remarkable intellect, glittering integrity and great determination, but nobody credits him yet with quite the Machiavellian gifts of Mr Haughey.

Meanwhile, it is important that the British Government should understand the kind of impact which this Taoiseach is likely to make on the handling of Ulster; for, though his present government may not last long, his startling success at the recent general election suggests that he may well win the next one. His party, Fine Gael, is far more inflexibly hostile to the IRA than is Fianna Fail which, for all the tough anti-terrorist measures which it has from time to time taken, can never wholly rid itself of a lingering sympathy with anything militant. Dr Fitzgerald will never do anything willingly, either in public or in secret, to encourage the IRA. From Britain's point of view, this makes his election an invaluable plus. But the matter does not end here. Fine Gael, like all southern Irish parties, is in favour of Irish unity as an ultimate goal. What is more, Dr Fitzgerald treats this aim, like everything else, with a high degree of seriousness. He will undoubtedly continue the discussions now going on with the British Government, but unless he is very carefully watched, he may well start insisting (as Mr Haughey was less likely to do) that they should become "meaningful." Dr Fitzgerald's plan for something like an independent Ulster initially in a loose confederal relationship with the republic--is imaginative but fraught with peril. Happily, he has around him some counsellors who will apply the occasional sedative to his hyperactive mind, but one cannot help recalling Harold MacMillan's remark when he first met the reformist prime minister of Ulster, Terence O'Neill: "This man will cause trouble."

PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU LEAVES FOR TALKS IN ATHENS

NC011845 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 1 Jul 81

[Text] President Kiprianou, accompanied by Foreign Minister Rolandhis and Greek Cypriot representative to the intercommunal talks Ioannidhis, went to Athens this afternoon for talks with the Greek Government in connection with developments in the Cyprus issue. The president was met on arrival in Athens by Greek Prime Minister Rallis, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and armed forces chief General Gratsios.

President Kiprianou will begin his talks tomorrow in a private meeting with Prime Minister Rallis. On Friday, he will have a private meeting with Mr Karamanlis, president of the Republic of Greece. A conference will also take place, and it will be attended by the foreign ministers of Greece and Cyprus, Mr Mitsotakis and Mr Rolandhis, by interlocutor Ioannidhis and by other officials from both Greece and Cyprus. Mr Kiprianou will also have contacts with other political personalities in order to brief them on the national question.

In a statement before his departure, the president said that his talks in Athens will be especially useful, particularly in view of the fact that the Cyprus problem is entering a delicate phase, in the sense that it will be established whether the Turkish side will honor its promises and its commitment to submit constructive and substantive proposals on the Cyprus problem. The submission or failure to submit substantive and constructive proposals by the Turkish side, he added, will be a determining factor both for the future of the dialogue and for future developments.

Mr Kiprianou said that during his talks with the Greek Government views, information and appraisals will be exchanged in order to chart a policy for handling the question during the coming delicate phase. Of course, he stressed, our efforts are not confined within the framework of the dialogue. Various efforts are being exerted in various directions in order to create a suitable climate for putting the necessary pressure on Turkey to change its policy.

In his statement, the president again stressed that the cooperation between the Governments of Greece and Cyprus constitutes one of the most basic prerequisites for the successful outcome of the Cypriot people's struggle for freedom and justice. He also said that relations between Athens and Nicosia are most harmonious and that his visit to Athens today is within the framework of the close cooperation between the two governments.

Mr Kiprianou was seen off at Larnaca Airport by House President Ladhas, who will be acting president of the republic during Mr Kiprianou's absence; members of the Council of Ministers; Greek Charge d'Affaires Sandis; the national guard and police chiefs; and by other officials.

U.S. REPORTEDLY PROPOSES NEW PLAN FOR CYPRUS

NC010924 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 1 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Bonn, 30 June (Special Dispatch)--A German television program on the Cyprus developments focused on the intensive activity in U.S. quarters to achieve a solution in the Cyprus issue.

This television broadcast also mentioned the content of a U.S. plan and the form the solution will take, which as it reported, has been accepted by Greek and Turkish Governments.

The 45-minute television program was prepared by West German journalists and diplomats who are regarded in their country as experts on Middle East affairs.

The program presented a detailed review of the Cyprus issue and outlined future developments particularly in light of the elections in Cyprus.

After stressing the U.S. interest in the Cyprus issue, the producers of the program emphasized that the Europeans should become more active because, as they put it, the Cypriots trust Europe more than the United States.

According to this television broadcast, the U.S. plan for a Cyprus solution includes the following basic provisions:

--To bring the two sides together in a federal system.
--Turkey should return 10 percent of Cypriot territory now under its occupation.
--Seventy-five percent of the displaced Cypriots would return to their homes and the remaining 25 percent would receive compensation from the United States and the EC countries.

According to this plan, a NATO base would be established in Cyprus.

Government Unaware of Plan

NC020730 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 2 Jul 81 p 1

[Excerpt] The government spokesman has stated that the Cyprus Government spokesman has stated that the Cyprus Government is not aware of a plan to solve the Cyprus issue.

This statement was released because of a report in O FILELEVTHEROS, that the FRG television network had revealed the provisions of a U.S. plan to solve the Cyprus issue.

LADHAS URGES RESTORATION OF RELATIONS WITH EGYPT

NC020905 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 2 Jul 81 pp 1, 12

[Excerpt] Acting President Yeoryios Ladhas has stated to Egyptian journalist Samir 'Abd al-Majid, publisher of the Egyptian literary magazine DAR AL-HILAL, that "it is our fervent desire to restore diplomatic relations between Egypt and Cyprus."

Speaking to Samir 'Abd al-Majid, who is in Cyprus as the guest of the Public Information Office, Ladhas expressed the hope that diplomatic relations between Cyprus and Egypt would be restored to ambassadorial level as soon as possible.

Answering a question posed by the Egyptian journalist, Ladhas replied that if he were to address a letter to Egypt's President as-Sadat, he would ask him to do whatever he could to restore Cypriot-Egyptian relations. He would also extend best wishes for the success of President as-Sadat's efforts for peace in the Middle East.

Ladhas made it clear to the Egyptian journalist that he spoke as president of the House and as acting president of the republic, in the name of the government and people, and that everybody desires the restoration of Cypriot-Egyptian relations to the same level as before the sad incident in February 1978.

Ladhas also said that despite the break in diplomatic relations Cyprus and Egypt continued to have economic and other relations. He also said that many Cypriots live and work in Egypt. He said, "I too have relatives there."

KIPRIANOU ARRIVES FOR VISIT ON CYPRUS ISSUE

NC011847 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 1 Jul 81

[Text] Cypriot President Kiprianou arrived in Athens this afternoon. Tomorrow he will meet with President of the Republic Karamanlis and also confer with Prime Minister Rallis. During his stay in Athens he will confer with representatives of political parties. On his arrival at Ellinikon Airport, Kiprianou stated that the Cyprus issue is passing through a phase that is considered (?extremely delicate).

Meets with Mitsotakis

NC011942 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 1 Jul 81

[Text] In a statement issued shortly after his arrival at Ellinikon Airport, Cypriot President Kiprianou said: [begin recording] My visit to Athens is taking place within the framework of the close cooperation that exists between the Greek and Cypriot Governments in respect to the handling and promotion of the national issue toward a just solution.

Before anything else, I would like to express the warm greeting of the people of Cyprus to the brother Greek people, together with their gratitude for the total and multifaceted support in the struggle they are conducting for liberty and justice. The people of Cyprus consider Greece, the government, the political world, all the people of Greece and all Greeks throughout the world as their main support in the struggle for liberty.

The Cyprus issue is entering a rather delicate phase. It was, therefore, natural that at this stage there was the need for an exchange of views between the two governments, an exchange of information and evaluations and of the definition from both sides of the handling of the issue toward its further progress.

As is well known, the inter-Cypriot dialogue has not produced results up to this time. The Turkish side is entirely to blame for this. Despite the good will of the Greek Cypriot side and despite the efforts of the Cypriot Government, there has been no progress. Many promises have been given--that there will be proposals by the Turkish side on the territorial issue, this very important aspect of the Cyprus problem. I do not know to what extent the Turkish side will honor its promises and its obligation based on the summit agreements and the UN resolutions.

In any event, there will be an in-depth review here in Athens during the talks we will have. We will examine the possibilities of handling the situation in accordance with developments that we cannot easily forecast at this moment.

We hope that the Turkish side will demonstrate a spirit of understanding and a more constructive position. If there is none and the dialogue is left to collapse, then this in no way can be blamed on the Greek Cypriot side, which is willing to exhaust all possibilities.

We will also discuss other issues related to the handling of the issue, in respect to briefing foreign governments on the situation and its developments. I believe that we are entering a period in the Cyprus problem that will be crucial to its future developments, both in respect to the dialogue and more generally. This is why the talks here in Athens are of special significance at this time. I have absolutely no doubt that we view the issue in the same light and that we will reach very correct conclusions and joint decisions on the handling of the matter. [end recording]

Foreign Minister Mitsotakis made the following statement: [Begin recording] I would simply like to express my joy, my own personal joy and that of the Greek government and, I am certain, of the entire Greek nation, because today we are welcoming President of the Republic of Cyprus Kiprianou and the Cypriot foreign minister to Greece.

I agree with what President Kiprianou said earlier and particularly with what he said about the immediate future being decisive in the fate of the dialogue and the progress of our national issue. I am also certain that talks will be conducted in a brotherly spirit, because we have the same goal and the same purpose. I am certain that the visit of the Cypriot president and Rolandhis is taking place at a suitable moment and that it will be beneficial to the further handling of the Cyprus issue. We welcome him with all our love as the representative of the brother Cypriot people and, once again, I welcome him to the land of Athens. [end recording]

[Editorial: "The Two Conditions"]

[Excerpts] Cypriot President Kiprianou, accompanied by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, will arrive in Athens today for talks with the Greek Government.

The Cypriot president's visit to the Greek capital is taking place not only within the framework of the periodic direct contacts and consultations between the two governments of Athens and Nicosia, but also, at a time of particular importance because we are on the eve of certain developments regarding the Cyprus problem.

As we have repeatedly stressed, there are two basic conditions for the Greek Cypriots' survival and the success of the struggle for their national restoration. The first is the harmony and cooperation of the two parts of Hellenism. The other is the concord and unity of the Greek Cypriots.

Regarding the first condition, Greece's support is both true and a fact, not only at the level of the political leadership and relations between the two states, but also at the level of its people.

With regard to the second condition, the only thing we have to say or, rather, to reiterate, is that, always within the framework of pluralism, dialogue and the comparison of views--which constitute the living essence of democracy--it is required that there should be a deeper concord and a rallying of all parts, based on a common and united line that will give stamina to resist the pressures and adverse circumstances, and that will support the Cypriot state in its refusal to mortgage its future and the existence of the Greek Cypriots. Any rift, particularly on the handling of the national issue, would facilitate, whether desired or not, the plans of those who overtly or covertly are working to confirm and consolidate the "fait accomplis."

Finally, we would express confidence that the "summit" talks that begin in Athens today will be both cordial but also constructive in the further handling of the great national issue.

MITSOTAKIS DISPUTES PAPANDREOU ON NESTOS ISSUE

NC012140 Athens NEWS in English 1 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] Luxembourg, (APE) Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis said yesterday, with reference to a statement by Pasok Chairman Andreas Papandreou on the expected signing of an agreement with Bulgaria concerning the issue of the River Nesto, that Mr Papandreou's information is, as usual, incorrect. The Foreign Minister said [there] was no question of signing an agreement on the waters of the River Nestos within the week, and that the government would arrive at such a decision when the time was ripe for it, and announce it accordingly.

In the meantime, negotiations were continuing, the minister said, adding: "Since Mr Papandreou knows that the government is always willing to brief him on any national issue, it would be so much better if he asked to be informed before issuing his inaccurate statements."

I KATHIMERINI Comments

NC012138 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 1 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] As of yesterday, a Greek delegation under Ambassador Korandis started discussing in Sofia the new Bulgarian proposals on the Nestos River as they have been drawn up within the spirit of the recent talks in Rhodes between President of the Republic Karamanlis and Bulgarian Chairman Zhivkov. A preview of these proposals was given to the government during the talks between the foreign ministers of the two countries, Mitsotakis and Todorov, [as published] during the Bulgarian chairman's visit to Greece. During the exploratory talks in Sofia, according to available reports, the Greek side will not only attempt to convince the Bulgarians of the quantity of Nestos River waters considered essential to our country's requirements, but will also attempt to get guarantees from Bulgaria on its obligations, regardless of the character of the agreement to be signed.

The basic difference between the Greek and Bulgarian sides centers on the amount of the river's water that flows into Greece. In order to meet ecological requirements, our country needs at least 450 million cubic meters of water per annum. In contrast, Bulgaria has agreed to supply 300 million cubic meters per annum, and, of this, only 130 million cubic meters free of charge. The Bulgarians have proposed that our country should pay for the remaining quantity.

According to existing information, it will not be easy for the two sides to reach an agreement unless there is some spectacular change on the Bulgarian side. It is recalled that up to the Kerkira meeting between then prime minister and current President Karamanlis and Bulgarian Chairman Zhivkov, the Greek-Bulgarian talks on the Nestos River progressed at the speed of a tortoise. Some progress has been achieved since then, characterized by an advancement of the Greek positions. Despite this, however, it has been impossible to achieve full rapprochement of the views of the two sides because the Bulgarian side continues to refuse to satisfy the quantity considered essential at the Thisavros dam, which will require 30 years to recover expenses. The quantity demanded by our country is needed to meet the irrigation requirements of the entire area in perpetuity as well as to protect the ecological environment of the Greek basin of the Nestos River.

In addition, there is also the question of the water's quality, because the Greek side is not prepared to accept water polluted by affluents which cannot be used for the needed purposes. In addition to the quantity and the quality of the water, a third question arises regarding the commencement of the relevant agreement. The Greek side is arguing that the agreement should take effect when the Thisavros dam project is put into operation. The Bulgarians, on the other hand, are proposing an agreement that will not be related to the construction of the dam.

VOTCP: CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY LAW 'ANTIDEMOCRATIC'

TA020907 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Station commentary: "A Democratic Constituent Assembly or an Unauthorized Consultative Assembly?"]

[Excerpts] Dear Listeners, the National Security Council [NSC] has ratified the law on the formation and duties of the so-called Constituent Assembly. The law states that the Assembly will be comprised of the NSC and a 160-member Consultative Assembly. It notes that 40 members will be directly appointed by the NSC and 120 members will be appointed by the NSC from among candidates determined by the governors. The fact that this Assembly is shyly termed a Consultative Assembly shows that it is in no way connected with the functions of a democratic constituent assembly.

Dear listeners, the discussions reflected in the press on the Constituent Assembly have focused more on the issue of whether the bourgeois parties of the old assembly would be included in the Constituent Assembly. However, this is not the main issue. The main issue is securing the democratic rights and freedoms of the people and the toilers and convening a democratic constituent assembly under these conditions. However, an assembly to be convened by the junta under current conditions will not be a democratic constituent assembly because the junta is pursuing a policy basically in favor of imperialists and monopolies. The people lack democratic freedoms.

In the adopted Constituent Assembly law, the junta states that it will appoint all the members. This demonstrates that this Assembly will serve as a consultative council entirely under the supervision of the junta. The Turkish Communist Party [TCP] view that an assembly to be convened by the junta under existing antidemocratic conditions when it is applying heavy pressure on working class organizations will not be a democratic constituent assembly is once again confirmed. This situation emphasizes the need to convene a democratic constituent assembly in order to effect a transition to democracy.

The TCP holds the following view on this matter: A democratic constituent assembly can be established only under conditions in which the people are able to voice their wishes in a free and organized manner and to establish a government of national democratic forces based on the active support of the people. A democratic constituent assembly must be composed of representatives of all the classes and strata of the population, except a handful of the collaborationist and monopolistic bourgeoisie, and of all the political forces in favor of national interests and democracy except the forces that support imperialism and fascism. A democratic constituent assembly must be established, a democratic constitution safeguarding the anti-imperialist and antimonopolistic gains must be drawn up, and democratic elections must be held.

MITTERRAND STRESSES UNEMPLOYMENT IN SUMMIT SPEECH

PM030908 Paris LE MONDE in French 1 Jul 81 pp 1, 5

[Maurice Delarue and Philippe Lemaitre dispatch]

[Excerpt] Luxembourg--"It is clear that Francois Mitterrand's arrival has produced a shock and that the big countries are divided on the way in which we must struggle against the crisis. On the one hand, Germany and Britain are very close to each other. And on the other hand, there is France. Italy is positioned between the two but leans more toward France. The small countries are divided between the two sides." These comments by Belgian Prime Minister Eyskens sum up perfectly the prevailing impression.

Mitterrand's speech, which was certainly the most comprehensive, was described as "carefully thought out" and "moderate" and it "made an impression." But, it clearly did not convince the new clan of "hardliners" which seems to be forming around Mrs Thatcher and Mr Schmidt (a worrying prospect for the coming debates). After pointing out that the Community constitutes the appropriate framework for solving a number of problems raised by the crisis, Mitterrand stressed France's desire to avoid ideological debates and to adopt a pragmatic approach. Referring to the action taken by his government, he asserted that economic and social policies are closely linked and that the second cannot continue to play the role of poor relation. Economic revival and selective stimulation of demand are therefore necessary for social reasons. There would be every advantage in implementing this at European level. In this respect, the president advocated four areas for consideration: increasing, by means of Community loans or joint loans (such as the French-German loan), financing opportunities in favor of enterprises regarded as priority because of their performance or great prospects for innovation; supporting efforts to give a European dimension to certain industrial sectors such as information, research, energy saving and major projects; considering the concept of the "European social area" in order to tackle the economic file as a whole; and speeding up the studies on sharing and reducing working time.

Touching on foreign economic policy and preparations for the Ottawa summit, Mitterrand noted and deplored the impenetrable nature of the Japanese market. He said he is under no particular delusion on the chances for the United States abandoning its policy of increased interest rates. The Americans are aware, he added, of the serious disadvantages which this policy bring for their allies. How long is this situation going to last? The question was formulated in such a way as to "reflect a certain amount of irritation on the part of the president," French commentators say. Mitterrand then highlighted the importance of the North-South dialogue and the need to rapidly open up useful approach paths. In conclusion, he asserted that the chief priority of all today must be the fight against unemployment. "Everything must be done to wage a lasting fight against this scourge in a social area calmed down by sharing work time, trade union consultation and full utilization of the European dimension."

DENMARK REJECTS EEC BUDGET REFORM PROPOSALS

[Lars Th. Kjoelbye report]

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen rejected the EEC Commission's new budget reform proposals at a meeting at Marienborg yesterday evening with Commission Chairman Gaston Thorn. At a news conference at the Hotel d'Angleterre shortly before midnight, Thorn admitted that he had met with much criticism from the Danish Government about the proposals which were made public in Luxembourg on Wednesday [24 June]. After meetings in Paris Thursday morning and in Bonn Thursday afternoon, Thorn admitted that the Danish reaction was the most critical and said yesterday evening that it could take months to reach agreement within the EEC on the central issues involved, especially the British budget problems which started the whole affair a year ago.

SCHMIDT CALLS DELAY IN ARMS TALKS 'ANNOYING'

LD021846 Hamburg DPA in German 1720 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 2 Jul (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Schmidt today was given an initial report by SPD Deputy Chairman Wischnewski on the results of the Moscow talks of SPD Chairman Willy Brandt. In a talk with young trainees at the chancellor's office, Schmidt said that Wischnewski has already reported to him in a telephone call from Moscow. It is understood that Brandt will report to the federal chancellor tomorrow, Friday, on his talks with Soviet state and party head Brezhnev. Schmidt affirmed that he expects Brezhnev to come to Bonn in November.

Schmidt drew attention to Brezhnev's statement in his talks with Brandt that Moscow is prepared for negotiations with the United States on the limitation of nuclear medium-range weapons. The chancellor recalled that the Soviet leadership similarly told him and Foreign Minister Genscher of its readiness during their visit to Moscow last summer. Schmidt described the delay of the negotiations as very annoying because the USSR in the meantime has constantly deployed new nuclear missiles.

Schmidt rejected the argument submitted by the youngsters that the NATO decision amounts to arming first in order to disarm later. Schmidt said that the NATO decision was caused by the threat posed by Soviet arming in the medium-range sector. The United States is ready to negotiate with the USSR. It must be the aim of the negotiations, Schmidt said, to dismantle if not all at least a large part of the Soviet missiles. Ideally, nuclear medium-range weapons should be abandoned altogether both in the East and the West.

SPD CHAIRMAN BRANDT DISCUSSES MOSCOW TALKS

Speaks in Munich

LD021810 Hamburg DPA in German 1717 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Text] Munich, 2 Jul (DPA)--During his talks with Soviet state and party head Brezhnev, SPD Chairman Willy Brandt gained the impression that "some realistic starting points for negotiations" on nuclear weapons of a European range exist.

Speaking in Munich tonight at a ceremony marking the 10th anniversary of the death of former Bavarian SPD Chairman Waldemar von Knoeringen, Brandt, just returned from a 4-day visit to Moscow, said that it is his impression--"and I hope I am not mistaken"--that such negotiations will produce results. Without Soviet readiness negotiations make no sense.

"Whatever one's views of Soviet policy may be, as far as I am concerned, I have no doubt of Brezhnev's desire for peace," the SPD chairman said. But he also stated in Moscow that a desire for peace alone is not enough; peace must be made secure by negotiation. Speculations about limited nuclear war in Europe are believed in the East to be "mistaken and unrealistic."

Brandt emphasized that he did not engage in negotiations in Moscow. But his visit has been useful for gathering information. He has been greatly strengthened in his view "that there is dangerously little open talk." "We Germans, we from the FRG, should not take ourselves too seriously from the viewpoint of world politics, but we do have some influence if we make the effort," Brandt said.

Briefs Chancellor

LD031440 Hamburg DPA in German 1343 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 3 Jul (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt today briefed Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on the results of his talks with the Soviet leadership in Moscow.

Brandt had a lengthy telephone conversation with Schmidt after the two politicians talked Thursday evening, immediately after Brandt's return. The SPD chairman reportedly explained to the chancellor the proposal--described by Brandt as a "new emphasis"--by Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev to freeze deployment of the East and West of nuclear medium-range missiles.

The results of the talks by Brandt and his Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski were, according to information in Bonn, apparently received a positive reception from the chancellor. The party chairman also conveyed to the head of government a verbal message from Brezhnev who is expected to visit Bonn in November. It has been reported that Brezhnev's message is of a more courteous than political nature. On Saturday, Brandt intends to deliver to the federal chancellor a written report on his talks in Moscow. The two politicians plan a talk for the beginning of next week.

Brandt also intends this weekend to draft a report on the proposals and statements by the Soviet leaders for U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and to deliver it to him personally. It has been said that the SPD chief intends to offer further detailed information to Haig if he is interested. Brandt could urge the U.S. secretary of state to examine carefully Brezhnev's proposal for a moratorium on nuclear missiles. Brandt has already spoken to this effect in Moscow. Brandt will brief Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on Monday.

Grants Interview

LD041030 Hamburg DPA in German 0831 GMT 4 Jul 81

[Text] Hamburg, 4 Jul (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has once again underlined his impression that the Soviet leadership is greatly interested in early disarmament neogitations with the United States on nuclear medium-range missiles. In an interview for the news magazine DER SPIEGEL, Brandt said after his return from a 4-day Moscow trip that the Soviet Union intends to negotiate. Once can say what one likes about the Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev but: "where the issue of world peace is concerned, he trembles."

Brandt, who briefed Chancellor Helmut Schmidt by telephone on Friday about the outcome of his talks with the Soviet leadership, in the interview explained in detail the Brezhnev proposal for a ban on the deployment of nuclear medium-range missiles in the East and West which Brandt regards as a "new accent."

According to the SPD chairman, the Soviets are prepared "by way of introduction to the negotiating process as it were, not to continue with (their) SS-20 (missiles)" on condition, according to Brandt, that the United States indicates to the USSR that it--during the negotiations--will do nothing which indicates an "increase in the envisaged nuclear potential." This means, Brandt continued, that the USSR stipulated "no conditions regarding production, including our present preparatory work such as digging and concrete work for setting up the missiles, but concentrates totally on this one crucial point, namely, deployment."

In the interview, Brandt indicated his shock about the great differences in numbers concerning missiles and warheads which the two sides claim are involved. There were discrepancies ranging from 1 in 10 to 1 in 100. "If for no other reason, this alone is enough to start negotiations as quickly as possible."

According to Brandt, the reason no disarmament neogitations have taken place thus far is that the Soviets have taken too much time and have incorrectly assessed the situation--now the Soviets are confused "because they still do not know what the Americans actually want."

The SPD chief intends this weekend to draft a report on proposals and statements by the Soviets and to send it to U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig. Brandt will brief Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on Monday.

The Brandt interview was prereleased to DPA by DER SPIEGEL.

SPD DEPUTY CHAIRMAN COMMENTS ON SOVIET VISIT

Telephone Interview

DW021844 Saarbruecken Saarlaendischer Rundfunk Network in German 0610 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Excerpts from reporter Schwarz telephone interview with Hans-Juergen Wischnewski, deputy SPD chairman, in Moscow--live]

[Text] [Question] The CDU/CSU last night said that you would return emptyhanded to Bonn. What do you carry along with you?

[Answer] I want to point out quite plainly and unequivocally that prior to the visit we said that we wanted to get information in a difficult period of time. We are ready to give answers wherever we can. It has never been our task to hold negotiations here. This is a matter pertaining to governments, not parties. But we have gained a variety of new and important knowledge about a difficult international situation. This is what we are carrying along with us and about which we will inform the Federal Government as soon as possible.

[Question] Defense policy topic number one is the issue of medium-range weapons. Do you believe that the Soviet Union will be really open to negotiations in this field?

[Answer] I have no doubt that the Soviet Union is interested in negotiations with the United States in as much as the United States is interested in them, according to the impression gained by the federal chancellor during his visit in Washington. The big problem which exists is--and this was shown by this visit--that one is proceeding from different figures. Our alliance possesses figures other than those given by the Soviet Union. This is why it is decisively significant that negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union start as soon as possible so that agreement can start on a joint basis.

[Question] Was Afghanistan one of the subjects discussed in your talks?

[Answer] Yes, yesterday we touched on this question in detail. We expressed our view on the issue, which is known. We heard the Soviet point of view. [passage indistinct]

Bonn News Conference

LD031146 Hamburg DPA in German 0928 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 3 Jul (DPA)--Deputy SPD Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischenewski called on the United States to carefully examine the "newly formulated proposal by Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev for a halt to the deployment of new nuclear medium-range missiles in West and East Europe."

At a news conference today in Bonn on SPD Chairman Willy Brandt's talks with the Soviet leadership in Moscow, Wischnewski, who accompanied Brandt, said that Brezhnev's "new formulation" on his moratorium proposal means a difference not only in words "but also in substance," The Soviet Union "clearly and plainly has dropped" the earlier demand for the West to abandon all preparations for the deployment of new medium-range missiles as a condition for a deployment freeze in the East and West.

The change in the Soviet attitude has to be further examined, Wischnewski said. "In particular, the United States should be interested in examining this very closely." The Soviet leadership made its proposal to influence positively the developments concerning the sought after U.S.-Soviet negotiations. Wischnewski announced that today Brandt intends to brief Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and the Allies.

In Wischnewski's view, a textual comparison with earlier statements reveals new emphases in Brezhnev's proposal. At the CPSU Party Congress on 23 February 1981, Brezhnev proposed that the East and West should "agree" on a moratorium on medium-range missiles so that negotiations could begin immediately. Here, Brezhnev demanded that the two sides freeze all preparations for the deployment of the new missiles. During Brandt's visit, Brezhnev stated Moscow's willingness to freeze the deployment of Soviet medium-range missiles in the European part of the Soviet Union if negotiations on the essence of the matter would begin and if the United States would let it be known that it was also not increasing the number of medium-range missiles.

Wischnewski emphasized that the differences Brezhnev had before the party congress still demanded an agreement, but now he was talking of a statement by the United States to the Soviet Union. Brezhnev now no longer said anything on the question of preparations for deployment; it was a matter of a "material difference" in Moscow's statements. This has to be examined very closely by all those responsible.

The Soviet leadership has, said Wischnewski, shown "surprisingly great interests" in the so-called zero option in medium-range missiles as discussed by Brandt. This is the abandonment of the deployment of new U.S. missiles in the event that Soviet medium-range missiles are withdrawn accordingly.

Wischnewski confirmed that Brezhnev had asked the SPD chairman what the Soviet Union--from the Western point of view--had to do to attain this option. Brandt responded without discussing numbers of weapons because this is the job of the United States and the Soviet Union as negotiating partners. Brandt stressed as a goal the "approximate balance" discussed by Brezhnev and Schmidt in Bonn in 1979. Wischnewski also confirmed Brezhnev's statement to Brandt that instructions had been given to Moscow ministries in connection with the zero option.

Wischnewski described the differing views and methods of verification as one of the most difficult problems in the planned negotiations. Promising negotiations make it necessary for clarification to be achieved as soon as possible--which should not require an excessively long time.

Wischnewski said that Brandt's visit occurred "at the right time" and yielded important information valuable for the work of the Federal Government and the SPD. Brandt made use of his large measure of trust with Brezhnev and other Soviet leaders in the interest of the Federal Republic. In view of Brandt's efforts to be of help in a difficult situation, those in the CDU/CSU opposition who made "stupid remarks" about the trip to Moscow should be really ashamed.

A visit to Washington by Deputy SPD Parliamentary Group Chairman Horst Ehmke from 6 to 10 July is, according to the Parliamentary Group, to help brief the U.S. Government on Brandt's talks in Moscow.

GENSCHER APPEALS TO SOVIETS ON SS-20, AFGHANISTAN

LD050932 Hamburg DPA in German 0722 GMT 5 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 5 Jul (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher once again appealed to the Soviet Union to stop the production and deployment of more SS-20 missiles and to gradually dismantle the existing medium-range missiles.

In an interview for RIAS Berlin, recorded prior to his departure for London, the FDP chairman said on Sunday that Moscow alone is to blame for the counterarming by the West. It is up to the Soviet Union whether Western counterarming takes place.

Genscher said: "If the Soviet Union declares today...that it abolishes its advance arming with medium-range missiles, then our counterarming will no longer be necessary. If it states that it intends to reduce its medium-range missile advancing arming, then we will examine whether our counterarming should be reduced." The foreign minister underlined that any Moscow proposal will have to be measured against this yardstick. The West is not intent on counterarming at any price "but we are being pushed into counterarming."

Genscher, who will be briefed by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt on Monday about his Moscow talks, welcomed the fact that the Soviet side has once again confirmed its willingness to start negotiations with the United States without preconditions. He pointed out that Moscow had told Brandt and his deputy Hans-Juergen Wischnewski that additional explanations would be forthcoming and that direct contacts existed between the Americans and the Soviets. This belies "the nonsense of there allegedly being no talks between the two great powers."

Contacts between the United States and the Soviet Union have never been severed. Both world powers maintain a close exchange of views. Bonn is interested in the continuation of this dialogue and hopes that during the September meeting between the two foreign ministers, Andrey Gromyko and Alexander Haig, an understanding on the formal commencement of negotiations will be achieved.

Genscher pointed out that the Federal Government's security policy is assured broad support in the Bundestag, calling this a gain. He is trying to obtain the opposition's consent for this policy. However, this does not mean that this policy does not require a majority also within the government coalition. Bundestag voting has shown that such a majority exists.

Genscher, who will be discussing the EC's Afghanistan initiative in London on Sunday with Lord Carrington, the British foreign minister, prior to the latter's Moscow trip, will consider a constructive attitude by the Soviet Union to the idea of an Afghanistan conference as a confidence-building step. The West respects Moscow's need for security. Hence, the objective is not to turn Afghanistan into a bastion against the Soviet Union. "Our sole interest is for Afghanistan to be nonaligned, independently."

Concerning the latest talks between representatives of the Bonn and East Berlin Foreign Ministries on questions of arms control and disarmament, Genscher said that this does not mean a revalorization of the GDR position. He considers the talks necessary, right and useful. He intends to talk on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly in New York with the GDR foreign minister about a continuation of this disarmament dialogue, which does not mean going it alone. Concerning the implementation of the Helsinki Final Act, Bonn and East Berlin should set an example.

Urges EC Initiative

LD061114 Hamburg DPA in German 1039 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 Jul (DPA)--FDP Chairman and FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has appealed to the Soviet Union to carefully examine and give a positive reply to the EC's peace initiative on Afghanistan.

The EC initiative, which Genscher discussed on Sunday in London with his British counterpart Lord Carrington and French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson, is being submitted by Carrington to Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko today.

Speaking to the FDP Presidium in Bonn today, Genscher called the EC initiative a serious attempt to end by means of a political solution the war in Afghanistan which weighs increasingly on the conscience of the world. At a time of increased tensions in the world, a peaceful solution to the conflict concerning the country now occupied by Soviet troops could become an act of worldwide confidence-building. In view of the positive attitude taken by Afghanistan's other neighboring states, the decision as to whether there will be a peace conference this fall now lies with the Soviet Union.

SCHMIDT VIEWS TRADE RESTRICTIONS, DEVELOPMENT AID

LD021700 Hamburg DPA in German 0844 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 2 Jul (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has warned Western industrialized countries against mutual trade restrictions. The main aim of the economic summit of the seven leading Western economic countries in Ottawa at the end of July must be to ensure that for another year the industrialized countries do not allow themselves, in the face of world economic structural crises, a worldwide slackening in economic activity, inflation and unemployment, "reciprocally to close their borders to the products of others," Schmidt said in a DEUTSCHE WELLE interview today. Protectionism can only result in still higher unemployment as the world experienced in the 1930's.

With regard to the North-South summit conference in Mexico in the autumn, Schmidt said that he regrets that, as things appear at present, none of the Eastern bloc countries, or at least not the Soviet Union, will be taking part. He said he regards this as a mistake because the Soviet Union must also contribute to aid for the developing, undernourished world and the many billions of people in the Third World.

The chancellor also referred to the different attitudes of Bonn and the United States toward development aid. He said that whereas the Federal Government considers general development aid important, Washington seems to place more value on aid for those states with which it enjoys particularly good political relations. However, he said he doubts that the United States will adhere to this attitude It is always dangerous to assume that everything that is said in election campaigns will be implemented later in the same way. Schmidt said that in principle the instruments of development policy are adequate and there are also enough ideas about a balance of interests between North and South. "What is lacking is the strength to make compromises which will to some extent burden one's own people. Naturally, we must also be prepared to make compromises which affect the German standard of living."

CHEYSSON COMMENTS ON IRAQI REACTOR, ARMS SALES

LD051424 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 5 Jul 81

[Text] Claude Cheysson, French minister of external relations, has announced that should Iraq wish to enter into a new agreement with France to buy a nuclear reactor, France is prepared to supply one to it subject to the same conditions as those applied to other buyers. Claude Cheysson revealed this in an interview given to the Lebanese daily AN-NAHAR. However, he stressed that France insists on assuring itself about the peaceful use of nuclear energy.

Moreover, he pointed out that contracts for weapons signed during Giscard d'Estaing's time will be honored. With regard to the future, there will, however, be two general restrictions. France will not deliver arms to totalitarian countries which could use them for repressive purposes. The second restriction concerns states which are at war. France will not deliver arms to parties involved in the Middle East conflict. This is, therefore, a restriction which applies particularly to Israel.

Further Report

NC051405 Paris AFP in English 1347 GMT 5 Jul 81

[Text] Beirut, 5 Jul (AFP)--France would supply Iraq with another nuclear reactor--replacing the one destroyed by Israeli planes last month--under the same conditions as apply to other customers, French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson said in an interview published today in the Lebanese daily AN-NAHAR.

Mr Cheysson added, however, that France was anxious to ensure that nuclear energy was used for peaceful and not military purposes. (The Iraqi plant was alleged by Israel to be preparing to make a nuclear bomb.)

France was also prepared to supply arms to Iraq, Gulf states and Egypt, Mr Cheysson said. But he was against the sale of arms to Israel as it was in conflict with other countries in the region.

Mr Cheysson also reaffirmed that France recognised the Palestine Liberation Organisation as a representative of the Palestinians, but not the only one. Under present conditions the Palestinians were not in a position to choose their representatives democratically, he said.

On the Lebanese crisis Mr Cheysson said that no permanent solution would be possible without a settlement of the Middle East question as a whole. The solution would have to come from the Lebanese people themselves, he said, and he did not rule out an improvement in the situation.

PRESIDENT TALKS WITH CANADIAN PRIME MINISTER

[Dominique Thombres report]

[Text] Pierre Elliot Trudeau was received by President Mitterrand at the Elysee for lunch on Thursday, 25 June. The Canadian prime minister, who is making a short tour of Europe in preparation for the Ottawa summit of industrialized countries in July, arrived in Paris Wednesday evening. On Thursday evening, Trudeau dined with Chancellor Schmidt in Bonn. He was to meet Mrs Thatcher in London on Friday before returning to the Canadian capital. He will meet Reagan in Washington on 10 July, also with a view to the Ottawa summit.

Pierre Elliot Trudeau was at the Elysee not long after George Bush, but it appears that the Canadian prime minister's preoccupations differed widely from those of the U.S. vice president. Mitterrand himself brought up the subject of the Communist ministers while his interlocutor said not a word about it. Afterward, Trudeau implicity criticized the U.S. attitude on this matter by stating that, for his part, he "does not want to tell another country how it should form its government." He said that the appointment of Communist ministers "does not hinder French-Canadian relations," "changes nothing" and is of "no importance...."

The Canadian prime minister went as far as to draw a comparison with his own initiative of February 1980. At that time, he invited members of the new Democratic Party to join his government. That party, which is affiliated with the Socialist International, refused. Trudeau wished to show above all that it is possible, not unreasonably, to offer ministerial portfolios to members of another party when you have a parliamentary majority and, in any event, that this step is not unprecedented in Western countries.

However, the greater part of the talks between Mitterrand and Trudeau was devoted to preparing for the economic summit which will assemble the United States, Britain, France, the FRG, Italy, Canada and Japan in Ottawa 20 and 21 July. It is noted on the Canadian side that the two men reached an "almost spontaneous understanding" on the agenda for the meeting. In particular, a dinner is proposed for all the participants on the eve of the opening of the discussions, where all subjects could be brought up freely. It is still necessary to convince the Americans, who are reluctant to depart from the traditional framework for these industrialized countries' summits, that this method is worthwhile. The idea of putting the emphasis on North-South dialogue, which Mitterrand and Trudeau share, does not inspire enthusiasm in either Reagan or Mrs Thatcher.

The Canadian prime minister noted a "convergence of views on certain aspects of the North-South dialogue" between himself and the French president. Their philosophical and political approaches are comparable. On his last visit to Paris last November, Trudeau noted that the aim of that dialogue is to arrive at a better division not only of wealth, but also of powers, and that "only a revolution in international morality" will make it possible to reduce the gap between rich and poor countries. Whereas Washington highlights the more limited problems of recycling petrodollars or of development aid, Trudeau seeks the elaboration of a "mutually acceptable code of conduct" for Northern and Southern countries.

The Canadian prime minister also agrees with Mitterrand that the monetary and fiscal policies of the major Western countries and Japan will be one of the main subjects discussed in Ottawa. The very high interest rates current in the United States are a matter of concern for the Canadians as much as for the Europeans.

The Quebec Question

The Quebec question was touched on briefly. Mitterrand assure his interlocutor that he will do nothing to create internal problems in Canada. The Canadian side noted that the "noninterference, nonindifference" formula which summed up French policy in this sphere in Giscard d'Estaing's time and which implies that Paris, without becoming involved in Canada's internal affairs, cannot remain indifferent to Quebec's fate, was not cited by Mitterrand, but that his remarks conformed to that spirit.

Mitterrand was invited to officially visit Canada. The possibility has not been excluded that this visit could take place in the wake of the Ottawa summit if the French president's schedule permits. In that case, it would include a trip to Quebec. Claude Morin, Quebec's minister of intergovernmental affairs, who is in Paris until Saturday [27 June] and who meets Mauroy on Friday, is also calling for Mitterrand to visit Quebec, but in a different context.

Trudeau also met Mauroy on Thursday and invited him to visit Canada; the invitation was accepted. The conversation between the two prime ministers chiefly concerned bilateral issued. Negotiations--as yet fruitless--are underway to define French territorial waters around Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon. The question of France's traditional fishing rights in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence, which are due to expire in 1986, also was raised. Trudeau and Mauroy finally touched on plans for developing Canada's natural wealth, particularly gas and coal, in which France has interests.

FOREIGN MINISTER VIEWS UPCOMING OTTAWA SUMMIT

NC032030 Paris AFP in English 2017 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 3 Jul (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson today called on Japan to live up to its international economic responsibilities and warned that Japan would cause serious problems if it made "too rapid, too brutal" forays into foreign markets.

In wide-ranging remarks to the Anglo-American Press Club here, Mr Cheysson also vowed that France would not accept policies that would hurt "little countries," called the upcoming Ottawa summit one of the most important ever for France, stressed the need for revamped North-South relations, and warned against the use of force in unsettled Central American nations.

"The Japanese must take into account when their penetration (in foreign markets) is too rapid, too brutal, and creates very serious problems for us," Mr Cheysson said. "It isn't enough for them to respond with statistics or by smiles around a language that none of us understands anyway," he said. "We would truly like the Japanese to participate in world responsibilities," he said.

Mr Cheysson also indicated that there may be a showdown with the U.S. at the Ottawa summit later this month of seven industrialized nations over the importance of North-South relations.

France considers the North-South issue "much more important" than the United States due to deeper trade links, Mr Cheysson said. The Americans also tend to see economic problems in isolation, he said.

"If President (Ronald) Reagan could come to Ottawa with the conviction that North-South is a top priority subject with his allies, then I think that Ottawa would have been very important," he said. "We would like the Americans to understand that all subjects are linked."

"One cannot simply speak about the fight against inflation without evoking other economic and social aspects," he said, continuing his Socialist government's hard-hitting attacks on continued high U.S. interest rates.

Mr Cheysson said the summit was also of major importance to France because it will be the first face-to-face meeting between Mr Reagan and French President Francois Mitterrand.

Saying his government stressed humanist values, Mr Cheysson said France "will not accept economic policies that bring suffering down upon the smallest countries."

He expressed concern about developments in El Salvador, Nicaragua and Guatemala and said that force was not the answer in Latin America, whether used by the government, the opposition or outsiders. "We wish that each of these peoples has the best chance to express itself democratically," Mr Cheysson said. "The only policy possible with these countries is to aid them in the period that follows their independence."

He said the French Government's policies of humanism will lead Paris repeatedly to denounce the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan as "intolerable" and the presence of Vietnamese forces in Cambodia as "unacceptable."

He also reiterated his government's fundamental support of the Atlantic alliance, saying that that is "where we are the best allies of the United States."

On terrorism, Mr Cheysson said that France would extradite presumed Basque terrorists only if there was clear proof that the suspects had committed common law offences.

"We will not extradite any political refugees or political criminals no matter what their nationality," he said.

The issue of extradition of presumed Basque terrorists was long a sore point between Spain and former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing. Yesterday Mitterrand told visiting Spanish Premier Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo that France would not be a sanctuary for Spanish terrorists.

MITTERRAND, WALDHEIM DISCUSS THIRD WORLD ISSUES

NC021717 Paris AFP in English 1641 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 2 Jul (AFP)--The relations between the industrialized countries and the Third World were the principal subject of hour-long discussions today between French President Francois Mitterrand and United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim.

The secretary general said he and Mr Mitterrand had talked about ways to get out of "the dead end" that the North-South dialogue currently faces. Mr Waldheim said he had been impressed by Mr Mitterrand's interest in such problems and his support of United Nations efforts to solve them.

The secretary general also said he had been glad to hear Mr Mitterrand's views on the European Economic Community's plan for an international conference on Afghanistan.

On the Middle East, Mr Waldheim said Mr Mitterrand had emphasized the complexity of the situation. Mr Waldheim added that Mr Mitterrand had said that he would visit the United Nations when he came to the United States, but that there were no plans for him to make a speech there.

Mr Waldheim later met with Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy, and was to meet with Jean-Pierre Cot, minister of cooperation, to discuss the United Nations conference on the least advanced countries set for Paris in September. Another meeting, with Exterior Relations Minister Claude Cheysson, was scheduled for Thursday evening. Mr Waldheim is to return to New York on Friday.

HABIB CHATTI MEETS CHEYSSON, DISCUSSES MIDEAST

PM031031 Paris LE FIGARO in French 26 Jun 81 p 4

[Claude Lorieux report]

[Text] Habib Chatti, secretary general of the Islamic Conference organization (42 countries), had talks with [French External Relations Minister] Claude Cheysson yesterday evening. Chatti arrived in Paris for the inaugural session of the "France-Jerusalem Association," created in Paris last December in order, as he put it, to "enlighten French opinion on the problem of Jerusalem," a city which, he reminds us, "has the same value for all the monotheist religions" and "has always been Arab and will remain so."

According to Chatti, "the Tammuz affair has only just begun. The Security Council has not really settled it." The raid on Iraq poses three problems for the Arab and Muslim countries, to which they must "give much thought":

1) The Americans are arming Israel, even though that country is not using the arms as envisaged, and they are preventing other governments from imposing sanctions on the Jewish state.

2) Israel, "which has the bomb while Arab countries do not have it and which does not accept the controls of the Vienna agency, can go a long way without thinking about the consequences." "Tomorrow Israel could bomb Pakistan," Chatti states. "Israel believes that its defense is not possible unless other countries are defenseless; we cannot accept this logic."

3) The technical qualities of the raid: Israel was not only well equipped and armed but also "well informed."

The first result of all this, Chatti notes, is the statement by Iraqi President Saddam Husayn, calling for aid from the Arab countries in manufactureing the nuclear bomb.

Habib Chatti also voiced the Islamic Conference countries' support for the proposal made by the Ten in Luxembourg Tuesday [23 June] for a conference on the Afghan crisis. He believes that the evolution of the situation in the region since the proposal made in a similar spirit by Valery Giscard d'Estaing early in the year confirms in the eyes of the world--and the USSR in particular--that a military solution is impossible.

[Text] Rome, 4 Jul (AFP)--Police have arrested 45 alleged terrorists and hauled in a large quantity of arms here following an investigation that points to cooperation between Italian extremists from the right and the left, informed sources said today.

The arrests, made in the last few days, were believed to include both rightists and leftists. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of five others.

The sources said police investigations have established the exchange of information, arms and medical aid for terrorists wounded in police shoot-outs between rightist and leftist terrorists here.

The weapons seized at two locations in the southern suburbs included several submachineguns, rifles, pistols and ammunition, the sources said.

Police learned of the leftist hideouts following the arrest of two rightist extremists, Egidio Giuliani and Armando Colantoni.

COMMUNISTS EXAMINE ADMINISTRATIVE ELECTION RESULTS

AU031612 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 3 Jul (ANSA)--The opposition Communist Party, the only rival to the strength of the Christian Democrats, wound up its Central Committee meeting Thursday with an examination of the returns of the June 21-22 administrative elections.

The text of Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer's statement to the Central Committee will be released later today. The other major speaker Thursday was Pietro Ingrao, the former speaker of the lower house. Others who addressed the assembly homed in on the disappointing outcome of the vote for the Communist Party in the depressed south.

Ingrao, for his part, urged his party to not give ground on the proposal prepared by the new premier for a "social pact" to further the battle against inflation.

According to the member of the Communist leadership, a real emergency social pact could be reached between the government and the trade unions only after the Communists have been called into the cabinet to shoulder their responsibilities in government.

Other members of the Central Committee, speaking on relations with the Socialist Party, one of the other major topics up for debate, were critical of the decisions of the nation's third party to enter another government alongside the Christian Democrats. These party officials also declared the willingness of the Communist Party to enter into an unspecified alternative of the left.

Communist Party criticism of the Socialists was responded to in AVANTI, the Socialist Party paper, this morning in an editorial which termed this attitude "a mixture of misunderstanding and hostility" toward the Socialists.

The AVANTI piece also took a view of what it identified as the Communist tactic of "dividing labor," a reference to the growing gap between the Communist-dominated CGIL trade union confederation and the two smaller trade union confederations, the CISL and the UIL.

BERLINGUER COMMENTS ON OVERALL POLITICAL SCENE

PM031617 [Editorial Report] Rome L'UNITA in Italian on 18 June 1981 carries on pages 1 and 20 "lengthy excerpts" totalling 1,800 words from an article by PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer, published by the PCI journal RINASCITA and a 1,500-word Ugo Baduel report on a 17 June television interview between Berlinguer and three journalists, both relating the Italian political scene to the recent success of the French Socialists. In the RINASCITA article, Berlinguer denies that his party is a mere "spectator" in current political events and asserts that "rarely has the PCI been a protagonist in battles and initiatives that have so directly and strongly influenced the course of political events as it has in the past 2 years and in recent months," claiming the merit of having prompted the appointment of a non-DC premier. Berlinguer hails "the victory of the leftwing forces in France" but points out that while "in France, the Communists, Socialists and other leftwing forces, though differing on several issues, were nevertheless forces not involved in Giscard's government methods and power system, here in Italy this is not the case." He calls for "unity among forces that are completely and definitively detached from the present DC system and that determinedly set against it a rigorous policy of moral and political reform and transformation."

In his television interview, Berlinguer confirms the PCI's conditions for modifying its form of opposition, emphasizing that the members of the new government must be selected in accordance with "criteria of competence, honesty and unquestioned loyalty to the constitution." He discusses the international and domestic causes of Italy's inflation and the measures needed to combat it, claiming that the outgoing Forlani government's action to modify the indexed-wages system was designed "solely to split the trade unions." He also attributes the excessive growth in public spending to expenditure through the patronage system and "parasitic incomes." He again points to the differences between the French and Italian socialists and asserts that "the program that Mitterrand has been implementing in the past few weeks is very similar to ours."

MARIO SOARES COMMENTS ON DOMESTIC ISSUES

PM060810 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 22 Jun 81 p 3

[Text] In the next presidential elections, the Socialist Party "must field its own candidate, but it is too early to define his profile," Mario Soares said in an interview granted to Portuguese radio. In the interview, the Socialist leader declared himself worried "by the country's social decline," adding, however, that his party "will not shoulder government responsibilities until further elections grant it a clear majority."

In his conversation with journalist Pedro Cid, the Socialist Party secretary general accused the government of "setting its sights on the major objectives of the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS], in other words, of the Democratic Alliance rightwing," and discussed the country's economy "which could lead us to a worse crisis than we experienced in 1976-77."

In this connection, he said that the balance of payments deficit, which everything indicates this year will reach "$1.8 billion," reflects a situation "even more dramatic than the one I encountered when I assumed the prime ministership in 1976." Using a well-known image, Soares said that "when there are chestnuts to be pulled from the fire, hands must get burned. The Socialist Party cannot always be the one to do it."

One of the main points in his remarks was the existence of "a great disenchantment among the people with the government", implying in his analysis that the immediate future could have some surprises in store. This is why, he added, he does not have the presidential elections in mind, though he did not specify whether he would want to emerge as a potential candidate.

For the time being, local elections are dominating Mario Soares' attention. He said that the president "must not provide political support either for the government or for the opposition" and that the Republican and Socialist Front "has fallen short of the hopes which the Socialist Party placed in it."

"We will see in the near future," he stressed, "how the front functions." Nevertheless, Soares did make a point of asserting his fidelity to the accords signed both with Ramalho Eanes, as candidate, and with the Socialist Party's partners in the Republican and Socialist Front.

Soares also discussed the internal situation within his own party, describing the atmosphere of "progressive calm moving toward normalization which reigns in the party." Increasingly, he added, "the Socialist Party seems like the stabilizing factor and element of hope of regeneration and change for the better."

Explaining his argument more fully, the Socialist leader said that he was not sure "how the crisis in the government will be surmounted" since, he pointed out, "policy must be based on social realities which are in decline. There is disenchantment even among very conservative and moderate sectors with the conduct of this executive which is incapable of resolving the nation's problems and coordinating the various ministries."

Having announced the continuation of the Socialist Party's foreign-oriented activity, the vice president of the Socialist International again returned to the issue of the local elections, explaining that his party had never talked in terms of alliances. With regard to a Social Democratic Party [PSD] protocol with the CDS concerning these elections, Soares described it as "a rightward step by the PSD, which Sa Carneiro never wanted to take. This shows," he said, "that Pinto Balsemao needs increasingly to keep himself in power with CDS support and is willing to make any necessary concessions, even if it means abandoning many of the social democratic viewpoints."

[Text] National Unity Party [NUP] leader and Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay has said that unofficial consultations are underway for the formation of a new government following the elections held in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] on 28 June. Cagatay made this statement following a visit by all newly elected NUP deputies to TFSC President Rauf Denktas. The TURKISH CYPRIOT NEWS AGENCY [TAK] reports that Cagatay made the following statement after the 1-hour meeting:

A detailed assessment of the situation was made during the meeting we held with President Denktas. At the end of the deliberations we came to the conclusion that as the strongest and largest party in the TFSC, the NUP has the right, means and authority to form the new government. Unofficially, we have already started consultations to achieve this aim.

He gave an assurance that the government would be formed as soon as possible under the provisions of the constitution and in accordance with democratic principles. Mr Cagatay stressed the need for strengthening the communal solidarity with ties of mutual affection and respect.

Denktas Interview on Elections

NC030652 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 30 Jun 81 pp 1,7

[Interview granted by Rauf Denktas to CUMHURIYET correspondent Sedat Ergin in Nicosia; date not given]

[Text] Question: There is general expectation in the world that a short time after the elections in the TFSC a solution will be found to the Cyprus dispute. Do you share this expectation?

Answer: We have never accepted any responsibility for the atmosphere that has been created from time to time in world opinion. Above everything else, the Turkish Cypriot community must be able to coexist in security and under equal organs.

I believe that this cannot be achieved through creating an atmosphere, but through reaching an understanding. The Greek Cypriots still dream of imposing majority rule. This is their notion of federation. They do not accept us as equals.

Question: There are reports that a new plan is being drafted for the purpose of finding a settlement to the Cyprus dispute. Do you have any comments about these reports?

Answer: I too have read these reports, but I do not attach any importance to them, as the fate of the plans drafted outside Cyprus is known. Their scope is restricted. Either they are rejected by one side or by the other. If a new plan is being drafted it will meet the same fate. From time to time, they [foreign powers] come up with such mechanical proposals. The parties concerned have not yet reached a common ground on which to solve the Cyprus issues. The Greek Cypriots interpret the Makarios-Denktas accord as giving them the right to reestablish their domination over the Turkish Cypriots.

Question: Has the alleged draft of the plan been communicated to you?

Answer: I have received nothing official.

Question: Now that the elections are over, do you expect any lively activity concerning the Cyprus issue?

Answer: No, because the Cyprus issue has nothing to do with the elections.

Question: To what extent can an advance agreement be reached on the status of Varosha?

Answer: If some progress is made simultaneously on the principle of sovereignty based on equality, the Varosha issue can be discussed as a priority. As no agreement has been reached on any issue, the Varosha proposal is in suspension. It is up to them to tackle it in definite stages. As far as I understand, Greek Cypriots have no intention of coming to an understanding with us.

Question: Where does the Cyprus issue stand today?

Answer: The Greek Cypriots do not intend to accept the Turkish Cypriots under the roof of the republic again, because from the point of view of their cause, they have never had it so good. We are unable to benefit from any advantages of being a state in the international arena. How much longer can we tolerate this state of affairs? Don't expect me to provide the answer to this question. It is up to the Turkish Cypriot community to give the answer. We are neither a recognized state nor part of the Cyprus Government. In that case, what are we?

Question: How do you evaluate the U.S. policy?

Answer: The U.S. Congress continues to pressure Turkey. The Congress has an effective role in foreign policy. The Greek lobby can determine the line the Congress will take. Their electoral system is open to bribery and payoffs. They are in a position to say "we are going to pay the money, but you must do this." It is also useful to know that occasionally the United States comes up with all kinds of suggestions, but it has not been possible to implement any of them.

Question: It is being argued that the United States also desires to use Cyprus for dispatching the Rapid Deployment Force to the Middle East. Do you have any comments on these reports?

Answer: We would hinder this approach if we had any effective responsibility on the island. We certainly do not provide such a facility for the Americans.

Question: There have been reports that Professor Mumtaz Soysal, your advisor on constitutional issues, is required to drop out. What is your position in this respect?

Answer: Honorable Mumtaz Soysal is our constitutional advisor. He is assisting us in matters concerning the constitution. We are in touch with him.

DR KENAN ATAKOL SCORES ROLANDHIS STATEMENT

TA030628 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0415 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] Foreign Affairs, Defense and Tourism Minister Dr Kenan Atakol has said that the statement directed against the Turkish nation by Greek Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis during a briefing with Greek Cypriot diplomats was received with (?distaste) and that this attitude constitutes a new blow to the hope of rapprochement between the two communities. Atakol recalled that while saying that a moral issue like the Cyprus issue must be discussed in its qualitative aspects and not in terms of quantity, Rolandhis seems to have forgotten that prior to 1974, the Greek Cypriots were not even willing to grant the Turkish Cypriot community the right to live through purely quantitative arguments. Atakol stated that Rolandhis' statement on individual rights and freedoms is devoid of sincerity and mocks all human rights principles.

KIPRIANOU REVEALS TURKMEN PROMISE TO MITSOTAKIS

NC041742 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 4 Jul 81

[Text] President Kiprianou has revealed that Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen has promised his Greek counterpart, Mitsotakis, that at the end of July, the Turkish side will submit substantive proposals, especially on the territorial aspect.

Replying to journalists' questions, Kiprianou mentioned that a similar promise has been given in many directions. If Ankara, Kiprianou observed, wants to solve the Cyprus problem, possibly the results of the so-called elections in occupied Cyprus make it easier for it to do so. President Kiprianou then stated that Denktas must be convinced by now that the majority of Turkish Cypriots do not share his extreme positions on the Cyprus problem.

In reply to another question, President Kiprianou said that the Turkish side's temporizing policy aimed at avoiding discussion of the Cyprus problem at the UN General Assembly will not be tolerated. President Kiprianou also stressed that it would be a great mistake if the Turkish Cypriot side proceeded to the declaration of an independent Turkish Cypriot state. He said that something of the kind would complicate matters and would not in any way benefit the Turkish side. Concluding, President Kiprianou said that it would be desirable if an agreement could exist between the two superpowers for the implementation of UN resolutions on Cyprus.

Authoritative circles in Athens have stated that the Turkish promises are viewed with a considerable amount of skepticism, because Ankara's diplomatic strategy is well known--open doors with one hand and close them with the other. The same circles also mentioned that past experience does not allow excessive optimism becuase, as in previous years, it should not be ruled out that Ankara is again following temporizing tactics and simply aiming at avoiding discussion of the Cyprus problem at the United Nations.

The authoritative circles mentioned that 29 July which, as has been mentioned, has been fixed for the examination of the territorial aspect at the inter-Cypriot talks is considered to be the critical date.

Furthermore, Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen has stated that the results of the recent elections on the Turkish Cypriot side will not affect its position at the intercommunal talks. In a statement to the press, Turkmen added that at his recent meeting in Athens with Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, they took up the Cyprus problem and, as he said, they reached an identity of viewpoints that the two communities should hold substantive talks after the elections.

PAPER CRITICIZES LACK OF DECISIONS IN ATHENS

NC060841 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 6 Jul 81 p 3

[From the "Political Scene" column: "What They Did Not Decide"]

[Text] Kiprianou ends his Athens talks today. So far, it is not known what they specifically talked about, what they agreed on and what they decided. What is known, however, is what they did not decide.

They did not decide that July is the last vital time limit for the submission of the Turkish proposals on the territorial issue.

They did not decide that if a basic dialogue is to take place, then all Turkish proposals--including constitutional proposals--must be in accordance with UN resolutions and principles and they must conform to the declarations on human rights and international law.

There was no decision that if all this does not take place in July, then trickery will not be permitted to continue and all the necessary steps will be taken to denounce Turkish bad faith and fraud and suitable processes will be set in motion for the implementation of UN resolutions on Cyprus.

There was no decision that the Cpyrus issue should be definitely discussed at this year's UN General Assembly.

There was no decision on the basic internationalization of the Cyprus issue and on the reorganization of the Greek lobby internationally.

If any other decisions were, in fact, taken, naturally this in no way bothers Ankara, and if it does not satisfy Washington it most certainly does not displease it. Such a situation, however, does not encourage hope. Concern, therefore, becomes all that much stronger.

LACK OF REPRESENTATION IN ARAB STATES CRITICIZED

NC060831 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 6 Jul 81 p 3

[From the "Political Scene" column: "Cyprus and the Arabs"]

[Text] Cyprus receives active support--political and economic--from the Arab countries and particularly from progressive ones. There is appreciation and friendship toward Cyprus in the Arab world as well as love and a developed sense of solidarity.

These feelings are reflected in the extensive markets for Cyprus products which give a blood transfusion to our economy. In reality, the Arab world is our hinterland. So far this does not appear to be fully appreciated. Our diplomatic representation--with the exception of Syria--is minute; we have no embassies in other Arab countries; we have no embassy in Libya, which is the greatest, best and most consistent market for Cyprus.

The absence of such an embassy raises further obstacles to the development of relations generally as well as to Cyprus exporters who often find themselves in Libya. When they often need an endorsement of some sort they have to return to Cyprus and then, once again, proceed to Libya. The same difficulties exist for Cypriots who work there and for Libyans who want to visit Cyprus. They are obliged to go to Athens or to Damascus in order to get a visa.

These things are not unknown to the Cyprus Government. Its momentous lack of interest and inefficiency, however, are also well known.

HOUSE PRESIDENT LADHAS COMMENTS ON EGYPT TIES

NC030820 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 3 Jul 81 p 2

[Excerpts] In connection with the interview House President Y. Ladhas gave to an Egyptian journalist, an official statement released yesterday cites some passages in the interview--the version carried by I SIMERINI--that do not precisely convey what Mr Ladhas said.

The statement adds that the report in question speaks about a letter from Mr Ladhas to the Egyptian president. It is clarified that during the interview with the Egyptian journalist, the latter asked Mr Ladhas what message he would like to send to President as-Sadat. Mr Ladhas replied that the message he would like to send would be to wish President as-Sadat full success in his efforts to solve all the problems of the Egyptian people and of his country, something that would also contribute to the restoration of peace in the region.

The statement concludes: It is not true that Mr Ladhas stated to the Egyptian journalist that he was speaking as house president and acting president of the republic for the simple reasong that the interview was given last Tuesday, and Mr Ladhas definitely could not speak as acting president of the Republic.

Answering a question by journalists, acting President of the Republic Yeoryios Ladhas stated:

"In my statement to Egyptian journalist Sami 'Abd al-Majid, I expressed the wish that the necessary prerequisites for the restoration of diplomatic relations between Cyprus and Egypt should be created. As for the Arab world's problem, Cyprus supports the Palestinian people's struggle for vindication under the leadership of their sole representative--that is, the Palestine Liberation Organization."

Rallis, Kiprianou Luncheon Toasts

NC021940 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Text] Addressing President of the Cyprus Republic Kiprianou during a luncheon, Prime Minister Rallis expressed his joy at the opportunity that was afforded to him to meet with President Kiprianou for a useful reciprocal briefing and exchange of views, and at the same time expressed his sorrow because, as in the past, he found himself in the unpleasant position of having to ascertain that no progress has been noted in the intercommunal talks.

The prime minister stressed this is exclusively owing to the negative position of the other side which, unfortunately, has not responded to the sincere efforts of the Cypriot Government which, by contrast, has done everything possible to achieve a fruitful outcome to the intercommunal talks.

Underlining the necessity for a basic dialogue on all aspects of the Cyprus problem, the prime minister expressed the hope that the Turkish Cypriot side will soon demonstrate such a constructive desire that progress will be achieved toward attaining a just and permanent solution to the Cyprus issue. In conclusion, the prime minister reassured the Cypriot president of the continued and unreserved support of the Greek Government and the entire Greek nation in the just struggle of Cypriot Hellenism.

Replying, Cypriot President Kirpianou expressed his warmest thanks for the hospitality accorded to him and for the opportunity given him to exchange views on the latest developments in the Cyprus issue and on the progress of the inter-Cypriot talks.

Kiprianou underlined that the Greek Cypriot side and the Cypriot Government have made every effort and demonstrated all possible good will for the success of the dialogue and for the discovery of an honorable and viable solution to the Cyprus problem which would guarantee complete freedom and justice for all inhabitants of Cyprus, Greeks and Turks alike.

Unfortunately, however, Kiprianou continued, the Turkish Cypriot side has not demonstrated the same good will and determination for achieving progress in the talks, maintaining instead an intransigent and negative position.

In conclusion, Kiprianou expressed to the Greek prime minister the gratitude of the Cypriot people for the continued and firm interest and the valuable support and assistance of the Greek Government, the political world and the entire Greek nation to the Cypriot people, who are fighting for their national survival and justification, in whose struggle Greece is the absolute support.

Kiprianou Statement

NC031926 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] President of the Republic Karamanlis today had a long conference with Cypriot President Kiprianou. The two leaders conferred in private for a half hour and reviewed the Cyprus issue and the position of the national issue today. Karamanlis later gave a luncheon in honor of Kiprianou that Prime Minister Rallis, Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Coordination Minister Paleokrassas, Deputy Foreign Minister Rendis and other officials attended.

Cypriot President Kiprianou today gave a news conference for representatives of the Greek and foreign press at the Foreign Press Association Building, where he made the following statement:

[Begin recording] I am in Athens for talks with the Greek Government. I must admit that these talks have been extremely constructive and that they have been conducted in an atmosphere of cordiality. Today is not the proper moment to make statements on the contents of the talks, because they have not yet been concluded and because there will be another private meeting with Prime Minister Rallis on Monday. Statements will be made then. I can state, however, that during our contacts and conferences, there was unanimity on our conclusions and evaluations and on the further handling of the issue.

The Cyprus problem is entering a delicate phase, by which I mean that intercommunal dialogue will be continued. It is entering a phase during which the Turkish side must honor its obligations and the various promises it has given in reference to the submission of specific, constructive proposals on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem.

It is on the basis of the submission, and primarily on the contents of these proposals, that the further progress of the dialogue and the further general developments will depend. I believe that July and August will be months during which we will be able to establish the true intentions of Turkey; in other words, whether the Turkish position has changed. What is needed in order to achieve progress toward a solution of the Cyprus problem is a radical change in the Turkish position, the revision of its negative policy to date, and this must be done through the submission of specific, concrete and constructive proposals.

This is essential for Ankara. I respect the Turkish Cypriot leadership, but if we are to be absolutely realistic, it is essential for Ankara to take the necessary political decision if there is to be any progress toward a solution to the Cyprus problem.

We are, therefore, at a delicate phase and in a state of expectation. We will consider what will be the future course on our part based upon developments. [end recording]

OPPOSITION CRITICAL OF TURKS' EXTRADITION

NC031426 Athens NEWS in English 3 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] The opposition press yesterday severely criticized the Greek authorities' decision to send back to Turkey two young Turks who had asked for political asylum after swimming from the Turkish mainland to the Island of Kos.

The two, Fehmi Uzal, 23 and Ismahel Aivaz, an army conscript, were taken to Rhodes where the authorities took them on board the Turkish cruise ship Gremlik and delivered them to the capitan, for return to Turkey.

An unsigned government press release last evening claimed the decision to extradite the two, which it admitted was irregular, was taken and carried out by local officials without the knowledge of the Foreign Ministry. The announcement added that stern instructions have been given to local authorities to avoid repetition of acts that are "contrary to international law."

KKE PLENUM ISSUES STATEMENT ON ELECTION GOALS

NC051849 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 5 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The KKE Central Committee has convened in a plenary session and discussed the party's course in the parliamentary elections within the framework of the more general international and domestic developments.

The plenum stresses that the elections in our country will be held under complicated international conditions which are marked, on the one hand by the tension of the cold war attack by imperialism, and U.S. imperialism in particular and, on the other, by the firm peaceful proposals of the Soviet Union on the development of the people's peace movements and with certain positive changes by responsible circles in Western Europe on the promotion of world detente.

The election of a leftwing government in France with the participation of the Communists, despite U.S. reaction, constitutes a blow to the anticommuinst cold war climate that the imperialists want to impose and is a contribution to the casue of detente and disarmament.

The Central Committee plenum stresses that, confronted with the complete bankruptcy of its policy and the desire of the people's majority to rid themselves of its government, the rightwing is resorting all the more openly to anticommunism, dangermongering, alignment with the extreme rightwing, and intimidation, and pins its last hopes on the larcenous electoral law. However--the plenum stresses--today our people are in a position with their militant vigilance to thwart these methods and, through their vote, render this larcenous electoral law useless and crush the rightwing in the elections by enabling the KKE to participate in the second distribution [of seats].

The Central Committee plenum affirms that, in the face of the strong popular wave supporting the change, certain circles of the ruling class are trying to emasculate the contents of the change needed by the country and, therefore, restrict the "change" within the general framework of the dependent regime of monopolies, by bringing forward in a superficial and general manner the popular demand that "the rightwing must go." On the basis of past experience, the KKE stresses once again that it is not sufficient for the cause of change that the rightwing should lose the elections and another government be formed. It is essential that the rightwing must truly fall from power, and that the implementation of a policy of national independence and peace, democratization, elimination of immunity for monopolies and economic development to the people's benefit must be ensured. Such a substantive change can only be imposed by a government of democratic change that would rest upon all the forces of change and the organized people's movement.

The KKE Central Committee plenum has considered the policy of the other political forces in the country and stresses that in order to ensure the rightwing's defeat and the march toward change it is necessary that the forces of change remain firm in their positions and choose the path of joint action.

The KKE Central Committee plenum stresses that the KKE, decisively reinforced by the struggle and the people's vote, particularly by entering into the second distribution, will decisively contribute to the removal of the rightwing, the promotion of the cause of change and to the necessary cooperation among all the forces of change.

The plenum affirms that the party is successfully increasing its election activity by strengthening the struggle for the working people's problems. The election goal of the KKE to abolish the larcenous electoral law and to bring about the rightwing's defeat through its participation in the second distribution is being met with the increased response of the people. This is confirmed by the success of the party's fundraising drive, the volume and spirit of its first preelection gatherings and generally the results from the contacts of the members and friends of the KKE and the KNE [Greek Communist Youth] with the working people, democrats, and all leftist and progressive people.

The plenum has examined political-ideological, organizational and technical problems of the preelection battle with the aim of securing and systematically organizing the contacts of members, followers and friends of the party and the leftwing with all the people, so that the party's positions may properly and vividly reach every factory, office or enterprise in every village, neighborhood and house.

The plenum has also dealt with the preparation of the party's election tickets.

He and his Greek colleague had already arranged to meet in New York in September, he added with their secretary generals' meeting earlier. The exact date for the meeting would be announced later.

PSUC LEADER REMOVED OVER EUROCOMMUNISM ISSUE

LD042244 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2100 GMT 4 Jul 81

[Text] At a meeting tonight in Barcelona, Pere Ardiaca was removed from the post of president of the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia (PSUC) by the party's Central Committee. He was removed with a vote of 58 - 33 with 1 abstention. The voting took place following a large number of speeches by Central Committee members, which were later summed up by party Secretary General Francesco Frutos.

After the voting, there was a break in the session. When the session resumed, the second point on the agenda--the enlargement of the executive with members of the "Eurocommunist" group--was studied. Pere Ardiaca was removed by the PSUC Central Committee for not accepting the Eurocommunist theses. At the beginning of the meeting, the former PSUC president announced that he rejected Eurocommunism and would not resign, but would accept the resolution of the Central Committee.

[Text] "The present situation is that the Eurocommunists have every kind of freedom of action and those of us who do not accept Eurocommunism either leave or are expelled," Unifed Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] Chairman Pere Ardiaca told EFE.

"I do not believe that there is any reason for me to tender my resignation. I maintain the stance which I adopted after the party's fifth congress, at which I was appointed chairman in order to pursue politics, not to play around," he added.

With respect to a recent meeting in Madrid, at which PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo requested the PSUC Central Committee members to accept the Eurocommunist theses, Pere Ardiaca stated: "I do not refuse to reflect." He emphasized, however, that he has not yet responded to Santiago Carrillo's request. "I am a PSUC member and, as such, invited to attend PCE congresses and to be a Central Committee member, but it must be borne in mind that the PSUC is one party and the PCE is another."

Finally, he stated that the tensions created within the PSUC over the last few days could bring about a radicalization of the stances existing within the party: "From the very outset, I have upheld our fifth congress' decisions, which allow those who so wish to call themselves Eurocommunists but do not mean that the whole party should be Eurocommunist."

ITALY SCORES UK TALKS WITH FRG, FRENCH MINISTERS

PM061504 London THE SUNDAY TELEGRAPH in English 5 Jul 81 p 2

[Norman Kirkham report]

[Excerpt] Whitehall was taken aback yesterday by an Italian Government attack on talks in London today between Lord Carrington and the foreign ministers of France and West Germany as "useless and damaging."

The Italian protest, issued by the Foreign Ministry in Rome, was worded in unusually forceful terms. It indicated deep resentment that the "big three" of the Common Market should find it necessary to discuss in private Lord Carrington's mission to Moscow which begins tonight.

"Six months of the British presidency of the European Community seems to have had a surprisingly negative beginning," the statement said.

The foreign secretary decided to consult Claude Cheysson, the French foreign minister, and Herr Hans-Dietrich Genscher of West Germany before putting proposals to Russia for an international conference on Afghanistan.

Italy's statement said that the Afghanistan proposals had been discussed in detail at the Common Market summit meeting in Luxembourg last week. If more needed to be said it should be in the EEC forum. Italy supported cooperation within this framework.

The statement went on to suggest that more powerful members of the EEC were trying to act without consulting the smaller partners.

The first reaction in Whitehall yesterday was of regret that Italy should have been caused any distress. British officials pointed out that Lord Carrington wanted to meet the French and German ministers to discuss matters other than Afghanistan.

The Foreign Office is expected to move quickly to try to placate Italy and Lord Carrington is likely to seek an early meeting with his Italian opposite number, Signor Emilio Colombo.

EEC OFFICIALS MEET WITH TURKISH INDUSTRIALISTS

TA021948 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Text] (Wilhelm Hafferkampf), the EEC Commission's deputy president for external affairs, said that the Commission considers the Turkish Government's announcement about the law on the constituent assembly part of the process of moving toward democracy. A delegation composed of the officials of the Turkish Industrialists and Businessmen Association held meetings with (Hafferkampf) and with the Commission secretary general, Emil Noel, in Brussels today. The delegation headed by Aki Kocman gave the two officials a report on the views of the Turkish private sector on the relations between Turkey and the EEC. The delegation members said that they fully support the political and economic measures taken by the government.

The Turkish Radio and Television correspondent in Brussels, Nusret Ozgul, reports that (Hafferkampf) said the Commission is pleased about the successful implementation of Turkey's economic policies. He stressed that this is a positive step for becoming a full member of the EEC. He expressed the hope that the announcement on the constituent assembly will create a positive impression on the European Parliament as well.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS CSSR AGENT'S ACTIVITIES

AU061733 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 4-5 Jul 81 p 1

[P.S. dispatch]

[Text] Vienna (P.Z.)--On Friday, Austria officially protested the machinations of Prague's agents after the demonstrative "lifting of the cover" of Czechoslovak spy Dr Josef Hodic by his own superiors. Ambassador Bauer, political director of the Foreign Ministry, expressed the displeasure of the Vienna government to CSSR Ambassador to Austria Kadnar who was summoned to the Foreign Ministry office.

The Prague secret service had provided the spy with a near perfect alibi. Hodic was known in Austria not only as a signer of Charter 77, but was also officially expatriated from the CSSR, something which naturally enhanced his credibility in emigre circles. Thus Hodic received Austrian citizenship after a relatively short time. On 17 June, Hodic was seen for the last time in Austria. Even though he had agreed to vacation with friends in Lunz am See, he never arrived there. He now is a hero in Prague instead.

Security officials describe as absolutely unusual and surprising the fact that the CSSR practically celebrates Hodic's "homecoming." Whereas the Thursday news only referred to an unidentified staff worker of the secret service, the party organ RUDE PRAVO in its Friday issue devoted a major article to "J.H."

It is assumed in diplomatic quarters that after the state visit to Austria by Czechoslovak Premier Strougal, which took place in a positive atmosphere, "hawks" in the Czechoslovak management could have signalled that relations between the two countries should not be allowed to become too close. This could be so, last but not least in view of the forthcoming visit to Austria of CSSR State President Husak.

Another motive could be the increase in the flow of refugees to Austria, which is assuming a dangerous scope for the CSSR. While in 1978, some 500 Czechoslovaks sought asylum in Austria, there were 1,834 applicants in 1979 and 3,241 last year. And the trend is still rising. Since there has been a relatively large percentage of intellectuals among the refugees, it is possible that the "lifting" of Hodic's "cover" was some sort of a warning shot and an attempt to create insecurity vis-a-vis potential emigration candidates.

BRIEFS

SOVIET MINISTER--A Soviet delegation under the leadership of Aleksey Ivanovich Yashin, USSR minister of construction materials industry, last week in Austria studied possibilities for cooperation in the manufacturing of household glassware and crystal. The Austrian side hopes for exports to the Soviet Union, Trade Minister Staribacher said at a news conference on Monday. After the visit of Soviet Premier Tikhonov, the Soviet side is greatly interested in reducing the trade surplus which is constantly increasing in connection with the increase in the price of energy. Minister Yashin's visit also must be seen in this context, Staribacher stated. The Soviet minister visited several Austrian light fixture firms and plant-building enterprises. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 23 Jun 81 p 7 AU]

EXPORTS TO USSR--Dr Friedrich Draszczyk, Austrian trade delegate to Moscow, stated that Austrian exports to the USSR in the first third of 1981 have reached an overall value of some 2.3 billion schillings, a 50.6 percent increase compared with the same period last year. But the value of imports also is 48 percent higher than last year mainly because of higher costs of power imports which totaled 5.8 billion schillings (compared with 3.9 billion schillings last year). Oil, natural gas and coal still account for more than 80 percent of Austrian imports, with other raw materials accounting for another 10 percent. It must be feared that Austria's trade deficit with the USSR which in 1979-80 increased from 3.5 to 7 billion schillings will not be substantially reduced in 1981. FRG 'CAUTIOUSLY' VIEWS BREZHNEV'S ARMS PROPOSAL

[Text] Bonn, 6 Jul (DPA)--The Federal Government has cautiously received the newly formulated proposal, conveyed by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, by Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev for a moratorium on medium-range nuclear weapons in East and West Europe. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker said Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt sees discernible nuances in Brezhnev's proposal, compared with the ideas he had in February. Becker also referred to the Soviet arms level and stressed that Moscow's now modified proposal would have been more useful at an earlier time.

Brandt today briefed Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, in a talk lasting about an hour, on details of his visit to Moscow. (?Tomorrow) [word indistinct] Brandt will meet the federal chancellor whom, like Genscher before, he had already briefed by telephone. On Wednesday, the federal cabinet intends, according to information in Bonn, to discuss the results of Brandt's talks in Moscow.

Referring to the more detailed discussions yet to come, the government spokesman gave the press in Bonn only a provisional opinion. The chancellor believes it is important and obvious that the Soviet Union should not make the start of disarmament negotiations dependent on preconditions. During Brandt's visit, Brezhnev stated Moscow's willingness to deploy no more SS-20 missiles after the beginning of negotiations with the United States. And Washington stated that, for its part, it did not intend to station any more medium-range weapons. In February, Brezhnev demanded that the West must also halt production and preparations for stationing medium-range weapons.

Government Spokesman Becker today stressed the Federal Government's view that the existing sizeable imablance between East and West in medium-range weapons must not be strengthened, but removed. But the Soviet Union is still expanding this imbalance.

SCHMIDT EMPHASIZES LIKELIHOOD OF U.S.-USSR TALKS

LD061728 Hamburg DPA in German 1559 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 Jul (DPA)--The chancellor has stressed his conviction that talks will take place between the United States and the USSR. In an interview for HANNOVERSCHE ALLGEMEINE, Schmidt said he expects these talks to "lead to an approximate balance in medium-range weapons."

The chancellor emphatically opposed the view that the Soviet Union would at the present time take advantage of its superiority in this field. "I do not believe that because of this anyone in Moscow is going to start a war tomorrow and certainly not Leonid Brezhnev. However, no one knows how the situation will look in 5 or 10 years."

Regarding the continuing discussion about NATO's dual decision, the chancellor said that he is fed up with continually having to set matters right. A lot of talk from Moscow as well as from Washington on this debate has helped to completely confuse the European opinion.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON BRANDT'S MOSCOW VISIT

DIE WELT Commentary

DW030815 Bonn DIE WELT in German 3 Jul 81 p 1

[Dietrich Mummendey commentary: "Brandt's Role"]

[Text] Moscow can feel content with Willy Brandt's visit. The Kremlin stage managers skillfully have incorporated his appearance in the great propaganda campaign with which Moscow wants to undermine the Western defense preparedness.

Brandt played his role in good faith, believing that "talking to each other" would be useful. He said "no doubt" exists with regard to Brezhnev's and his leadership members' will for peace. When the Kremlin chief in his toast described the Americans as warmongers who do not want to negotiate, Brandt did not contradict that in his return speech and found no supporting word for the ally. Instead, however, he expressed his own impatience regarding the delay of disarmament negotiations. He obviously pressed Washington to accept Brezhnev's offer to have a Brezhnev-Reagan summit in the near future.

Brandt also showed understanding for the "concern" of the Soviets. Even in the defense of his own government against "not objective and personal" attacks of the Soviet press (as Brandt put it himself), sharp protests were taking place behind closed doors, but publicly the party chairman found only lame and not even ambiguous words. His Kremlin toast was one of the few statements made by recent guests which was printed by PRAVDA without any censoring cuts. Even the Libyan Qadhdhafi did not come off that well.

As the only possibly substantial result regarding the problem of Eurostrategic missiles, Brandt will bring along a rehash of the Soviet suggestion of a moratorium which the West has already rejected for good reason and which does not concern Bonn but Washington. It just seems to have been newly wrapped up. But even if conditions are now better than they were before, if Moscow would persuade NATO to renounce the new arms temporarily, no Western government could dare to rearm if negotiations took too long--while Moscow would still have its considerably increased SS-20 potential.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Article

DW030917 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 3 Jul 81 p 3

[Article signed KK: "Useful"]

[Text] The Soviet Politburo on Thursday intensively dealt with the subjects discussed between Brandt and Brezhnev at their Moscow talks, above all, missile armament in Europe. Surprisingly, the Soviet general secretary received the SPD chairman for a dialogue once again, possibly answering some open questions. Therefore, a reliable detailed balance of Brandt's trip is neither possible nor advisable.

Even though the conservative critics of the Nobel peace prize winner sardonically and doggedly will reiterate their objections to this factfinding visit, it must be stated now that Willy Brandt in the Soviet capital brought up all problems with frankness and commitment, problems that worry not only him. Soviet reactions have shown that Moscow as before trusts and listens to an integer personality like Willy Brandt.

At any rate, the visit of Brandt who wanted neither to negotiate nor to mediate has done the cooled-down German-Soviet relations good. In an increasingly threatened world, this is valuable per se, unless those who always paint everything in black and white dispute the usefulness of frank talks.

Criticizes Al-Qadhdhafi

LD022245 Hamburg DPA in German 2041 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 2 Jul (DPA)--President of Senegal Abdou Diouf in Bonn today sharply criticized Libyan head of state al-Qadhdhafi, who will host the next OAU summit, because of his "disquieting activities which must be condemned" in Africa. Diouf told a news conference that his country will attend the OAU summit in Tripoli in 1982 only if Al-Qadhdhafi changes his policy.

Diouf who presently is on a working visit to Bonn, called Libya's intervention and continuing presence in neighboring Chad unacceptable. He emphasized that the relevant decisions taken at this year's OAU summit which ended a few days ago do not amount to an "upward or downward revaluation" of Al-Qadhdhafi.

Talks With Schmidt, Genscher

LD031545 Hamburg DPA in German 1447 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 3 Jul (DPA)--The independence of Namibia, (South-West Africa) orginally administered by South Africa, was at the center of talks between Abdou Diouf, president of the west African Republic of Senegal, and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today. Diouf expressed the great expectations which the African states (?see) in the Federal Republic's efforts for a Namibia solution. Diouf arrived for a 2-day working visit in the Federal Republic yesterday, which is the first Western country he has visited since taking office on 1 January.

A government spokesman said that the chancellor explained to the president the determination of the European Council to promote, on the basis of the world Security Council resolution, an early peaceful settlement for Namibia's independence. According to the Foreign Office, Diouf, during his talk with Genscher, welcomed the vice chancellor's proposal for the five foreign ministers involved in the UN's Namibia initiative, to discuss once again the Namibia problem at the summit conference in Ottawa.

Senegal belongs to the five African countries which have been asked by the Organization of African Unity to deal with solving the Namibia question. It has been learned that Diouf and Genscher both agreed that South Africa's delaying tactic entailed dangers for a peaceful Namibia solution.

Diouf also met today at Gymnich Castle--the government guest house--with a member of the executive board of Messrs Mennesmann, Demag, Knozern. A private program is planned for this afternoon. Diouf is to return home on Saturday morning.

SCHMIDT SEES NO RISK FROM FRENCH MINISTERS

NC062107 Paris AFP in English 2055 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Hannover, West Germany, 6 Jul (AFP)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said in an interview published here today that he saw no risk to relations between Paris and Bonn nor the European Community due to the presence of four Communist ministers in the new French cabinet.

Interviewed by the HANNOVERSCHE ALLGEMEINE, Mr Schmidt counseled the United States to consider that the French president and prime minister, "Mr (Francois) Mitterrand and Mr (Pierre) Mauroy, do not need any Communist votes in parliament.

"Things would be completely different," he said, if the Socialist ruling team was "obliged to take Communists into the government because they would otherwise not have a majority."

GENSCHER WANTS DISARMAMENT DISCUSSIONS WITH GDR

LD061212 Hamburg DPA in German 1100 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 Jul (DPA)--Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said that the Federal Government is interested in intensifying disarmament consultations with the GDR. Speaking today in Bonn to the FDP Presidium, the FDP chief announced that he intends at his planned meeting with GDR Foreign Minister Fischer in New York in September to talk about continuing disarmament talks. The Federal Government's disarmament representative, Ambassador Friedrich Ruth, and GDR Ambassador Ernst Krabatsch had a 4-hour discussion last Friday in East Berlin on the work of the Geneva Disarmament Committee, but also on the NATO dual decision on counterarming.

FDP spokesman Herbert Schmuelling said that Genscher hailed these consultations as an expression of joint responsibility for peace. Relations between the Federal Republic and the GDR must not bypass questions of disarmament. The two German states, by intensively discussing questions of European security, could contribute to East-West confidence-building. The two German states, despite belonging to different alliance systems, have a particular interest in seeking points of departure in the East-West security discussion.

APEL TALKS WITH JAPANESE DEFENSE AGENCY CHIEF

LD061446 Hamburg DPA in German 1331 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 6 Jul (DPA)--Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel today in Bonn discussed topical security problems at Hardthoehe with Joji Omura, director general of the Japanese Defense Agency. Earlier, Apel welcomed his Japanese guest with military honors. Omura is returning Apel's visit last year to Tokyo. After the talk with his German counterpart, Omura was briefed on the Bundeswehr, the Federal Republic's security policy and the military-political situation in Europe.

SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON ECONOMIC TIES WITH MEXICO

NC061241 Paris AFP in English 1229 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 6 Jul (AFP)--France does not regard economic relations with Mexico as broken off, a French Foreign Ministry spokesman said today. He was responding to Saturday's announcement by Mexican Development Minister Andres de Oteyza that French firms were now excluded from Mexico's projects after the Compagnie Francaise des Petroles (CFP), which markets under the Total brand, suspended oil purchases on the issue of price.

The spokesman said France saw the minister's statement as "a political stance by which the Mexican Government was expressing its concern." It was not a Mexican Government decision and France did not consider any decision had been taken as regards individual contracts.

Talks must continue with the Mexican authorities "to try to work out a solution," the spokesman said.

Meanwhile Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert held a meeting of French officials covering foreign affairs, finance and the economy, industry and energy to discuss Franco-Mexican trade.

Tomorrow French External Relations [Minister] Claude Cheysson is due to have a meeting with Mexican Ambassador Flores de La Pena. Last Friday the ambassador met Edmond Herve, delegate-minister for energy at the Industry Ministry. Subsequently a communique was issued saying: "Mr Herve confirmed France's desire to develop close relations with Mexico in the oil sector, as part of economic co-operation confirmed this year by the signing of an inter-government agreement, despite the difficulties arising at the present juncture."

The overall economic agreement mentioned in the communique provides for long-term expansion in Mexican oil supplies for France and the development of French investment in Mexico.

LEADERS MEET WITH SPANISH PRIME MINISTER

LD021644 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1200 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Paris--Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, who arrived this morning at Orly Airport accompanied by Foreign Minister Perez Llorca for a working visit, was met by Premier Pierre Mauroy and is now at the Elysee Palace where he has had a meeting with President Mitterrand, followed by luncheon. At 1200, Calvo-Sotelo was received at the Hotel Matignon by Premier Pierre Mauroy, a meeting which lasted 45 minutes. The prime minister summarized the meeting:

[Begin recording] A brief but concise meeting and, I believe, constructive as well. There will be visits in the near future by the Spanish and French justice and interior ministers who will develop the conclusions of this meeting. [end recording]

In the courtyard of the Hotel Matignon, Premier Pierre Mauroy then made a long statement to the press. You know, he said, that I have had great satisfaction in receiving the Spanish prime minister for many reasons. First, because it concerns Spain, because it concerns the Spanish Government and the Spanish people who are now on the path of freedom and democracy. We who have been so deeply concerned for almost 40 years--I myself, if you will allow me to make a personal reference, I have also been concerned about my Socialist friends, as I have with my Spanish democratic friends, with all those who were in France, the land of asylum, waiting to return to freedom and democracy--in a way we are affected by Spanish democracy which is primarily a matter for the Spaniards and Spain. But I took the liberty of saying to the prime minister that it is also something which concerns all Frenchmen.

That is to say, the desire of this government is to help Spanish democracy with all its strength and not only to help it, but also to add our desire for cooperation and the feeling not only of sympathy but admiration for the results achieved in a few years. For this reason, the visit by the Spanish prime minister has been a singular visit.

Difficult problems are left -- if you will pardon the expression -- on the table to some extent in order to give consideration to that which dialogue, cooperation and friendship between Spain and France essentially represent. Relations recently have deteriorated. A change has taken place in France and I have expressed the desire of the government--and the president will do so personally as he is at the moment receiving Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo -- the desire of the French Government to establish relations of trust, cooperation and friendship over and above the problems which exist and even, above all, when the problems are difficult.

Calvo-Sotelo News Conference

LD022100 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 2 Jul 81

[Unidentified correspondent's dispatch from Paris]

[Text] The Spanish prime minister came to Paris to discuss two contentious issues that are clouding relations between Spain and France. In connection with the first subject -- ETA [Basque Fatherland and Liberty] terrorism -- the prime minister told about 11 Spanish and French journalists at a news conference in the Spanish Embassy:

[Begin recording] I am leaving Paris certain that the French Government knows exactly the scope of the decisions it could make, the importance and seriousness of the problem, not only for Spain, not only for Spanish-French relations, but also for the international prestige of France itself. I am also leaving Paris sure that the president and the premier will calmly consider this problem before making any decision in connection with the extradition of those being detained in France for terrorist crimes. I am convinced that the French Government, while maintaining that France wishes to be a land of asylum, nevertheless is firm in its decision that France and French territory could never be a base for terrorist action and particularly could never be a base for terrorist action against Spanish territory. This decision by the French Government was conveyed to me in no uncertain terms by the president and the premier. [end recording]

In connection with the second major issue of the day -- Spanish entry into the EEC -- the prime minister said:

[Begin recording] We also spoke about Spain's entry into the Community and I am leaving Paris certain that the new French Government does not wish to raise any more preliminary obstacles before tackling the remaining issues in the negotiations. I believe that in the autumn we will enter the final stage of the negotiations and tackle the pending issues which up to now have hardly been touched upon -- I refer specifically to the problems of agriculture and fishing. [end recording]

Finally, the prime minister spoke of contacts in the immediate future at ministerial level:

[Begin recording] It was decided that before the summer the Spanish and French interior and justice ministers will meet in Madrid and Paris respectively and that in the near future the ministers in charge of economic departments will meet -- foremost among them the agriculture ministers. These meetings will aim at developing some of the initial agreements we have reached, and for the first time in the recent history of Spanish-French relations, at establishing permanent and systematic communication between the two governments. The president and the premier placed the same emphasis on the need to establish Spanish-French relations on this systematic and permanent basis, relations which began today, only a few days after the formation of the new French Government, with a brief but intensive visit which I have just summarized for you. [end recording]

SOCIALIST CITES SHIFTS IN PCF VIEW OF AFGHANISTAN

PM021046 Paris LE MONDE in French 27 Jun 81 p 8

[Text] The Movement of Support for the Afghan People's Resistance, founded in May 1980 on the initiative of leftwing figures, held a meeting at the Paris Labor Exchange on Thursday, 25 June, preceded by a debate on the situation in Afghanistan.

Jean-Paul Gay, organizer of the Movement of Support for the Afghan People's Resistance, explained that the weakness of the "retort" by French opinion to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan was due to Giscard d'Estaing's attitude and to that of the PCF. Leo Matarasso, member of the People's Standing Tribunal (formerly the Russell Tribunal), reported on the session which the tribunal held in Stockholm, as a result of which the Soviet intervention was condemned.

Jacques Chereque, member of the CFDT Secretariat, stated that his organization's campaign against the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan "has not had the anticipated success." He explained that the working people gave priority to their struggles for their claims and rejected anything which could divide the left or could smack of anti-Semitism or anticommunism. Chereque stressed that under the agreement signed with the PS, "the PCF adopted a less firmly aligned position, demanding the withdrawal of Soviet troops." Guy le Neovannic, member of the National Education Federation's National Office, noted the absence of PCF representatives at the meeting--"a problem which we should raise in public," he said. He also stressed the need for political unification of Afghan resistance.

Veronique Neiertz, member of the PS National Secretariat, stated: "I regret the absence of our Communist comrades, but it does not really surprise me." She recalled that for the PS "the Soviets' occupation of Afghanistan" is "unacceptable" in principle as in its methods and that "the Afghan resistance is a popular liberation movement which should be supported." "It is necessary," Neiertz said, "to create once again a nonaligned Afghanistan, free to choose its own government." Touching on the question of the agreement concluded between the PS and the PCF, Neiertz stressed that "differences remain complete as regards the analysis of the causes and the facts of a number of problems," such as Afghanistan and Poland. Neiertz emphasized the "path traveled by the PCF" before it signed the agreement.

First, Neiertz--who took part in the negotiations--noted that the PCF did not want the text of the agreement to refer to current problems. It had to accept it and "this was no small matter."

Second, regarding Afghanistan, "the withdrawal of Soviet troops is presented (in the agreement) as a necessary condition without which no search for a political solution is possible... whereas the Communists wanted to make the withdrawal a matter for negotiation." Moreover, according to Neiertz, "the condemnation of all foreign interference is deeply significant for the PCF" since it also applies to the Soviets, whereas the Communists regarded Moscow's intervention as legitimate by virtue of the Soviet-Afghan treaty. Finally, she said, the agreement contains no reference to the Kabul government, which the Communists regard as legitimate.

Neiertz stressed in conclusion that the Socialists will do "everything necessary to ensure that the government adopts its decisions in accordance with the Afghan people's struggle."

IRANIAN AMBASSADOR REPORTEDLY REMOVED FROM POST

PM031111 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 27 Jun 81 p 17

[Excerpt] Rome--Iranian Ambassador to Italy Mohammad Baquir Nasirsadat-Salami has apparently been removed from his post. This information is reported by diplomatic sources cited by AGI, [as received] according to which Nasirsadat-Salami was "recalled" to Tehran 4 June, but refused to obey the summons. Since then, AGI report, Nasirsadat-Salami has left his residence for an unknown location. The embassy is now headed by Charge D'Affaires (Bastegar). Salami, who lived in Italy before the revolution and studied in Florence, was considered close to President Bani-Sadr; before coming to Rome as ambassador he was a close aide of then Foreign Minister Sadeq Qotbzadeh.

FINANCE MINISTER REVIGLIO DISCUSSES FISCAL POLICY

PM020944 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 19 Jun 81 pp 1, 27

[Alessandra Carini interview with Italian Finance Minister Franco Reviglio: "Revigilio Promises; 'Enough Taxes Now'"]

[Text] Rome--The figures would make any finance minister proud: in May, taxpayers paid 7 trillion lire in self-taxation to the internal revenue coffers--2 trillion lire more than last year and over 1 trillion lire more than was forecast. Nevertheless, Finance Minister Franco Reviglio discussed these figures with a degree of bitterness: "Of course," he said, "it was a success partly because some of the increase is due to funds recovered from evaders. Therefore, I have the impression that it means that we have scraped the bottom of the barrel and that the taxation lever cannot be pulled any further lest we break it."

[Question] Does that mean that there will be no further sharp rises in revenue?

[Answer] Precisely. But that is not the only source of my misgivings. For the past 2 years Italy as a business concern has yielded a kind of fiscal dividend, a safety net consisting of a higher increase in revenue than in output. Instead of investing these dividends in improving public finance and reorganizing the taxation system, we squandered them in the form of increased expenditure. Consequently, we now have higher inflation in a public finance situation that is becoming extremely difficult, not only because the state deficit is increasing at a rate incompatible with economic trends, but also because the majority of it consists of unproductive expenditure, which means that increased fiscal pressure will not be matched either by an improvement in the services that the state provides to the citizens nor by an increase in investments.

[Question] But this year too the revenue authorities will manage to accumulate several billion lire thanks precisely to the contribution of inflation and therefore fiscal drag. The reform of tax rates has been postponed and pay envelopes are getting lighter all the time.

[Answer] It is not true that fiscal drag has not been compensated for in recent years. In 1980 we rebated the extra money charged due to inflation by increasing allowances and family benefits. This year the revision of the tax rate curve should rebate approximately a further 2.4 trillion lire. The maneuver might be postponed, but it must be confirmed; taxpayers might receive what they are owed only toward the end of the year, but they will get it.

[Question] The fiscal pressure on incomes is becoming unbearable and taxpayers are protesting and looking at the United States, where Reagan has included a major cut in income tax in his anti-inflation program.

[Answer] So far Reagan's program has contained merely promises and no tax reductions have yet occurred. In Italy, however, in the past 2 years moves have been made to cut taxation by a sum equivalent to over 2 percent of revenue.

As for the protests, I would advise people to address not the Finance Ministry but all the bodies which govern and approve public spending, which in the past 2 years have wasted the results of the efforts made to increase revenue. The data are now there for everyone to see.

[Question] What are these figures?

[Answer] In 1980, fiscal pressure increased 2 percent; for every 100 lire of national product, 19.4 lire was collected in 1979 and 21.3 lire last year. In terms of figures, this means that the increase in revenue was higher than the 11 trillion lire increase in the domestic product. This is what I mean by a fiscal dividend, which has in fact been used entirely for increased spending. The same thing is happening this year, and in even more severe form; we expect a further increase in fiscal pressure, which has already been counteracted by expenditure.

[Question] Who has contributed to this increase in revenue?

[Answer] There has been a major recovery of funds from evaders; the rest is a result mainly of the government measures adopted last year, such as the increase in value added tax.

[Question] What about the increased expenditure?

[Answer] The figures for the first half of 1981 provide a truly frightening picture. State spending increased 40 percent in the first 4 months; the treasury paid out 40 percent more on staff and 60 percent more in interest on debts. This explosion is causing a very major public finance deficit: we reached almost 17 trillion lire in the first 4 months and if we continue at this rate the deficit at year's end will be 40-50 trillion lire, at best.

[Question] However, the governor of the Bank of Italy has criticized you too. He said in his report that in view of trends in the state's accounts, the tax reductions approved in 1980 should not have been put forward.

[Answer] That measure was determined and paid for by the funds recovered from tax evaders over the years and could not be postponed precisely for reasons of fairness. In any case, despite those reductions, tax revenue increased more than incomes, thus making a contribution to the reform of public finance, which I regret was used to finance increased spending, thus imparting a further thrust to inflation.

[Question] You say that we now have a public finance deficit of about 45 trillion lire, even taking into account the spending cuts approved by the Forlani government in its eleventh-hour decrees. How can we try to reduce this deficit?

[Answer] Certainly not by increasing revenue. From now on the revenue authorities can only improve the figures by means of recovered funds from certain areas of evasion. This, however, must be used to restore the balance of the taxation system and to ensure that those who have hiterto not evaded taxation pay a little less tax. It would be crazy and unfair to taxpayers to use funds for other unproductive forms of spending.

[Question] In short, you are saying basically that the Finance Ministry's contribution to the anti-inflation struggle cannot amount to much.

[Answer] I believe that over the past 2 years everything possible has been done on the revenue front. In any case, the inflation situation is so serious that it can only be tackled by the government, Parliament and the social forces together. Public finance is not the only very serious issue; there is also the increased value of the dollar, the escalator machinery which, by leveling out pay differentials, is prompting workers to press pay demands, and the balance of payments deficit. These are all problems that will be tackled together by the next government.

L'UNITA VIEWS U.S. ATTITUDES TOWARD PCI

PM021159 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 20 Jun 81 p 3

[Carlo M. Santoro article: "Old Europe, U.S. Fear"]

[Text] "It is impossible to understand the modern United States without realizing that the fear and hatred of, and obsession with, communism have helped to model the country and make it what it has become." These two lines printed on the title page of Mario Margiocco's newly published book on U.S.-PCI relations from 1943 through 1980 (Laterza, 328 pages, 30,000 lire) really can serve as a starting point for calmly examining a very delicate and still unresolved political problem.

Indeed, the opening of channels, albeit unofficial and sporadic, between U.S. administration officials and PCI leaders and intellectuals, starting in the fall of 1973, prompted people to overlook the fact that--well beyond the area in which the dialogue concerns political and ideological stances, programs and alliances, cultures and strategies that were certainly dissimilar --all relations were predetermined by certain major factors. The lines quoted well reflect the most substantial of these restricting factors. But there were also others which made silently precluded, as far as the U.S. side was concerned, any extension of communication.

First, it will be necessary to reflect on the fact that the attitude toward the dialogue was "asymmetrical," inasmuch as it set a superpower government against an opposition party in an allied-cum-dependent medium power. Moreover, it was based on structurally different methods of approach: The rules of diplomatic intelligence in the former case and the technique of political negotiations in the latter.

Italo-American Power

Second, the Americans have always regarded Italy as part of an "area system" (NATO, the Mediterranean) and the PCI as a member of a transnational political movement (international communism). Many misunderstandings have emerged on this essential point in our country too. Indeed, some people believed that the United States could regard the PCI as unique, just as, they claimed, Italy is unique compared to the rest of the world (the Italian "case").

Last, there has been a failure fully to appreciate the fact that in the United States there is still a twofold interpretation of Italian affairs, due to the often distorting influence exerted by the political orientation of Italo-American circles as well as by broad strata of the U.S. Catholic Church. Consider Cardinal Spellman's role in the postwar period and the influence of certain members of the Italian establishment "sponsored" by Italo-Americans (from Lupis to Sindona).

It is within this same framework of relations, the same combination of pragmatic ruthlessness and ideological obsession that we must view the interruption of the hints of an opening-up which emerged in the first year (1977) of Carter's presidency and which some people interpreted as premonitory signs of a definitive thaw until the negative stance adopted by the administration on 12 January 1978.

One has to go back to 1943 and the immediate postwar period, when the values of "Americanism" were combined with realpolitik, to understand its significance. Anticommunism, the negative pole of a bipolar system of foreign relations and the postwar facet of Americanism, became the permanent connective tissues of foreign policy. It therefore acts as a background for the limited body of relations with the PCI.

Margiocco places great emphasis on this socialized political culture of the United States--and with reason. But this ideological America does not entirely reflect the complexity of the picture. If one attributes the entire weight of U.S. "political reasoning" to it, one would be underestimating the specific trait that foreign policy has always maintained with respect to domestic policy.

Relations with the PCI, bear witness to an autonomy on the part of the foreign policy community, that is the foreign policy officials, that found its most significant international expression in the unscrupulousness of Kissinger's lighning visit to China in 1979. The opportunity to establish contacts, albeit cautious and limited, with the PCI only occurred, however, when between 1969 and 1973 the subject of relations with the communist world became less a matter of negative faith and more a matter of foreign policy.

A similar process occurred, albeit in what were different times, when it was a matter of accepting (between 1968 and 1963) the Socialists in the government area. The history of U.S. consent for the formation of the center-left, meticulously reconstructed by Margiocco, well describes the intricate nature of the decision-making process of the State Department and other agencies, as already decided by others in the United States (Halperin, Campbell, Szanton [presumably Scranton] and Allison.)

The eternal hesitations, the mistrust, the declared objectives and the objections raised within the bureaucratic apparatus in a muffled trial of strength among groups and lobbies; in fact this all seems to establish a historical precedent for the way in which the first U.S.-PCI contacts later came about.

Symbolic occurrences such as the matter of the entry visas for the United States, the invitations to semiofficial meetings, the interviews and deliberate leaks subsequently denied, the formal notes and the ambiguity of the verbal and other signs; almost everything is reminiscent of a tried ritual procedure. But even the Americans' goal and the reason that made such a step possible are the same now as then. Only the certainty of putting the USSR (the other pole and the sole object of primary attention) in a disadvantageous position would justify the opening of permanent relations.

Indeed, there is a fixed rule in U.S. policy (as there is in Soviet policy) determined by the very structure of the international system. Every act by the superpowers must have the twofold aim of: A--impeding the strengthening of the other side; and B--facilitating its weakening, though still maintaining the overall balance of the system. Those, like Kissinger, who considered balance essential, as against advantage, preferred not to exert excessive pressure on the communist parties, both Western and Eastern bloc. Those like Brzezinski, however, who gave advantage the priority over balance were willing to take the risk, setting their sights on the European communist parties' pro-Western "evolution."

This explains why the Americans persist in assessing the PCI's "degree of maturity" on the basis of the comparison of our words and deeds with words and reactions originating from Moscow. The criterion of "measuring of distance" from the USSR still remains the yardstick used by Washington--this, while overlooking the substance of the PCI's political proposal as well as its democratic experience and the national roots of our culture, which are classified with the label "propaganda." Unfortunately "...the belief that the old Europe is corrupt and that the new world is pure..." still survives.

PCI, PSI SPOKESMEN ON LESSONS OF FRENCH ELECTION

PM061122 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 27 Jun 81 p 3

[Giampaolo Pansa round-table discussion with PCI Secretariat member Giorgio Napolitano and PSI Directorate member Claudio Martelli, carried on 26 June by Modula 81 Television network: "Berlinguer Go Home; Craxi Is Still With the DC"]

[Excerpt] Rome--Martelli: With regard to Berlinguer, I will come to the fundamental issue. Every leader represents a single policy and therefore a single political season. There are men for all seasons in democracies and in democratic parties.

I believe that Berlinguer believed in the historical compromise with great conviction and that he tried very vigorously to achieve it. I do not believe that he is equally convinced by the PCI's present policy of the democratic alternative. Therefore, I do not believe that he is making all the necessary efforts to achieve this objective, starting with a constructive dialogue with the Socialist Party. You see, Napolitano, Craxi is the leader of socialist fortification, renewal, autonomy and drive. Berlinguer is the leader of compromise with the DC. This is the problem.

Napolitano: I will answer you with two observations. First, it seems to me rather vague to describe the Craxi line as the policy of the drive and fortification of the PSI....

Martelli: Let us say renewal and autonomy, then. Or simply the autonomy of the PSI.

Napolitano: But you cannot deny that between the Turin and Palermo congresses your line underwent some spectacular changes of direction, some rather major modifications. So, if we were to submit the consistency of a secretary such as Craxi to a rigorous analysis, well....

[Pansa] What was the second observation that you had to make to Martelli?

Napolitano: I would like to say, for the sake of political and moral honesty, that I consider myself fully responsible with Berlinguer for the policy that we pursued from 1974 through 1979. So, if anything, the issue concerns the Communist leadership group as a whole. What I mean is that there is a PCI tradition (which is open to debate and which I believe should be debated without preconceptions)--a tradition of shared responsibility within leadership groups. This means that the reality is very different from and more complex than that portrayed in Martelli's argument. But I would like to return to the subject of the irritation felt by the Communist grass roots with the PSI.

[Pansa] What would you like to say about it?

Napolitano: I would like to say that we must combat and surmount it. Also, we must explain it in the light of certain options taken by the PSI. Let us be clear about this; neither the Palermo congress nor your recent policy has emphasized as the joint objective of the left, the need to create as soon as possible the conditions for both leftwing parties to participate in the country's government. On 21 June you received greater bargaining power with respect to the DC. But what is the goal of your policy?

[Pansa] Apart from that question, we could put the following one to Martelli: Mitterrand has brought four Communists into the government. You, however, are still keeping the PCI out. Is this so?

Martelli: As far as our goal is concerned, we stated it clearly both at Turin and at Palermo: It is the building of a democratic alternative to the DC, a secular, Socialist alternative, with Communist participation. We have been working toward it since before Turin. At the same time, in this legislative period, the last thing that can be said about us is that we have accepted a subordinate role to the Christian Democrats. On the contrary, the DC is feeling the effects of its cohabitation with us Socialists as never before, and more than it felt the effects of its cohabitation with the Communists during the national unity period.

Napolitano: But the DC still acts in a maudlin manner toward you, still lauding your "Western option" as against some ill-defined PCI line. In short, it is very much aiming to deepen the rift between you and us.

Martell: Of course, it is in the DC's interests to do so, and I believe it was Pertini himself who urged us--both you and us--not to squabble too much, lest a third party take advantage of it. Be that as it may, ever since, Turin, the PSI has remained faithful to its stance; relations with the DC based on cooperation, but also competition.

[Pansa] What about Mitterrand's Communist ministers?

Martell: We can talk about it without embarrassment, partly because we have never exerted any discrimination. That is not the point. The point is how to make the majority of Italians prefer a leftwing government. This requires from the PCI further steps forward in the international field. Let us look at the facts signed with lightning speed by the French Communists: They even embody a complete willingness to accept Euromissiles deployed in Europe to defend the Atlantic alliance. In short, Napolitano, your French comrades have accepted an objectively subordinate position to the Socialists who, let us not forget, won an absolute majority on their own.

PCI'S BOFFA ON LESSONS OF NEW FRENCH CABINET

PM011045 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 26 Jun 81 pp 1, 16

[Guiseppe Boffa commentary: "Left Should Read That Program"]

[Text] The aspect of the major political event that brought the Communists into the new government most overlooked by the Italian press--with certain praiseworthy exceptions--is the text of the program agreement signed by the Socialists and Communists. It is in fact a very valuable document, a binding statement which reflects considerable political intelligence. It seems to me that anyone convinced of the essential role due to the left in Europe cannot fail to welcome with interest and satisfaction this declaration of principles and guidelines, resulting from a covergence between the two major historical components of the French (but not only French) workers movement.

The basic concern that inspired the agreement is, according to an apt expression used by the French Communists in recent weeks, that "the change must succeed." It is a concern that takes the lesson of history into account: In the past France has already seen other famous government experiments in which the leftwing forces were jointly involved, which left lasting marks on the nation's life and awareness, but whose more general aims of social innovation were rapidly exhausted. This time there is a clear determination to avoid a repetition of the same phenomenon. The new leftwing government presents itself with the steadfast aim of changes, which is very promising but anything but easy. It is therefore extremely positive that all components of the left are approaching its implementation united and in solidarity.

The fact that Mitterrand deliberately chose this path, despite the torrent of self-interested solicitations, both domestic and foreign, for him to govern alone, with the strength of his secured parliamentary majority, is a demonstration of consistency and political lucidity on his part. It is the same demonstration that he provided within his own party when he managed to keep it united, despite the emergence of serious disagreements concerning the repeated temptations to abandon leftwing unity. Now, as a statesman, he is demonstrating equal farsightedness with regard to the combination of political forces which brought him to power and of which the Communists are, as everyone knows, a decisive part. Of course, we cannot conceal the fact--having never done so--that it would have been better had this agreement been reached much sooner (perhaps this might also have led to a different balance of forces within the left). But this is ot the time for recriminations; the very protagonists of the French agreement have wisely decided to set them aside.

The desire for change and realism are the two characteristics of the agreement signed by the two parties. This can be observed particularly with regard to domestic policy. But it applies equally to foreign policy. We believe that we can say this with all the more conviction inasmuch as we find in it on all the basic issues--the international blocs and imbalances, the missiles, Europe, Afghanistan, Poland, the Middle East, El Salvador and Nicaragua--the same theses which we Italian Communists have supported in so many official documents of our own party and in so many items in our own newspaper; we have done so in disagreement with our country's right (and sometimes, unfortunately, not only the right) and also in calm but steadfast polemic with other Communist parties, including the PCF (may we point out in connection with the missiles that defend positions similar to those contained in the Paris guidelines a year ago).

The text of the Communist-Socialist agreement very vigorously confirms and specifies the foreign policy which Mitterrand's top diplomatic experts had already outlined in recent weeks. Scrupulous fidelity to alliances, together with the confirmed determination not to upset world balances, is one of the lynchpins. But the other, no less important, lynchpin is--and as far as we are concerned this applies equally to Italy as to France--that a country must have a sovereign foreign policy, determined entirely independently on the basis of its own principles and interests, which it is its duty to defend. France's new leaders were very categorical on both these points. The very decision to make room for Communist ministers in the government, despite the all-too-evident U.S. pressures against it, was an eloquent confirmation of it. There is nothing vague about this determination. The guidelines announced in Paris can provide a driving stimulus to a constructive foreign policy.

It is noteworthy that the assertions concerning Afghanistan contained in the Paris document have already been applied in the proposals on the same issue drawn up by the EEC--proposals which, at least in the still unofficial form in which they are now known, seem to us valuable and therefore worthy of careful consideration by all the sides involved.

The new Paris government's stance is important above all as the expression of a major country like France. But it is also a sign of the slow yet continuous evolution of a new phenomenon in Europe. Along different paths, including movements of public opinion, political polemics and a growing concern over the Reagan administration's stances, which are still only partly reflected in governments' official statements, there is emerging a new will on the part of the European peoples and several of their political forces to be more autonomous in choosing their own future and to no longer be objects in the policies of other major powers. In this connection, some people, especially in Washington, are brandishing the specter of neutralism. But it is an artificial target. The new French leaders were clear on this point too. "Neutralism," no better defined, is no possible path for the European peoples. What is possible for them is to be autonomous protagonists on the world scene, especially in the decisions which concern them. This applies as much in the East as in the West.

There are therefore in the French events abundant reasons for careful and fruitful reflection on everyone's part. The experience being carried out by the Mitterrand presidency and the new government formed by Mauroy reflects an important political plan. We do not believe that its importance is understood by those who uses it solely as an argument for harking back to old counterpositions, old anathemas, petty formulas or alleged K factors [supposedly preculding Communist government participation].
What counts are the political ideas put forward by the French left. These ideas were very influential in opening the way to its accession to power and will be no less influential now in its good use of this same power. But the value of these ideas extends beyond France alone.

PRIME MINISTER BALSEMAO ADDRESSES NATION

LD040730 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 2023 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Address to nation by Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemao on 3 July--live]

[Excerpts] Tonight, only 6 months since the government took office, I want to assess with you the results of the recent past and outline the course of our future as a majority government for all Portuguese. Before I do this, however, I wish to express publicly to all Portuguese my gratitude for the civic spirit which, almost without exception, they have displayed over the past 6 months and for the work which they have done. I also want to say that I have good reasons to be pleased with the government's performance. In fact, only 6 months have passed and another 40 lie ahead for us to fulfill what we have promised. But in these 6 months, much has been done to fulfil the indespensible political blueprint of change in Portuguese structures.

What does it mean when one talks about change? It means, above all, a free civilian society, that is, to allow all Protuguese men and women to assess their potential abilities, to express their aspirations and to define in freedom the paths of the future. In other words, it is up to the government to build and promote the foundations without ever imposing a political dirigisme or centralizing state machinery and without ever allowing the concentration of means of production either in the hands of state monopolies or in private economic groups.

The freeing of civilian society is necessarily tied up with regionalization and strengthening of local power, but it is also tied up with dismantling vices inherited from Goncalvism [reference to procommunist Prime Minister Vasco Goncalves, 1975] and from the pathological revolutionism under which we lived for a certain, perhaps too lengthy, period. It also is tied up with the need to stop seeking to manage the crisis with the imitation of socialism which caused it in the first place. Only thus will it be possible to firmly modernize Portugal, based on permanent criteria of development and social justice. This is what we have been doing over the past 6 months and what we will keep on doing during our term of office.

The revision of the Constitution, which one hopes will not be delayed by mere crises or indecision in the area of the democratic opposition, is essential for the full democracy to which we aspire, without the tutelage of organs of sovereignty which have not been elected by the people.

With a view to change and as a living part of our national blueprint, the government has reaffirmed democratic authority, exerted whenever necessary, at the time of the strike--which were exclusively politically motivated--before and after 1 May, and also at the time of isolated acts of terrorism which are seeking, so far most unsuccessfully, to undermine the essence of the democratic state itself.

Consistent with the democratic policy of building a democratic state, we have reaffirmed once and for all the Atlantic and European vocation of Portugal and we have pursued foreign policy consistent with our destiny. This consistency implies firmness whenever necessary, as was the case in the incidents involving the Aeroflot airliner and the declaration of the Cuban ambassador as persona non grata by the government.

The European option is clear and undebatable, and because there is not alternative to our accession to the EEC, we take the view that we should not join the EEC at any price and are insisting on negotiating, with determiniation and firmness for the sake of national interests, on all aspects connected with out entrance into the Common Market.

Our commitments to NATO have been fulfilled and in this sphere, as well as in bilateral relations with our Atlantic allies, attention has been given to the need to reequip the Portuguese Armed Forces, thus preparing for their future integration and subordination to democratic civilian power, with full awareness that the government and the armed forces are increasingly identified with the goals they are pursuing, which is indeed easy to understand because they both have a national task to fulfil.

Regarding relations with Third World countries, there has been a veritable qualitative leap, translated into closer contacts with Angola, Mozambique, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau and Sao Tome and Principe. We have proceeded in a climate of openness and cordiality toward normalization of relations at all levels. Regarding the Arab countries, much progress also has been made. Evidence of this is the balance of my visit to the United Arab Emirates and Oman. All this is change, and change for democracy. All of this represents the building of a democratic state in keeping with the national blueprint which we are pursuing. All of this has been successfully achieved over the past 6 months.

However, great difficulties, lie ahead and I will have to mention some of them so that the Portuguese become fully acquainted with the problems facing the government. Since January this year, the U.S. dollar rose by 18 percent. In relations to the escudo, this means that the goods which we have to import cost, in escudo, 18 percent more. On the other hand, international interest rates are very high, which makes international borrowing much more difficult, makes external payments more expensive and leads to great domestic borrowing. The desired increase in exports is not taking place at the expected rate, particularly regarding our traditional European export markets.

We have had to and still have to import energy. And agricultural production this year will fall 5 to 10 percent. This means that we will have to import from abroad, because of the drought, about 25 million contos more than we expected at the beginning of this year. This situation is deeply worrying and implies--or rather, it has already implied--that we have had to review our initial economic growth targets. We will not be able to grow as fast as we wished.

To be honest, I must alert all Portuguese to the serious difficulties which we will be facing in the economic sphere in the next few months, as well as to the immediate sacrifices which will be required from all during this period.

It also will be necessary for all organs of sovereignty, without exceptions, to set an example, even if it is only a symbolic one, by showing that they understand the serious situation the country is going through and that they do not prevent the pursuit of a policy which was voted for by the Portuguese people, and which will have to be a policy of austerity so that we are able to maintain the purchasing power of all households and achieve growth for Portugal.

We have a parliamentary majority backing us and we are offering the Portuguese the invaluable political stability resulting therefrom. We know the goals we must reach in the next 4 years and we will not stop until we have achieved them. We are going to change Portugal in accordance with the democratic rules and in keeping with our promises, the promises which the majority of Portuguese wanted to chose through the ballot box.

Personally, I am absolutely confident of the support of all Portuguese and the government, a government which remains firm, cohesive and resolved to fulfil until the end and without hesitation its national mandate. We have hope and this hope is being turned by us into the certainty of a more just, more dignified and therefore happier future. The government is working to change Portugal.

CALVO-SOTELO ON FRENCH TIES, NATO, AUTONOMIES

PM061218 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Jul 81 p 6

[Our correspondent Thierry Maliniak interview in Madrid with Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo--date not given]

[Text] Madrid--[Calvo-Sotelo] "I think France and Spain must act in such a way as to given concrete form to their position as good neighbors and natural allies. And I continue to believe that Paris will support our entry into the Community unreservedly and without further preliminaries and will cooperate with us resolutely and without delay in the struggle against ETA [Basque Fatherland and Liberty] terrorism.

Analyzing French-Spanish bilateral relations, which have been difficult relations, which have been difficult in recent years, Calvo-Sotelo recalled his statements last February to the Spanish parliament at the time of his investiture: "What I said then remains valid." He stressed: "I referred to the technique of 'preliminaries' whereby France is delaying the negotiations for our entry into the EEC and, in particular, to French reluctance to take part in the common struggle against terrorism. That reluctance is incomprehensible and painful to us. But I maintain that we want to develop a new policy with France to overcome these difficulties."

On these two problems, "the ball is in France's court," Calvo-Sotelo asserted. "Our entry into the EEC is an essential element in the political plans of the new Spanish democracy. The greater our integration into the democracies of West Europe, the easier it will be to finally consolidate our democratic system.

Entry Into NATO

The Spanish prime minister regards French collaboration in the struggle against ETA as "vital." "I hardly need to stress that the extraditions we asked for, on which the French judicial authorities ruled in our favor, are a question of ethics and of principle for us. Spain would find it hard to understand why the institution of asylum should be used to protect those who now appear to be enemies of freedom and democracy."

We then referred to the fact that certain sectors of French public opinion hesitate to regard ETA's action as a case of "classical" terrorism in view of the apparent support which the most hardline Basque nationalists receive from a proportion of the region's population--support which was made clear in the latest elections. Can it be assumed that everything has been done to isolate these radical sectors politically?

"I cannot accept that way of formulating the problem." Calvo-Sotelo replied, "Since it implies a moral judgment on our democratic structure, our system of freedom and the extraordinary effort we have made in support of autonomy. Since 1976 there have been two parliamentary elections. Full amnesties have been granted, the death penalty has been withdrawn and the Basque country has been granted a degree of autonomy which is inconceivable on the other side of the Pyrenees. In Spain, nobody is persecuted for his ideas or for the actions he takes to bring about their democratic triumph. Only those who resort to violence, crime and terror are persecuted. We have also recognized the direct right of every Spanish citizen to appeal to the European Court of Human Rights."

Concerning Spain's entry into NATO, which he has unequivocally declared his support for but which gives rise to reservations among the socialist and communist opposition, Calvo-Sotelo specified: "The decision to join the North Atlantic treaty is in accordance with our global policy. Spain wants to become a full part of the Western world and thus move beyond the current framework of our bilateral relations with the United States in defense matters into a wider, multilateral framework.

"The present framework was bequeathed to us by the previous regime and it puts us in a disadvantageous position since we are de facto members of NATO without taking part in decisions which effect us."

Calvo-Sotelo went on: "A large majority of deputies and senators already support this option. The Communist Party openly opposes it. It is true. The socialists' attitude is less clear cut but the essential thing is that the government can count on a sufficient majority." That remark looks like a reply to the arguments of certain opposition circles, which claim a "special majority" on this issue. "I should also say," the prime minister added, "that I am pleased to have found an intelligent, resolute and welcoming attitude toward our joining NATO among our partners, both in France and in the other countries of the alliance."

Autonomies: Rationality and Firmness

In domestic policy, one of the most delicate problems now facing Spain is that of the autonomies. The government currently is engaged in an overall review of its actions in this sphere and certain autonomist political parties, in the Basque country and also in Catalonia, fear a switch into reverse gear, which would jeopardize their gains. "You cannot talk about the autonomies as if you were discussing a race, in terms of reverse gear or forward gear," Calvo-Sotelo asserted. "It is a question of organizing with firmness and in a new way the political life of one of Europe's oldest states, whose centralist tradition goes back to the 18th century and was, moreover, imported from the other side of the Pyrenees."

"In this sphere," our interviewee went on, "we are only just beginning to read the treatise on method. We are trying to apply rationality and firmness to the autonomies and those words have nothing to do with reverse gear or limitation. Rationality and firmness are only possible if the state remains strong. As for the regions which have already received autonomy, they have nothing to fear since their legal and constitutional status remains clearly defined."

Calvo-Sotelo touched cautiously on another difficult topic--that of the political future of the government party, the UCD (Union of the Democratic Center), which more than ever is torn by international struggles and some of whose deputies openly advocate enlargement or even replacement by a large-scale rightwing coalition for the elections planned for 1983. "The elections are a long way off," he stressed, "particularly for a country like ours, which appears to be suffering from political tachycardia. I believe that the UCD's original positions which led to its electoral victory in 1977 and 1979, remain valid. The UCD is in an excellent position at the center of the political chessboard--a position coveted by the parties to our left and to our right. And we will establish our electoral platform for 1983 on the basis of the political center."

We concluded the interview by referring to the problems posed by what is described in Madrid as the "effective powers," particularly the armed forces, which since the failed putsch of 23 February apparently, have carried some weight in the political decisionmaking process. "The Spanish political system is based on the law and the supremacy of the civil powers," Calvo-Sotelo asserts. "That principle is very clear, both in the texts and in the government's day-to-day actions. That doesn't prevent the person responsible for national defense from maintaining contacts with military circles so as to ascertain their viewpoints on the modernization of the armed forces and the precise definition of their constitutional role. This is an additional argument in favor of our Atlantic option."

KIPRIANOU SEES NEED FOR TURKISH ATTITUDE CHANGE

NC061040 Nicosia PUBLIC INFORMATION OFFICE in English 4 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The president of the republic, Mr Spiros Kiprianou, answering questions during the news conference he gave in Athens yesterday afternoon, said no specific plan had been put forward for a solution of the Cyprus problem. He added that various countries had shown an interest in strengthening the efforts of the UN secretary general to promote a solution of the problem. There is, he said, general consensus internationally that if progress is to be made in the intercommunal dialogue, the Turkish side must submit constructive proposals on the territorial aspect of the problem. Those interested in a solution to the Cyprus problem, he added, must bring pressure to bear on Ankara to radically change its attitude.

President Kiprianou then stressed that what was important was for the Turkish side to change its attitude on the Cyprus problem. We do not refuse to discuss proposals for a solution, but if there is no radical change in the Turkish attitude, no matter how many plans there will be and no matter where they may come from, they will have no result.

In answer to another question, President Kiprianou said it would be a grave mistake if the Turkish Cypriot side went ahead and declared an independent Turkish Cypriot state. Any such move, he clarified, would complicate the situation and would not benefit the Turkish side in any way. Mr Denktas, he added, must have been convinced by now that the majority of the Turkish Cypriots do not share his extremist positions on Cyprus. In any case, he said, our side is prepared to face any eventuality.

President Kiprianou then said that his talks with the Greek Government took into consideration the promise given by the Turkish Foreign Minister, Mr Turkmen, to the Greek foreign minister, Mr Mitsotakis--a similar promise was made in many directions--that by the end of July the Turkish side would submit meaningful proposals, particularly on the territorial issue.

In answer to a relevant question, President Kiprianou said that developments in the Middle East have always had repercussions on the Cyprus problem and, possibly, vice versa. There are similarities between the Lebanon problem and the Cyprus problem, and in both cases efforts are being made to impose partition. What I should like to stress, President Kiprianou went on, is that I hope that Lebanon's partition will be averted. A partitionist solution in Cyprus is inconceivable in any circumstances. The same applies to Lebanon.

Regarding his forthcoming visit to the Soviet Union, President Kiprianou said that the visit would take place in autumn and the exact date would be announced in the next few weeks. President Kiprianou stressed that he attaches particular importance to the visit, as it will provide an opportunity for further developing the friendly relations and cooperation already existing between the two countries in many fields. With the Soviet leadership, he said, I shall also discuss the Cyprus problem and other international issues.

Commenting on President Brezhnev's recent proposals, President Kiprianou described them as very constructive and as indicative of the Soviet Union's readiness for detente and progress within the framework of the Helsinki Final Act. I consider the proposals, he said, very constructive and the West should capitalize on them.

Replying to another question, President Kiprianou said that it would be a good thing if agreement could be reached between the two super powers on implementation of UN resolutions on Cyprus.

Answering yet another question, President Kiprianou said that evasive tactics on the part of the Turkish side, aimed at preventing debate of the Cyprus problem in the UN General Assembly, would not be allowed. Mr Kiprianou said that if Ankara wanted to solve the Cyprus problem, the results of the so-called elections in the occupied area of Cyprus would possibly make things easier for it.

AUSTRIA'S PAHR HAS CONFERENCE WITH ROLANDHIS

NC061455 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr, who is on a visit to Cyprus, today conferred with Cyprus Foreign Minister Rolandhis. The conference covered the Cyprus issue, international and European affairs and bipartite relations.

Speaking after the meeting, the Austrian foreign minister said he was happy to be informed that at present there is a possibility for overcoming the unfortunate situation in Cyprus, a section of which, he added, is under occupation by foreign troops. Pahr also said that recently he received simiar reports from UN Secretary General Waldheim. He expressed the hope that Turkey will truly submit realistic proposals toward the settlement of the territorial issue, which could be an important step toward solving the entire problem.

The Austrian foreign minister also said that during his talks with Rolandhis, the two sides agreed that closer cooperation between smaller countries, and particularly between neutral and nonaligned countries, has great importance in dealing with the difficult situation in the world today. This situation, he underlined, was created by increased trends toward the armament race and is characterized by a new trend toward a confrontation.

In his statement after the conference, Rolandhis mentioned that he explained recent developments in the Cyprus situation to Pahr and underlined that he considers Pahr's visit to Cyprus very important--at a time when the Cyprus issue is at a critical stage of development. He added that the Austrian foreign minister, being well known in international and European circles as a supporter of human rights, supported the efforts of the UN secretary general toward a just and permanent solution to the Cyprus problem, and also expressed his support toward Cyprus and its people.

RALLIS, PAPANDREOU EXCHANGE POLICY STATEMENTS

NC051935 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 5 Jul 81 p 13

[Text] Replying to a statement by the prime minister yesterday, PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou stressed that "Rallis remains exposed to the Greek people, history and nation as long as he does not reply to the grave question I have asked him."

In his statement, Rallis replied to the questions the PASOK chairman asked him a week ago and, in turn, asked Papandreou questions on his intended solutions to internal and external problems. The PASOK chairman referred the prime minister to an interview he gave to TO VIMA on 26 April where, as he stressed, "all these questions have been fully answered and Rallis fortunately still has time to read it."

The statement Rallis made yesterday is as follows: "We challenged A. Papandreou to appear in the Chamber to support the charges he made gainst the government. When we ascertained that he was avoiding the challenge, we afforded him the opportunity to recall his charges, but the PASOK chairman preferred to transfer the issue and attack us on our foreign policy.

"Although months ago he received replies to the questions he is asking, we shall come back so that the Greek people may not have any doubts concerning what exactly is happening.

"First: The limitation of the Limnos terminal area to 1,382 nautical miles facilitates national and international air navigation and is more than adequate for the comfortable operation of the airport as a civil and military airport. It also more than covers our operational needs and it does not create any problem in the country's defense.

"Second: The lowest altitudes of the air corridors of six airports have been raised. Also, the altitudes of part of another air corridor were amended and it was decided to use this part in accordance with the seasonal needs of air navigation. This settlement not only does not harm the Greek Air Force but facilitates its operation, because, as is natural, it is the Greek military planes that more than any others use the areas of the Aegean air space that are not covered by air corridors and these arrangements do not create the slightest problem for the country's defense readiness.

"Third: Air corridor R32 was extended and linked with air corridor B1. This extension was made according to the regulations and procedures of the international organization for civil aviation and the purpose was to facilitate the movement of planes from east to southwest. This arrangement serves the planes that follow this course, especially in conserving fuel.

"However, it should be particularly stressed that these arrangements were unilaterally decided upon by Greece and were not imposed on us. The purpose of the arrangements was to improve conditions for air navigation in the Athens Flight Information Region, that is, in the area of responsibility of the Greek authorities for air navigation which, as is the case in many other flight information regions, includes airspace that is not only Greek but also international.

"I specifically stress that in order to make the relevant decisions, the government fastidiously took care not to influence unfavorably Greece's defense capabilities or Greek operational needs and generally not to impinge on any of our country's rights. I again reiterate that all relevant decisions were made with the concurring opinion of the responsible people of the National Defense Ministry, the Foreign Ministry and the Civil Aviation Department. After this, it is superfluous for Papandreou to wonder about the national loss (sic) from these concessions to Turkey. The government has not made any concessions to Turkey, and the nation has not lost anything. On the contrary, Greece has gained, because its prestige has been enhanced internationally.

This is so because at its own initiative it brought about adjustments that facilitate international air navigation and enhance the security of flights in an area for which it has international responsibility.

"Papandreou has asked whether the government has abolished firing ranges of the Greek Armed Forces in the Aegean. The reply is that no firing range has been abolished. During technical Greek-Turkish talks, the two sides examined the possibility of abolishing only some dangerous areas (three Greek and three Turkish). The abolition of these areas, which will not have any unfavorable influence on our armed forces' defense capabilities and training needs, could be made on the basis of reciprocity and under certain prerequisites which, however, were not concurrent. Consequently, the exercise areas in the Aegean have not undergone any change whatsovever.

"It is not true that with the Rogers agreement and, more specifically, with the intended establishment of the Larisa headquarters, the Athens Flight Information Region boundaries in the east have ceased being identical with the boundaries of Greek operational control in the Aegean airspace as the PASOK chairman claims.

"The areas of responsibility of the Larisa Air Force headquarters--when it has been constituted--will coincide with the pre-1974 areas of responsibility of the Greek Air Force. The Rogers agreements explicitly recognize that the texts of the military committee are the basis for Greece's return to the NATO military wing, and all these relative documents are valid and determine the areas of responsibility of the Larisa headquarters.

"No part of the return agreement mentions--nor does it emerge from anywhere--that the commanders of the Larisa and Izmir headquarters should discuss a redefinition of the areas of responsibility, since these are defined in the NATO texts which constitute the basis for Greece's return [to NATO].

"The reply to the question 'what measures did the government take when during a recent NATO exercise in the Aegean the Greek Air Force's role from the Limnos airport was not recognized' is that the government has repeatedly declared and confirmed, both within the alliance's framework and outside it, Greece's legal and true position on the issue of Limnos' 'militarization'.

"Greece has stressed that on the basis of the Montreux Treaty, which abolished the Lausanne Treaty's provisions regarding demilitarization, it has defense installtions in Linmos which serve national security. It is an issue for the allied staff and it does not influence either the legal status of Limnos or Greece's defense interests whether NATO considers it expedient or not to use them during the exercises it plans.

"Finally, to the question 'how much did the government give, especially concerning the 1977 agreement that was initialed during negotiations with the United States for the bases,' the answer is categorical. Absolutely nothng was given to the United States. The negotiations concern the maintenance and, if possible, the improvement, to the benefit of Greek interests, of the conditions of operation of the bases envisaged in the initialed agreement of 1977.
